MacDonald added his slip for five thousand. Not one of them claimed the pot, and not one of them called the size of his hand. Simultaneously and in silence they faced their cards on the table, while a general tiptoeing and craning of necks took place among the onlookers. Daylight showed four queens and an ace; MacDonald four jacks and an ace, and Kearns four kings and a trey. Kearns reached forward with an encircling movement of his arm and drew the pot in to him, his arm shaking as he did so. Daylight picked the ace from his hand and tossed it over alongside MacDonald's ace, saying:

"That's what cheered me along, Mac. I knowed it was only kings that could beat me, and he had them.

"What did you-all have?" he asked, all interest, turning to Campbell.

"Straight flush of four, open at both ends—a good drawing hand."

"You bet! You could a' made a straight, a straight flush or a flush out of it."

"That's what I thought," Campbell said, sadly. "It cost me six thousand before I quit."

"I wisht you-all'd drawn," Daylight laughed. "Then I wouldn't a' caught that fourth queen. Now I've got to take Billy Rawlins' mail contract and mush for Dyea. What's the size of the killing, Jack?"

Kearns attempted to count the pot, but was too excited. Daylight drew it across to him, with firm fingers separating and stacking the markers and I. O. U.'s and with clear brain adding the sum.

"One hundred and twenty-seven thousand," he announced. "You-all can sell out now, Jack, and head for home."

The winner smiled and nodded, but seemed incapable of speech.

"Name your snake-juice, you-all—the winner pays!" Daylight called out loudly to all about him, at the same time rising from his chair and catching the Virgin by the arm. "Come on for a reel, you-all dancers. The night's young yet, and it's Helen Breakfast and the mail contract for me in the morning. Here, you-all Rawlins, you—I hereby do take over that same contract, and I start for salt water at nine a. m.—savvee? Come on, you-all! Where's that fiddler?"

CHAPTER II.

It was Daylight's night. He was the center and the head of the revel, unquenchably joyous, a contagion of fun. In between dances he paid over to Kearns the twenty thousand in dust and transferred to him his Moosehide claim. Likewise he arranged the taking over of Billy Rawlins' mail contract, and made his preparations for the start. He dispatched a messenger to rout out Kama, his dog-driver—a Tananaw Indian, far-wandered from his tribal home in the service of the invading whites. Kama entered the Tivoli, tall, lean, muscular, and furclad, the pick of his barbaric race and barbaric still, unshaken and unabashed by the revelers that rioted about him while Daylight gave his orders.

"Um," said Kama, tabbing his instructions on his fingers. "Get um letters from Rawlins. Load um on sled. Grub for Selkirk—you think um plenty dog-grub stop Selkirk?"

"Plenty dog-grub, Kama."

"Um. Bring sled this place nine um clock. Bring um snowshoes. No bring um tent. Mebbe bring um fly? um little fly?"

"No fly," Daylight answered decisively. We travel light—savvee? We carry plenty letters out, plenty letters back. You are strong man Plenty cold, plenty travel, all right."

"Sure all right," Kama muttered, with resignation. "Much cold, no care. Um ready nine um clock."

He turned on his moccasined heel and walked out, imperturbable, sphinx-like, neither giving nor receiving greetings nor looking to right or left. The Virgin led Daylight away into a corner.

"Higher'n a kite."

"I've eight thousand in Mac's safe—" she began.

But Daylight interrupted. The apron-string loomed near and he shied like an unbroken colt.

"It don't matter," he said. "Busted I came into the world, busted I go out, and I've been busted most of the time since I arrived. Come on; let's waltz."

"But, listen," she urged. "My money's doing nothing. I could lend it to you—a grub-stake," she added, hurriedly, at sight of the alarm in his face.

"Nobody grub-stakes me," was the answer. "I stake myself, and when I make a killing it's sure all mine. No thank you, old girl. Much obliged. I'll get my stake by running the mail out and in." With a sudden well-assumed ebullition of spirits he drew her toward the dancing-floor, and as they swung around and around in a waltz she pondered on the iron heart of the man who held her in his arms and resisted all her wiles.

At six the next morning, scorching with whisky, yet ever himself, he stood at the bar putting every man's hand down. The way of it was that two men faced each other across a corner, their right elbows resting on the bar, their right hands gripped together, while each strove to press the other's hand down. Man after man came against him, but no man put his hand down, even Olaf Henderson and French Louis failing despite their hugeness.

"The winner pays!" Daylight cried. "Surge along you-all! This way to the snake-room!"

"I'm busted higher'n a kite, and I'm hittin' the trail for Dyea—"

"Goin' out?" some one called.

A spasm of anger wrought on his face for a flashing instant, but in the next good humor was back again.

"I konw you-all are only pokin' fun asking such a question," he said with a smile. "Of course I ain't going out."

"I sure will. I first come over Chilcoot in '83. I went out over the Pass in a fall blizzard, with a rag of a shirt and a cup of raw flour. I got my grub-stake in Juneau that winter, and in the spring I went out over the Pass once more. And once more the famine drew me out. Next spring I went in again, and I swore then that I'd never come out till I made my stake. Well, I ain't made it, and here I am. And I ain't going out now. I get the mail and I come right back. I won't stop the night at Dyea. I'll hit up Chilcoot soon as I change the dogs and get the mail and grub. And so I swear once more. I'll never hit for the Outside till I make my pile. And I tell you-all, here and now, it's got to be an almighty big pile. I'll be real conservative, and put the bottom notch at a million. And for not an ounce less'n that will I go out of the country. I tell you-all I got a hunch. There's a big strike coming on the Yukon, and it's just about due. I don't mean no ornery Moosehide, Birch creek kind of a strike. I mean a real rip-snorter hair-raiser. Nothing can stop her, and she'll come up river. There's where you-all'll track my moccasins in the near future if you-all want to find me—somewhere in the country around Stewart river, Indian river and Klondike river. When I get back with the mail, I'll head that way so fast you-all won't see my trail for smoke. She's a-coming, fellows, gold from the grass roots down, a hundred dollars to the pan, and a stampede in from the Outside fifty thousand strong."

"If I was you, Daylight, I wouldn't mush today," Joe Hines counseled, coming in from consulting the spirit thermometer outside the door. "We're in for a good cold snap. It's sixty-two below now, and still goin' down. Better wait till she breaks."

Daylight laughed, and the old sourdoughs around him laughed.

"It's a thousand miles to Dyea," Bettles announced, climbing on the chair and supporting his swaying body by an arm passed around Daylight's neck. "It's a thousand miles, I'm saying, an' most of the train unbroke, but I bet any chechaquo—anything he wants—that Daylight makes Dyea in thirty days."

"That's an average of over thirty-three miles a day," Doc Watson warned, "and I've traveled some myself. A blizzard on Chilcoot would tie him up for a week."

"Yep," Bettles retorted, "an' Daylight'll do the second thousand back again on end in thirty days more, and I got five thousand dollars that says so, and damn the blizzards."

To emphasize his remarks, he pulled out a gold sack the size of a bologna sausage and thumped it down on the bar. Doc Watson thumped his own sack alongside.

"Hold on!" Daylight cried. "Bettles' right, and I want in on this. "I bet five hundred that sixty days from now I pull up at the Tivoli door with the Dyea mail."

Not What You Pay.

"It isn't what you pay for clothes that makes you well dressed," said Mrs. Knicker.

And Mrs. Bocker remarked: "No, indeed; it's what you owe."

WHY THE FARMER AND HIS FAMILY

SHOULD ATTEND THE INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION.

By CAPT. A. H. WADDELL.

There are so many reasons why the farmer and his family should attend the great International Live Stock Exposition at Chicago, that it is well and opportune at this time to mention some of them.

This great Exposition, the greatest indeed of all similar shows, is so apt to be viewed by the farmer, breeder, and stockman as merely a place where he should go to see the animals exhibited there, and for business purposes only. This is a very narrow view of so great and important a subject, for the animals seen at this Exposition, wonderful and extraordinary as they are, are but the results of years of labor on the great farms and ranges of the West, although they stand for the greatest and best of American breeding and feeding.

The great object of the founders of the International Live Stock Exposition, was to present to the breeders and farmers of this country, an object lesson of the highest ideals, and a school of instruction to which all could come and learn.

It goes without saying, that the men who have made this great institution possible, and the breeders and feeders and farmers who have made it what it is, are men of age and experience; and in order to perpetuate and improve this great school, and the methods through which it has gained its present day perfection, it is absolutely necessary that the sons of these men be permitted to see the show, and so start their lives of improvement from the advanced point at which their fathers stopped. This can never be realized by remaining on the farm and seeing only the stock their fathers raised; for every son is imbued with the idea that his father breeds the best there is, and consequently, is under the impression that the height of achievement has been attained on the home farm. Comparison is the only disillusionizer, and it is this above all things that the young man wants, not only to show him that there are hundreds as good as his father, and scores a great deal better. This opens the eyes of these young men and causes them to put on the wise cap of thought and consideration as to why, how and where their own fathers fell short in gaining what the fathers of their contemporaries accomplished.

Another thing that is sadly overlooked by the men who contribute to the Exposition with their stock is the fact that their wives, the heart and soul of their homes, and the faithful and constant companions of their lives, have done their generous share and contributed in no small degree to their husbands' successes. Faithfully and uncomplainingly have they devoted their useful lives to the duties of the home and the upbringing of their children, with the fostering care of motherhood. Uncomplainingly they live and abide in the environments of the ranch or farm, and day in and day out, from years end to years end, see nought of life in their sister world, save the occasional visit of a female friend. They tenderly prepare for their husbands' annual outgoing to the great International Show, and lovingly await his looked for return. It would be but the pulling of a little wider of the husband's purse to give to these admirable women a taste of the fascinations and enjoyments of a week's visit to a great city, as well as to experience the delight of seeing the exhibits passed upon in the judging ring. Such a trip, apart from the good the change would do them, would serve the purpose of intense enjoyment and interesting conversation on their return, and if we judge women aright, would instill into their sympathetic hearts a desire to still further assist in the future successes of their husbands.

The daughters, too, of these people, particularly those who have attained or are verging upon early womanhood, would be greatly improved by the sights and surroundings of a trip to Chicago and the International Show. Young minds are narrowed by a continuous residence among only those of their own lives and habits and upon such an occasion as this, fathers should expand still further the strings of their purses to enable these young women to see at least some little life, especially when under their own and their mother's care.

The delights of anticipation and the pleasures of accomplishment, are such inexpressible joys to youth that it is nothing short of inconsiderate selfishness to prevent such occasional enjoyment to these young people, particularly when it can be attained at such comparatively little outlay. The good that such trips accomplish is shown in a thousand ways and there is not a breeder, feeder or farmer in the whole of the great west who will not realize that the companionship of his wife and children to Chicago during the week of the International Live Stock Exposition, December 2 to 9, has not only been an inexpressible delight to himself, but a benefit to his home, his business and his future.

A Hunting Story.

An old backwoodsman that Agraham Lincoln often told of had very heavy, overhanging eyebrows, and wore big spectacles with brass rims. One day he came rushing into his cabin and seizing his rifle, aimed it carefully through a crack of the door at a great oak tree that stood near, and fired.

"What is it?" whispered his wife.

"A wildcat," Sairy," he said, excitedly, "an' I missed him!"

He hastily loaded and fired again, and then again.

"Now, hold on, Joshua," said his good wife. "Let me look at you, why, laws-a-daisy, it's nothin' but a little bug on one o' your eyebrows!"—Housekeeper.

Adam Bede on Pittsburg.

After telling how dearly he loved old Pittsburg and her fine old people, her rich people and her toilers, he said:

"I like Pittsburg because if I ever get tired of the town I can wash it off."

Legal Charges.

The Judge—You say you don't get your alimony?

The Complainant—I don't get it all, your honor. It's only five dollars a week; and I need every cent of it.

The Judge—And what is the reason you get only part of the amount?

The Complainant—It's because my former husband sends it to me by a lawyer; and the lawyer charges me car fare, brokerage, transportation and time—and that leaves only 90 cents.

Wanted to Be More Earnest.

Rev. Sylvester Horne, the Liberal M. P. from London, was talking about religion at a dinner in New York.

"Too many of us in our religious observances," he said, "are like a little Tottenham Court Road girl.

"'Oh, must I sleep in the dark?'

"'Yes, miss,' the nurse answered.

"'Then wait a minute,' said the little girl. 'I'll get up and say my prayers more carefully.'"

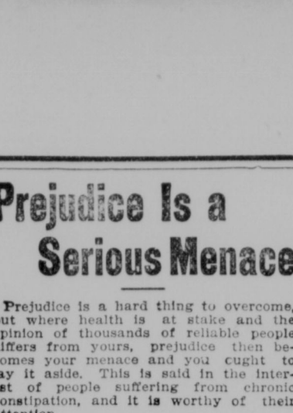
Prejudice Is a Serious Menace



Prejudice is a hard thing to overcome, but where health is at stake and the opinion of thousands of reliable people differs from yours, prejudice then becomes your menace and you ought to lay it aside. This is said in the interest of people suffering from chronic constipation, and it is worthy of their attention.

In the opinion of legions of reliable American people the most stubborn constipation imaginable can be cured by a brief use of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. You may not have heard of it before, but do not doubt its merits on that account, or because it has not been blatantly advertised. It has sold very successfully on word of mouth recommendation. Parents are giving it to their children today who were given it by their parents, and it has been truthfully said that more druggists use it personally in their families than any other laxative.

Letters recently received from Mr. Henry G. Voskamp, 7308 Decker Ave., Cleveland, Ohio, and Lydia R. Paulson, Jewett, Ohio, are but a few of thousands showing the esteem in which Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is held. It is mild, gentle, non-griping—not violent, like salts or cathartics. It cures gradually and pleasantly so that in time nature again does its own work without outside aid. Constipated people owe it to themselves to use this grand bowel specific.

Anyone wishing to make a trial of this remedy before buying it in the regular way of a druggist at fifty cents or one dollar a large bottle (family size) can have a sample bottle sent to the home free of charge by simply addressing Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 201 Washington St., Monticello, Ill. Your name and address on a postal card will do.

COLLECT ON DELIVERY.

His Honor Unimpaired.

"No," said the old shoemaker, sternly, "I will not do it. Never have I sold anything by false representations, and I will not begin now."

For a moment he was silent, and the shopman who stood before him could see that the better nature of his employer was fighting strongly for the right.

"No," said the old man again, "I will not do it. It is an inferior grade of shoe, and I will never pass if off as anything better. So just mark it 'A shoe fit for a queen,' and put it in the window. A queen, you know, does not have to do much walking."

Ready for More Sacrifice.

Frank McIntyre, after a recent performance of "Snobs," fell into a story-telling mood and recalled the vaccination of the six-year-old son of one of his friends. The boy was given 50 cents for undergoing the ordeal. The following day he said to his father:

"Daddy, isn't there anything else you can have done to me? I need the money."

The man who tries to taper off in sin will soon be in over his head again.

A BRAIN WORKER.
Must Have the Kind of Food That Nourishes Brain.

"I am a literary man whose nervous energy is a great part of my stock in trade, and ordinarily I have little patience with breakfast foods and the extravagant claims made of them. But I cannot withhold my acknowledgment of the debt that I owe to Grape-Nuts food.

"I discovered long ago that the very bulkiness of the ordinary diet was not calculated to give one a clear head, the power of sustained, accurate thinking. I always felt heavy and sluggish in mind as well as body after eating the ordinary meal, which diverted the blood from the brain to the digestive apparatus.

"I tried foods easy of digestion, but found them usually deficient in nutriment. I experimented with many breakfast foods and they, too, proved unsatisfactory, till I reached Grape-Nuts. And then the problem was solved.

"Grape-Nuts agreed with me perfectly from the beginning, satisfying my hunger and supplying the nutriment that so many other prepared foods lack.

"I had not been using it very long before I found that I was turning out an unusual quantity and quality of work. Continued use has demonstrated to my entire satisfaction that Grape-Nuts food contains the elements needed by the brain and nervous system of the hard working public writer." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

"There's a reason," and it is explained in the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

OUT OF THE ORDINARY

Pouch Cove, Newfoundland

Pouch Cove is a typical fishing village near the city of St. John's, Newfoundland. Practically all of the 230,000 inhabitants of the island are to be found in just such villages, of which there are 4,300 around the coast. When the codfish are brought in they are dried on such racks as those shown in the photograph. This work of "making the fish," as it is termed by the fisher folk, is performed largely by women, who carry the fish from the boats, spread them over the racks and kep turning them until they are thoroughly cured. The sheds are but storehouses for the fish when they are ready for market.

WARRIOR CHIEF OF CONGO

Down in the Congo, over which territory in Africa the French and Germans are disputing, the inhabitants have not taken kindly to the ways of civilization. Our illustration is a portrait of a warrior chieftain who has been unusually successful in following the native custom of letting the finger nails grow. These natives are armed with modern weapons and are desperate fighters.

SOMETHING OF A SLEEPER

The people who tell stories of sleeping through all the excitement when some calamity occurs in the house next door, will have to take their hats off to Thomas Sweeney, of Jersey City. He continued to sleep soundly when his own house collapsed under him.

Sweeney's house was a two-story structure, resting on piles. Some time after he, his wife and seven-year-old son had retired for the night, the piles wearied of sustaining their burdens any longer and let it slip off to the ground, seven feet below. Policemen heard the crash several blocks away and rushed to the building to give first aid to the injured. They found Mrs. Sweeney and the boy on the second floor trying to wake the master of the household. Sweeney yawned, shook the ruins of the plaster ceiling from his blankets and turned over to sleep again.

"Go on to bed," he remarked. "The place can't fall any further, can it?"

ELECTRICITY FROM STARS

Experiments conducted in Ireland, if they are to be trusted, reveal a distinct electromotive force exercised by the stars. Using a reflecting telescope of two feet aperture to concentrate the star rays, and sensitive electrometers to note their influence, the experimenter had reason to believe that they were able not only to detect, but to measure, the electromotive force of both stars and planets.

To Venus, for example, they ascribed a force of about seventeen one hundredths of a volt, and to Jupiter a force of at least three one-hundredths of a volt. In the case of Jupiter only a part of the planet's light fell upon the electrometer, so that the experimenters inferred that his entire electric influence must be much greater than that stated. Sirius, which appears to us as the brightest of the fixed stars, showed a force amounting to two one-hundredths of a volt.

RECORD FEAT IN BUILDING

What is declared to be a record feat was that recently accomplished in Waco, Tex. It consisted in the erection and equipment of a church capable of holding 350 worshipers in eight hours. The edifice in quistion, the Herring Avenue Methodist church, was commenced at eight o'clock one morning upon a vacant site and finished at five o'clock in the afternoon. Deducting the hour for luncheon, this means that a whole building was put up in eight hours.

Even the foundations, which are laid in cement, had not been previously prepared, grass still growing upon the site when the men began their momentous task. By ten o'clock, however, the foundations were secured and the working force increased by another thirty men, making an army of forty all told. Every man knew what was expected of him and there was no clash or hindrance. As the carpenters finished so the painters came upon the scene, and the moment they had completed their task they were followed by the electricians and the paperhangers.

By noon the entire frame was up the front steps and vestibule nearly finished, part of the floor laid, and the rafters were being put in place. At 12 o'clock the men ceased work for lunch and at one o'clock started in earnest again. The rafters and the roof boards were soon in place, when the roofers began to lay the rubberoid roofing. Twenty-eight men were engaged in this task, and at 4:30 it was finished. By this time, too, the floor and ceiling as well as the electric wiring were about finished while the painters were putting on the second coat. The paperhangers had also finished hanging the brown finish burlap dado and buttermilk-finish paper on canvas on the inside walls. By five o'clock the building was complete with the exception of equipping it with seats, this being the work of only a few minutes.

Promptly at 5:30 p. m. all the workmen were called to the front seats and a service held, and in the evening the edifice was dedicated by Rev. H. L. Munger. The church measures some 32 feet in width and 65 feet in length, including the vestibule, with a seating capacity of 350. The flooring is raised above the level of the ground.

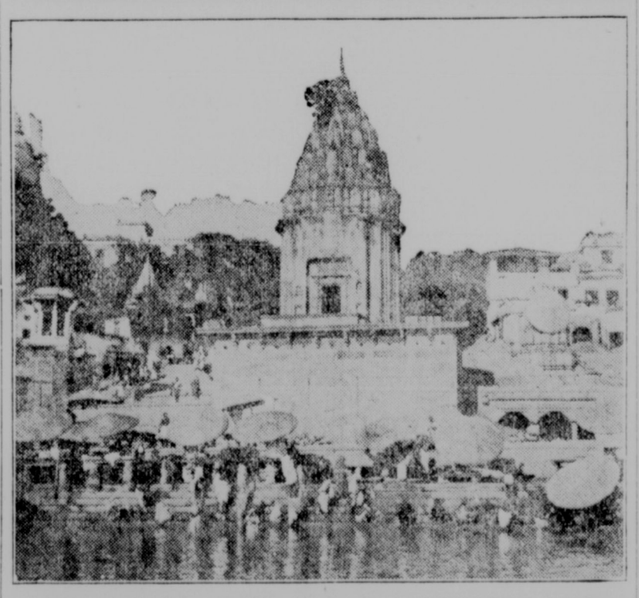
BEST BABY ALPINE CLIMBER.

The youngest Alpinist in the world is probably little Flavia Guidini, daughter of Dr. Joseph Guidini, of Turin, Italy. She is only four and a half years old, and her mother is an English woman. On September 4, accompanied by her parents, she performed what is believed to be an absolutely unprecedented feat for one of her years, successfully climbing several of the peaks of the Mont Blanc range.

First, on the previous day, she reached the Mont Frety but, 7,240 feet, making the ascent from Courmayeur. Then in six hours she climbed the Giant's Neck, 11,230 feet. There she rested a little while, and next, crossing the glacier of the Giant's Neck, reached the summit of the Petit Flambeau, 11,450 feet. The descent to Courmayeur was made in two days. So far as is known, no child of anything approaching her youthfulness has ever even attempted, much less successfully accomplished, any one of these climbs.

HEN THAT CHEWS ITS FOOD

Isaac Schantz of Bayonne, N. J., has a curiosity in a young Plymouth rock hen, which has a face resembling that of a human being. The hen was purchased by him for 39 cents. It has several teeth and chews its food, which is principally chopped meat. The hen has nails on its feet like those of a human being, and it refuses to mingle with Schantz's other chickens. The hen was hatched last spring, but its owner does not know where, as the man from whom he purchased it bought it along with several other ordinary fowls.



TOO TICKLISH FOR ARMY

Seized with a desire to be a soldier, Christian Johnson, an Ohio farmer of 22 years, went to Columbus to be enlisted. He looked good to the officers and all went well till it came time to measure him. Every time the officer's hand touched the young man he almost went into hysterics, laughing, squirming and giggling ad infinitum.

"What's the matter?" the officer asked.

"I'm so ticklish," was the answer, and it proved so true that it was impossible to complete the measurements, and he was sent back to the ancestral farm.

Washing Away Their Sins

Benares is the holy city of the Hindus, and in their traditions is believed to have been coeval with creation. Its three miles of frontage on the Ganges is occupied chiefly by great flights of steps or ghats where crowds of all classes spend the day in business, amusement or devotion. In the sacred river itself there are always throngs of pilgrims to be seen bathing to wash away their sins.

PHYSICIAN ADVISES CUTICURA REMEDIES

"Four years ago I had places break out on my wrist and on my shin which would itch and burn by spells, and scratching them would not seem to give any relief. When the trouble first began, my wrist and shin itched like poison. I would scratch those places until they would bleed before I could get any relief. Afterwards the places would scale over, and the flesh underneath would look red and feverish. Sometimes it would begin to itch until it would waken me from my sleep, and I would have to go through the scratching ordeal again.

Our physician pronounced it "dry eczema." I used an ointment which the doctor gave me, but it did no good. Then he advised me to try the Cuticura Remedies. As this trouble has been in our family for years, and is considered hereditary, I felt anxious to try to head it off. I got the Cuticura Soap, Ointment and Pills, and they seemed to be just what I needed.

"The disease was making great headway on my system until I got the Cuticura Remedies which have cleared my skin of the great pest. From the time the eczema healed four years ago, until now, I have never felt any of its pest, and I am thankful to the Cuticura Soap and Ointment which certainly cured me. I always use the Cuticura Soap for toilet, and I hope other sufferers from skin diseases will use the Cuticura Soap and Ointment." (Signed) Irven Hutchison, Three Rivers, Mich., Mar. 16, 1911. Although Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold by druggists and dealers everywhere, a sample of each, with 32-page book, will be mailed free on application to "Cuticura," Dept. 17 K, Boston.

The Merchant's First Quality Is "Ball-Band"

This of itself is a strong recommendation of "BALL-BAND" to you.

But stronger yet is the fact that more than eight million people wear "BALL-BAND," and will not be satisfied with anything else.

Many of these millions have worn "BALL-BAND" for years. Multitudes are added to this host of buyers every year.

One word explains the continued demand of the wearers for "BALL-BAND"—QUALITY.

"Ball-Band" Arctic

People don't come back a second time for an article that disappoints them. Eight million people are not deceived year after year by goods that lack merit.

All rubber footwear looks much the same to the purchaser. Only an expert can tell the difference in quality. We could save one million dollars a year in the manufacture of "BALL-BAND" by inferior compound and inferior workmanship. But such a saving would not build up and hold a patronage of eight million people.

"Ball-Band" 4-Buckle Arctic

Look for the RED BALL sign when you go to buy rubber footwear. Many dealers display these signs in their windows or store fronts for the guidance of the constantly increasing number who are asking about "BALL-BAND." Whether you see the sign or not, you are sure to find the RED BALL trade-mark on all "BALL-BAND" goods. Insist on seeing it. It is your protection.

If by any chance your dealer can't supply you, write us, mentioning his name, and we will see that you are fitted.

Mr. William Moody has entered a suit for damage in the Circuit Court of Allegany county against the Cumberland and Westernport Electric railway company for injuries sustained while being forcibly ejected from one of its cars while a passenger between Frostburg and Westernport. The contention between the passenger and conductor occurred, not on the refusal of the former to pay his fare, but how it should be paid between Frostburg and Lonaconing, whether in one fare as Moody contended or in three separate collections as is the rule of the company. He was picked up bodily by the conductor and motorman of the car and carried out and laid down by the side of the track. The night was very dark in the lonesome and out-of-the-way place and it was with great difficulty that he found his way to the next station where he boarded the next car. Mr Moody is 78 years old, a retired merchant, old and discrepit, and is compelled to use a cane and crutch on account of being a sufferer from rheumatism. We understand he has sued for $10,000 damages. The suit will come up in Cumberland at the January term of court. Mr. Sol. Prager is retained as counsel for Mr. Moody.

The remains of Master Clarence Robie, ten years old, who was drowned last Friday afternoon, by breaking through the ice while skating on the Potomac river, were brought to town on No. 2 on W. Md. R. R., on Sunday morning and taken to the home of his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. John Wolf. The funeral took place from the M. E. church in the afternoon at two o'clock, Rev. Snedegear conducting the services. Interment was made in the Bloomington cemetery.

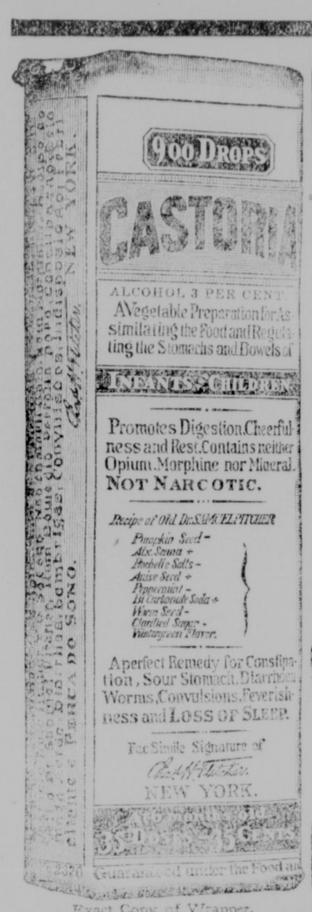
There is a case of diphtheria near our town. Anti-toxin has been administered and the patient is doing well.



Tests for Jurors.

Probably every reader knows one or more persons of wide culture and sound judgment who are notoriously bad spellers. At times it seems as if the art of spelling correctly were a natural gift rather than an attainment. It is curious, therefore, that correct spelling should be considered an essential qualification for jury duty. Yet that is the view of counsel who are examining candidates for the jury which is to try the meat packers in Chicago. Several citizens summoned for examination were asked to spell and define the following words: Irrelevant, elimination, excessive, presumption, credibility, untrammeled, interstate.

It is quite possible that some of the prospective jurors knew the meaning but not the orthography of those test words. All of this in support of the contention that bad spelling is not necessarily a proof of general ignorance.

Mr. McWilliams Better.

Mr. R. W. McWilliams, formerly of Grafton, but now clerk of the circuit court of Cabell county, with headquarters at Huntington, whose illness was reported in the Sentinel last week, is very much improved, according to the latest advices from his home. A DIREFUL CALAMITY

To the Editor of The Republican:

The night after Christmas, the evening of December 26, 1811, the most appalling disaster known to that time in the United States, occurred in the city of Richmond. The very flower of the social and civil life of the city gathered in the theatre fronting on Broad street close to the beautiful grounds of the capitol. A packed house, from the fashion and culture of a metropolis noted even then for the beauty of its ladies and the tone of its gentlemen, was there in joyful anticipation of an entertainment most pleasing to witness. Raymond, it is said, was the attractive star bright in the theatrical firmament that fated evening, and he was greeted by an audience well calculated to inspire pride in an actor even as accustomed as was he to the stamping of feet and the clapping of hands before the foot-lights.

The play was in progress and attention centered on the stage, walked by a master of the boards, when light flakes of fire were seen drifting from the upper walls. At first this was mistaken as a part of stage trumpery and not until Raymond disappeared beyond the curtain did a reality of the pending danger dawn upon any mind, Alarm broke and spread with lightning rapidity. The excited throng, in hopeless confusion, stampeded and swayed as a solid body to the imperfect place of exit, struggling to pass the blocked and narrow way between life and death. Had reason been permitted even for a moment to serve her functions escape would have been possible to all. It is said the door opened to the inside and that the mighty crowd, frantic with fright, fell like a cohesive weight against the closed door and that after exhausting appeals for relaxation, those about the barred entrance drew their knives and cut into the bodies of many, hoping to force a fall back, but those distant in the rear were pressing like mad men, making relief impossible. Many threw themselves to certain death through the windows as the one escape from the roaring fire.

Under one of the windows stood a negro blacksmith of powerful statue with an approximation of super-human strength, catching many in his powerful arms and so breaking the fall as to save their lives. This hero in the dreadful drama was Gilbert Hunt, who lived to ripe old age full of honors and died not many years back revered by all and loved by many in the city of Richmond.

Among the victims, numbering seventy-two, was the governor of Virginia, a bride and groom, with many of the fairest and noblest who have ever lent distinction to that beautiful city of the South.

This black cloud rose high in the national sky, casting a gloom over every quarter of the land. Way up in New England states called extra sessions of their legislatures and adopted resolutions of sympathy with proffers of aid for Virginia so sorely smitten in the season of glad tidings to the Christian world.

Now a problem invited the best thought of the state. A blackened spot with its shudder of an unbearable memory was in the heart of the city. The spot might be eradicated but the memory written by the hand of fate was there to live. How was it to be dealt with was the bitter problem asking solution. With this object in view a representative and influential committee was formed with Chief Justice John Marshall, whose virtues and learning lent an imperishable lustre to the high tribunal over which he presided so long, was the chairman. It was decided to erect over the ruins of the great fire a church to be known as the "Monumental Church," with an ample stone urn as a fit receptacle for the ashes of the dead by that fire, and to stand close to the front entrance of the sacred edifice. Judge Marshall was a member and vestryman of the Protestant Episcopal church and in that faith the old "Monumental Church" continues as a place of worship, with the urn still standing as a grim reminder to generations of such a chastening as God but seldom visits even upon an offending people.

But, we should never cease to remember that beyond the cloud, however dense, a silver ray is hidden. Has the cloud so cleared from our mortal vision in this dark sorrow as to disclose that ray? Statistics gathered in recent years show that more Bishops have gone from this one church than from any other church in the Virginia diocese.

Strange to relate that after a lapse of sixty years from the date of the occurrences above stated, after Richmond had so widely extended her borders, after every acre of soil for miles in all directions had echoed to the foot-fall of great armies in a devastating war of four years at the cost of a million of lives and three and a half billions in dollars, just across Broad street from the "Monumental Church," an over crowded gallery in the State Capitol went down upon the crowded floor of the House of Representatives, crushing that floor burdened with human beings to the basement and killing within three or four of the same number killed by the burning of the theatre one hundred years ago. RELLIM.

Will Be Mild Winter.

A weather prophet in Southern Pennsylvania makes the prediction that this will be a mild winter, his weather insight being furnished by the action of fishworms, which have already begun to come to the surface, proving conclusively, it is said, that no severe weather is to follow. Farmers in the vicinity of Waynesboro are now swearing by the earth borer and have cast aside the old goose-bone and other weather prognostigators.

As winter officially commenced only two weeks ago, perhaps it would be better to wait just a few days before becoming firmly convinced,

To Abandon Office But Not Law.

The Light of The World

By Rev. Stephen Paulson

TEXT—And the Lord went before them by day in a pillar of cloud to lead them the way; and by night in a pillar of fire to give them light.—Exodus 13:12.

First I want you to see the connection between these two widely separated texts. The one is from the account of the journey or Israel through the trackless wilderness; the second, Jesus spoke centuries later, as he was present at the feast of tabernacles in Jerusalem. The first verse describes the customary way in olden times, of leading large bodies of men on the march, whether caravans or armies. A tall pole was erected at the head of the marching column, on which was hung a basket of fire. The glare of the fire was visible from every part of the camp at night, and in the daytime the column or pillar of smoke guided the movements of the host. The only difference in the case of the Israelites was that the Lord was in the fire, and that he controlled and guided the movements of the people. In the time of Jesus the Jews were wont to commemorate at the feast of the tabernacles, the time when they were wanderers in the desert, and God made provision for their sustenance and safety. They lit large lamps or torches around the temple to symbolize the pillar of fire, and then gave themselves up to dancing and revelry.

As Jesus stood in the temple area and looked over the people, he saw that they needed guidance even more than they did in the desert, and that they needed light now just as much as they needed the pillar of fire of old. These lights about the temple were merely reminders of past mercy, and possibly many of the people had even forgotten their significance; but here was he, the Guide of all lives. Here was he, the Light of all ages. So he speaks, "I am the Light of the world." These words come down to us out of the old Hebrew temple, and they pierce the center of our modern life.

"I am the "Light of the world." When the sun rose this morning, it found the world here in darkness. It was torpid, heavy with sleep, its powers were all wrapped up in sluggishness. The sun found the great world sleeping and woke it. It called to the dull birds and they sang their matins; it sent its light over the fields and painted them in colors beyond the power of any artist to imitate; it touched the flowers, and they opened their petals to the glory of a new morning; its rays entered the houses, and men awoke and began to move about their daily duties. It was an awakening, an energizing, a renewal of life, this morning's sunrise.

Even so it was when the Light of the world rose upon mankind. It meant an awakening, new energy, a renewal of life. No one can tell all that it meant when Jesus came into the world, for his coming had a thousand meanings, it had ten thousand influences which we are too dull to appreciate and too short-sighted to observe. But we know that when the Light of the world came it meant a new era in history, and we know that when Jesus comes into the human heart it means a new era in that man's life. Let us note one or two applications which these texts point out to us:

God's people of old were not led by a road already mapped out. The route was not chosen before they started. But step by step and day by day they were led, and God chose the route. Is not Jesus the great Leader of his people, and we have learnt a chief article of human wisdom if we have learnt to leave tomorrow to him. Step by step he leads us. The way may be dark and hidden from us, but it is all light and plain to him, for he is the light.

As the pillar of fire was given to guide the host of Israel of old, so is Jesus the pillar of light which guides the church today. Yes, he stands today in the midst of the host, majestic, dominating the centuries, leading the church as the great army of God.

One evidence that the Light of the world is directing the movements is that the whole church is becoming awake to its duties and opportunities. The light of the morning wakes not only one class of men, but all far and near. So the Light of the world is sending his rays today into all hearts. Great movements are sweeping over America today among the men of the churches. They are realizing the folly of their own lethargy and indifference, and are waking to the new morning and a new day's work. The housewives have been astir long since. Woman's devotion to her Lord, and her self sacrificing labors, have been one of the glories of the Christian church from the beginning. And now the Master is marshaling the men to the front.

White Slavery.

Let us rouse the church of God by turning on the light of knowledge, s that all good men may unite in devising ways and means for saving the misguided and degraded at our own doors, instead of expending our time money and energy in trying to convert the so-called heathen in foreign lands. —Rev. F. W. Miller, Universalist, Woodlawn, Ill.

DEATH RATE IN PNEUMONIA

That Among Persons Addicted to Alcohol Is Extremely High—Patients Lack Resisting Power.

A physician treating a man suffering from acute pneumonia fears and fights against two things: One, the actual poisoning of the patient by the toxins of the pneumonia germs; the other, failure of the heart. If the patient dies one alone, or both, of the above factors are responsible. The poisoning, as indicated by the fever, the delirium, the frequent pulse, and the rapid breathing, results from the growth and activity of these germs, and the recovery and well-being of the patient depends on the counter-activity of the leucocytes and the plasma of the blood by which are produced the antibodies, which, in their truth, nullify and counteract the virulent poison. When this is accomplished the crisis occurs and the danger is practically over. The development of the crisis is, therefore, dependent on the protective mechanism, about which we have been speaking, and which is rendered less efficient by alcohol.

The death rate among alcoholics attacked by pneumonia is extremely high, ranging between 60 per cent. and 70 per cent., and it is probable that one cause of this terrible mortality is the lack of resisting power which characterizes such patients.

The second possibility dreaded by the doctor in a case of pneumonia is heart failure. Picture to yourselves what is happening—one lung solid, entailing greatly increased work on the heart, the fever damaging the muscular fibers, and the defective respiration augmenting the difficulties against which the heart is struggling.

In such a fight every handicap is serious, for sometimes even the healthiest heart is unequal to the task; much more likely to give way is a heart whose muscle fibers have been deteriorating slowly and insidiously for years. Such a heart, when compelled to cope with the stress of an acute pneumonia, dilates and fails, and death occurs, because the heart was insufficient to the strain.—Prof. Laitinen Scientific Temperance Journal.

CHINAMAN IN SHARP REBUKE

Mongolian Was Quick to Observe the Inconsistencies of a Woman Professing Christianity.

Those who come to our shores from heathen lands are quick to see the inconsistencies of professing Christians. A story is told of a Chinaman who applied for a position as house servant with a family which belonged to a fashionable church. Among the inquiries proposed by the mistress of the house were the following:

"Do you drink whisky?"

"No, I Clistian man."

"Do you play cards?"

"No, I Clistian man."

He was given the position, and he proved to be a very capable servant. After a time the lady gave a bridge party, with wine accompaniments. The Chinaman did his part during the evening acceptably, but the next morning he said to his mistress:

"I want quit."

"Why? What is the matter?"

"I Clistian man. I told you so before. I no work for 'Melican heathen!"

It is useless to pray for the heathen at our doors, so long as we do the things that are inconsistent with the Christian profession.—Onward.

ALCOHOL THE GREAT ENEMY

Word of Warning Worth Heeding by Misguided Advocates of "True" Temperance Among Children.

Noting the attempts of some advocates of the drink traffic in England to establish there the German beer garden and continental cafe, as a better environment for social and family drinking, Dr. Hercod of Lausanne, the eminent Swiss statistician, has this to say of continental alcoholism: "It seems difficult for one who knows the facts to pretend that the German beer garden is the temple of peace which some of its advocates in England believe it to be. . . . It would be a very foolish policy for England to try to import the drinking customs which all social reformers on the continent are earnestly endeavoring to discourage. . . . All who know the situation, not only in Switzerland, but on the continent as a whole, can only say: "It is only too true; alcoholism is our great enemy." This word of warning is worth heeding by the misguided advocates of "true" temperance, who would have children taught "to drink strong drink moderately amid refined surroundings."

Beer Drinking Decreases.

The consumption of beer is steadily decreasing in Germany, for the number of "bierhalle," which in 1906 had gone up to 6,035, had in 1909 diminished to 4,768. The decrease per each inhabitant is calculated at about four litres and a half each year.

Much less malt being also employed in the manufacture of the Teuton's favorite beverage, it becomes lighter, and consequently more harmless. This change in the national habit will doubtless produce its effect on the national character, which will probably gain in brightness and activity. —The Queen.

FOR WOMAN WHO EMBROIDERS

Book for Holding Various Colored Silks Is Always a Most Welcome Gift.

An inexpensive gift for the woman who sews or embroiders is a book made of stiff cardboard backs, four by ten inches, and covered with heavy silk or an art linen in dull colors.

Embroider across the upper face the word "Silk." Run this in a diagonal direction and put a little spray of flowers around it.

On the back cover work the recipient's monogram or her three initials in a corded outline.

Inside the covers are a dozen manila envelopes, arranged with the flap to the outer edge of the book, that are destined to hold as many colors of silk. The mark and number of the silk is to be marked on the outside of the envelopes. Three holes are cut through the covers and also in the envelopes; ribbon is run through these holes and tied at the back in small bows.

TWO SMART COSTUMES.

On the left is a smart evening wrap of black velvet and white satin. The right-hand figure depicts a dress to wear with the cloak, of ivory and rose pink crepe de chine and tulle, embroidered in silver.

Net Blouses.

After a lapse of a season or two net blouses have been revived once more, this time it is Paris who calls them back into favor once more and some of the recently arrived French blouses have been of sheer nets.

In keeping with the present vogue, these new blouses frequently show wide, frilly, fluffy side ruffles, which may be of the same net as the blouse proper, or of colored net or chiffon.

Usually they are rather simply in style, however, with a daring touch of color, a band of black satin, a vivid tie or some little touch to distinguish them. And though many of them are made from sheer nets, chiefly Brussels, others are of fancy nets or beautiful laces.

PUTTING ON THE TRIMMINGS

Girl of Slender Purse Need Not Go Without a Touch That Would "Make" New Frock.

The girl of slender purse who is attracted by the graceful imported garnitures of beaded fringe shown on some of the most attractive gowns of the present season need not feel it obligatory on her either to be extravagant or to go without the touch that would "make" her new frock.

Beads in themselves are not relatively expense, and with a well chosen assortment of these and a few long needlefuls of silk either to match or contrast with that of the ground work a plain silken fringe may be transformed into one that need be no imitation of any shown on the latest importations, but may, rather, have the far more desirable quality of original beauty in its devising.

The best method of attaching these somewhat fragile and elusive "dangles" is to knot the threading silk firmly, first in the heading of the fringe, then, at the proper distance, around the bead, and again in the heading with another knot, so that each bead (or set of beads, if more than one is desired on each loop) is entirely secure, both in itself and as regards its neighbors.

Silence Is Golden.

It is to be regretted that among the dozen and one unnecessary things which the modern girl is taught, some deep-thinking person has not added to the list that most necessary thing for a girl to learn, the art of silence.

Silence is a tremendous power in this day of talkative women. Besides it is infinitely nicer to have some depth which every passing acquaintance has not sounded. The girl who confides to you the story of her past flirtations and the secret hope her heart is set upon the second day of your acquaintance will soon bore you, if she does not actually disgust you.

There is no subject in the world that cannot be discussed with propriety with the right persons and under the right conditions. But few girls seem to possess the eye of discrimination for these two facts. On the contrary, they frequently seem rather to pride themselves on discussing the wrong subject with the wrong person.

Baby Linen.

Fill the boiler half full of cold water, put in a tablespoonful of borax. Put the little garments into the water and let the water gradually come to a boil.

After allowing it to boil 15 or 20 minutes, drain off the water, then, one at a time, put each piece through a warm soapsuds, sousing well and rubbing gently.

If there are spots on the garments or if the necks and wrists are badly soiled, rub with an extra supply of soap, and give these pieces special attention.

Never use a washboard for fine cambrics or muslins.

After taking the garments from the suds, rinse in two waters, lukewarm, and then in blueing water.

After wringing carefully from the blueing, hang in the sun, where the wind will not blow hard upon them.

Washed Corduroy.

Corduroy may not be the easiest thing in the waorld to wash because it is so heavy, but it certainly emerges from its bath fresh and new-looking to a degree most unexpected by those to whom the process is a new and untried one

Sickened the Owl.

"I love you, darling, more than you love me," sighed the swain.

"Ah, that is impossible, precious," she whispered back, "for I love you better than you do me!"

WORKS WITHOUT FAITH

"While a coffee drinker I was a sufferer from indigestion and intensely painful nervous headaches, from childhood.

"Seven years ago my health gave out entirely. I grew so weak that the exertion of walking, if only a few feet, made it necessary for me to lie down. My friends thought I was marked for consumption—weak, thin and pale.

"I realized the danger I was in and tried faithfully to get relief from medicines, till, at last, after having employed all kinds of drugs, the doctor acknowledged that he did not believe it was in his power to cure me.

"While in this condition a friend induced me to quit coffee and try Postum, and I did so without the least hope that it would do me any good. I did not like it at first, but when it was properly made I found it was a most delicious and refreshing beverage. I am especially fond of it served at dinner ice-cold, with cream.

"In a month's time I began to improve, and in a few weeks my indigestion ceased to trouble me, and my headache stopped entirely. I am so perfectly well now that I do not look like the same person, and I have so gained in flesh that I am 15 pounds heavier than ever before.

"This is what Postum has done for me. I still use it and shall always do so." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

"There's a reason," and it is explained in the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

A CHRISTMAS ALIAS

By C.N. AND A.M. WILLIAMSON

COPYRIGHT BY W.G. CHAPMAN

OUTSIDE the little station at Cava del Tirreni, three days before Christmas, a crowd of interpreters, porters, hotel touts and cabmen were awaiting the arrival of the quick train from Naples. As it drew up in the station and the first travelers made their appearance at the exit there rose a Babel of voices. Conspicuous among the vehicles in waiting was a smart English-looking four-in-hand, driven by a handsome, aquiline-faced young man, so dark of skin that he might well have passed for an Italian. At the heads of the impatient horses stood an impassive English groom.

Young Lord Belever, who was driving his own coach, scanned eagerly, from under the brim of his smart bowler, the persons who came crowding out of the station. His eyes lighted with pleasure as a girl appeared in the doorway, followed by an older lady, and two porters, carrying luggage and wraps. A dash of Parisian smartness in the lines of the well-cut traveling dress and the perfectly fitting boots, a more than Anglo-Saxon frankness and independence of carriage, announced the girl as an American.

A driver bent down from the box of his carriage, and, in answer to a question from the young lady, in elementary Italian, demanded 14 francs for the drive to Amalfi.

"But 'Baedeker' says the tariff is five or six," expostulated the girl. Her Italian was fluent, if the grammar was a little shaky. Lord Belever, from his high box-seat, heard every word.

The girl bit her lip. She thought she was being cheated and that made her angry.

"Perhaps we had better take him and have done with it, dear," suggested the elder lady. "It doesn't matter much, you know. There are not many carriages left. If we bargain too long we may get none."

"Mamma," exclaimed the beauty, "I hate to be cheated!"

She looked around, and catching sight of Belever's pawing, glossy bays, her pleased eyes traveled in one glance up to the box-seat, where the young man sat looking eagerly down on her.

"Why, mamma," exclaimed the girl, "if there isn't a perfectly lovely coach, and I believe the man wants to drive us!"

"It's sure to be more than the cab, dear."

"How much to drive us to Amalfi?" cried the girl.

"Five francs each, ladies," was the prompt answer in good Italian, the language in which the coachman had been addressed.

"Bene," came the quick reply, and the girl signed to the porters to put the bags and wraps inside the coach.

The groom, hiding a grin, ran with a ladder; the elder lady mounted to a place behind the driver, the beauty climbing to the box-seat. With a flick of the long whip the bays dashed forward.

"I call this too glorious for words!" The beauty's cheeks were tinged with carmine, brought there by the tingling sea air that blew up the ravine; her eyes sparkled. "Aren't we in luck, mamma, to have got seats in this splendid coach, and with such a driver, too? See how well he handles the reins! And his profile looks as if he were cast in bronze."

"Take care, Lesley! Are you sure he doesn't understand you, dear?"

"Oh, that's all right! Very few of these Italian drivers know more than two or three words of English."

Then the girl began to talk Italian to the coachman and he answered her in the same tongue, fluently and courteously. Belever could speak Italian nearly as well as his own language and Lesley's knowledge was not deep enough to detect his few slips. He felt guilty, but dared not betray his nationality, lest the ladies should insist on being put down at the next village.

"Well, mamma," cried Lesley, turning in her place, "we've had a splendid time in Europe, haven't we? We've seen and done such a lot of things. But I believe I like Italy best of all. Of course, Egypt was gorgeous and Greece was lovely—"

"And England—" prompted the mother.

"England was sweet. But it was disappointing in one way. Only fancy our not meeting one single, solitary, real, live lord. I shall be ashamed to go home. My country expected it of me. And—I failed. Such a shame we should have missed Lord Belever! When I brought three new dresses on purpose, too!"

Belever started. This was a nice scrape he had got himself into. But he didn't see any way out of it now. He could not suddenly exclaim, "Behold, I am Lord Belever!" He had seldom been more uncomfortable; but the worst of it was that he found himself base enough to snatch a fearful joy from the situation.

"I dare say he would have been most uninteresting when you came to know him," the girl's mother proceeded to console her.

"But the Dering-Lacys said he was awfully clever and good-looking, don't you remember? I was so looking forward to our one country-house visit in England; and, of course, it was very nice, but it did seem an anticlimax when the very man I'd been invited to flirt with never turned up at all. Oh, what he missed!" and she laughed.

Belever could cheerfully have kicked himself. To think that he might have met this divine creature in a decent, self-respecting manner, if only he hadn't sent an unworthy excuse to those good but dull people, the Dering-Lacys.

Through inquiries he had learned at the Bristol that the ladies were Mrs. and Miss Fleetwood, but somehow he had failed to associate the name with that of the American heiress with whom the Dering-Lacys had tried to tempt him a few weeks ago. And in his blindness he had rejoiced in the thought of meeting the girl at Amalfi, whither he had ascertained from the hotel porter that they were going, and whither he had already purposed driving in his coach, which had lately won honors in the coaching meet at Naples.

It Was She!

These desperate reflections drove the hitherto loquacious coachman into an abstracted silence. He answered vaguely the questions with which Lesley did not cease to ply the "perfectly lovely coachman with the bronze profile." He was actually relieved when he stopped his horses at the foot of the long flight of steps that wound up the cliff to the Hotel Cappuccini.

His mind was in a tumult. He, too, was due at the Cappuccini, where his room was engaged; but now he hesitated to go and claim it and to appear in his own person before the American ladies. The craven thought came into his mind that he should run away; then he half resolved to declare himself at once. He had been unable to decide upon a course of action when the ladies prepared to descend from the coach. Then he overheard Lesley whisper to her mother: "He's been so nice and intelligent, don't you think we might give him a couple of francs for himself?" Before he could speak, the girl had placed 12 francs in his hand, wishing him a smiling goodby.

Belever hesitated. To speak, or not to speak—which was wiser in the mind of man? But he found himself maintaining his part by uttering a deferential "Molte grazie, signorina."

Belever turned his smoking team, and walked them back to their stable in the town, where he left coach and horses in the hands of his groom. Strolling slowly back to the Cappuccini steps, his courage suddenly returned to him. He would face the music, brave out the situation and trust to his own tact and the ladies' sense of humor to save the position. One thing only was impossible—to give up the adventure and see the girl no more. He mounted the many steps, received a warm welcome from the handsome and effusive Italian landlord, and in the visitors' book set a firm, clear "Belever, England," immediately under the clever, characteristic writing in which Lesley had inscribed the names of "Mrs. and Miss Fleetwood, New York, U. S. A."

Until the gong clashed out the hour of dinner Belever kept his room, writing letters, slowly changing into his evening clothes, stopping every now and then to lean upon his window-ledge and gaze out upon the incomparable beauty of Amalfi. He was among the earliest persons in the long, vaulted dining-room, once the refectory of the Capuchins, and a word in the ear, and a coin in the hand of the head-waiter, procured him a place next to Miss Fleetwood. This arranged, he retired a little and mingled with the throng of Germans, English, French and Americans who were trooping in to dinner. In a moment or two he saw Mrs. Fleetwood and her daughter coming in from the reading-room, Lesley in a simple but charming white evening dress, shining, in his eyes, among the other women, like a flower among weeds.

When the two ladies were seated Belever grasped his courage in both hands and, with a thumping heart, took the vacant place by Lesley's side. The girl looked up. Her eyes widened with wonder as she gave him a quick, surprised glance; then a gleam of merriment flashed into her face, and a rich, warm blush reddened her cheeks, tinging even the shell-like ear. Belever saw, with infinite relief, that the first encounter was to be decided in his favor. He smiled and bowed, looking very handsome in his evening dress.

"I hope," he ventured, "that you are not tired after your drive."

Mrs. Fleetwood was looking at him across her daughter.

"Is it possible—?" she had begun.

"I'm afraid it is, mamma," Lesley cut in mischievously. "Somewhere there's been a very big mistake. Whether it's our fault or this gentleman's, I don't know."

"Let me take all the blame," said Belever, hastily, "if blame there be, for letting myself appear to be what I am not. It was hard to withstand the temptation of having two ladies as companions on the drive."

"And I—made personal remarks, and gave you two francs for yourself!" Lesley threw up her two little hands in horror.

"It was the sincerest compliment I ever received," said Belever. "I shall always keep the coin in recollection of the pleasantest drive of my life." He was wonderfully happy again by this time.

"And that was really your own coach and you are not an Italian?"

"I am as little Italian as you are. I drive my coach for my own pleasure about th coast. I have rented one of those old watch towers which we passed on the way and am having it furnished and fitted up for me now. It would give me great pleasure if you and your mother will take tea with me there one afternoon."

"That would be delightful," Lesley exclaimed; but her forehead had a little, thoughtful pucker and she spoke abstractedly. Belever feared that she was trying to recall the things she had said in English to her mother in the course of the drive, and to keep her from a reflection that might be dangerous to himself, he dashed into conversation.

"By the way," Lesley was saying, "we saw in the visitors' book that Lord Belever is in the hotel. He seems to have arrived to-day, for his name is just under ours. Do you happen to know him?"

Lesley had glanced curiously as she spoke along the row of diners lingering over their nuts, and now she turned full to her companion. In spite of himself he flushed scarlet. He was beginning a stammering reply, when the look on the girl's face checked his words. The truth had flashed into her understanding like a lightning stroke and she was enduring bitter mortification when she remembered how freely she had spoken of him in his own hearing. Her face first crimsoned, then froze into icy haughtiness. Belever looked at her beseechingly and would have spoken had she not stopped him with a gesture. She murmured something to her mother, both ladies rose, and, turning their backs on Belever, without a word or sign, they joined the crowd moving from the room.

The lamps in the long, white house were nearly all extinguished when at last Belever went to bed, but not to sleep. As soon as it was light next morning, he was dressed and out, and, taking a small boat on the beach, he pulled out beyond the tiny pier that forms the harbor of Amalfi. Resting on his oars, he looked up to the quaint, white hotel.

Suddenly a window was thrown open and a graceful figure, dressed in some loose, white morning wrapper, stepped out on the balcony. It was she! Belever's heart beat fast as he looked up at the girl he had loved at first sight standing with one little hand shading her eyes from the sun, drinking in the beauty of the scene. Presently she looked down, as it seemed, into his very eyes. He thought she recognized him, for with an impatient movement she hastily went in, closing the window after her.

Dejectedly Belever rowed ashore and mounted the long flights of steps to the hotel. He thought of packing up his things at once and finding another lodging until his own place should be ready for habitation; but a certain obstinacy in his nature held him from his course. After all, was he so much to blame? Had he done a thing too bad for forgiveness? If he frankly apologized to the ladies, ought they not to forget his impulsive error of taste and receive him again on a footing of friendship? He determined to seize the first opportunity for an explanation.

He had not long to wait, for as he was passing down the long corridor on his way to the salle-a-manger for breakfast a door opened in front of him and Lesley herself appeared.

"Miss Fleetwood—" He had begun appealingly, when she turned on him a look so full of resentment that the words died on his lips. She passed him with a hardening of the dainty features and her pretty chin in the air. Belever fell back, biting his lip. For the next two or three hours he wandered wretchedly about the ancient town and presently found himself again at the little port, where he began to talk with one of the Italian masons employed on the works for strengthening the pier. Suddenly this man broke off in an explanation he was giving of the means by which they transported and sunk the heavy blocks of concrete and raised a warning finger. With startled eyes he was looking up at the great cliff that rose above the harbor.

"Did you hear that, signore?" he asked in an awed whisper. "It is the mountain working. That is the third time since breakfast I have heard it crack and strain. At six this morning the Hotel Santa Caterina cracked."

"Good heavens! Do you mean that the cliff will fall?"

"I think there is great danger, signore. We have had a fortnight's rain, and the building of the Hotel Santa Caterina there has weakened the base of the mountain. I shall go and call the syndic."

Far above him Belever could see that many persons had come out of the Hotel Cappuccini and were assembled on the terrace looking toward the overhanging part of the mountain. He recognized the flowing whiskers of old Signor Vozzi, the landlord, and could see the white aprons and the bright dresses of the servants mingling with the darker costumes of the hotel guests. Then, on the terrace to the left of the house, beyond the cloisters, just under the grotto, he detected a gleam of poppy color, and, starting hard, he recognized Lesley Fleetwood, walking slowly up and down, all unconscious of the danger that threatened her.

With a shout, Belever started for the grotto. It was approached by a long flight of steps which turned two or three times until they reached the terrace of the grotto.

The girl looked up suddenly, and her face flushed. She turned from him impatiently.

"Miss Fleetwood, there is great danger; the mountain will fall," he cried excitedly. "You must come at once."

"Must!" repeated the girl, with a surprised lifting of the eyebrows.

"This is no time for ceremony," he answered; "the peril is near. Your mother and everyone has run out from the hotel."

"Are you afraid?" She looked at him half mockingly, half disdainfully.

"I am afraid for you. I entreat you to come at once!"

"Thank you. I prefer to stay where I am, and to be alone."

With this there came from above a shower of loose stone and dust that poured from the edge of the cliff over their heads.

"You see!" he cried. "My witness."

"Nonsense!" said Lesley, sharply. "A servant told me those stalactites and things always fall after rain. Pray lose no time in saving yourself from the terrible danger!"

Down came another stone. There was a strange sound, mysterious, indescribable, that came from the mountain. It was as if a giant imprisoned inside were stirring cautiously.

The man and the girl looked into each other's eyes, defiance in hers, pleading in his. But suddenly a hot wave seemed to rush through Belever's veins. With a wild shout from below ringing in his ears, he caught the girl in his arms as if she had been a child. The mountain groaned. Belever sprang from under the arch of the grotto and, as if that fettered giant grudged the loss of his prey, there came a great roaring, which filled the air and confused the young man's senses. With a tremendous crash, a huge mass of rock plunged down from the foot of the grotto upon the very spot where, an instant ago, the two had stood, smashing into fragments the concrete pavement of the platform. The ground shook under Belever's feet; the earth seemed to quake as if it were turned to a jelly. Deafened, half blind, unable to think, he still ran on, Lesley quiet as death against his shoulder.

Running down the few steps toward the hotel, which lay below the grotto in the rock, he reached the cloisters. Something seemed compelling him to look up. The whole mountain appeared to be falling. In the midst of a rushing mass from above three human figures detached themselves, shooting downward, limp as dolls made of rags, yet dignified into supremest tragedy.

"A few seconds and we shall be like that," were the words that flashed through Belever's brain. Still though he was hopeless now, instinct made him run on—on for dear life.

Hardly had the thought of what might come printed itself before his eyes, when the whole great, overhanging mass of cliff broke away and fell headlong.

Now they were in the chapel. It was like a dream to be there. The soft dusk, the peace, the faint suggestion of incense, the lighted candles—in honor of the Christmas season—on the altar, and dotted about among the quaint little oriental figures of the "crib," or "presciplo," all seemed unreal, a mirage of peace in the presence of great danger. The rushing noise, like an advancing tidal wave, grew louder. From the doorway through which he had just come Belever could see what was happening. He saw a huge flying boulder strike the roof of the hotel, crush it in, and break away the wall beneath, as if the solid, ancient structure, which had weathered the storms of 800 years, had been a house of cards, set up by the hands of a child.

For a moment he believed that the whole building would go, and the girl he loved with it. But he heard the thunder of the landslide as it swept down to the sea, engulfing the Santa Caterina as it went and throwing a towering wall of water that rushed in upon the beach. Then a great silence fell, broken only by the far-away shouting of human voices sounding strangely small and feeble after nature's savage uproar. Nothing more happened. They were saved.

Lesley had clung to him speechless, almost breathless, and Belever had clasped her tightly, hardly knowing how tightly. But now he gently released her. As he did so, she fell away from him, half fainting, and he caught her again, with his arm round her waist.

"For heaven's sake, tell me that you're not hurt—that no stone struck you as we came," he stammered.

"No," she whispered, for all strength was gone from her, and she could not speak aloud. "No—but you—there's a streak of blood on your forehead. Oh, how can I ever forgive myself? You might have been killed. It was all—all my fault. I was a wretch. You ought to have gone and left me."

"I'd rather have been killed than do that," said Belever. He had forgotten to let her go. She had forgotten to draw herself away, and so they still stood together, these two enemies, she leaning slightly against him, he with his arm round her waist.

"Oh, why do you say that?" she faltered. "I was so obstinate—so wicked. I deserved anything. I wonder you cared."

"But, you see, I loved you," said Belever, quite simply. "If the end had to come I wanted it to come for me, too." It did not seem in the least strange that he should be telling her this, though she had never seen him until yesterday and had refused to speak to him this morning. They had known each other always, now, and they could never go back to being strangers again.

She did not answer, or even appear surprised; but, when her eyes left his they wandered all about the chapel, thinking how beautiful it looked and how sacred it seemed and how good it was to be there.

"I hope—" she began; but what she hoped Belever was not to know, for a pale woman appeared at the door leading into the chapel from the hotel opposite the entrance from the cloisters, and, at the sight of the two figures standing together in the jeweled twilight broke into sobs.

"Lesley—thank heaven!" she ejaculated. "I've searched everywhere for you. They tried to keep me from coming back to the house, but I would."

Lesley ran to her mother. "He saved my life," she said.

The elder woman held out both her hands to him.

"How can I thank you?" she cried.

"By forgiving me—if you will." He spoke to her, but he looked at Lesley.

"We start newly from this moment," said the girl. Her eyes were wonderfully soft and sweet in the chapel's dusk, jeweled by the candle lights.

"Come away quickly," implored her mother. "Who knows yet if it is safe even here? It has all been so sudden, so horrible. I saw everything from the terrace—the peasants falling over the cliff from above, the fishing boats crushed—oh, I shall dream of it always. Signore Vozzi says, even if all is well after this, every one must leave the hotel as soon as we can get our things together. Do come!"

She turned toward the door again, drawing Lesley with her. Belever followed and at the door Lesley turned back. He hardly dared to believe that he had read aright what her eyes said.

W. L. DOUGLAS' TRUST PLAN

Manufacturer Thinks Government Should Obtain Publicity by a License System.

Large business organizations have come to stay. We cannot go back to old conditions. We must meet world competition. Large concerns can produce goods at lower cost than small ones. Germany favors large corporations. The method of the present national administration is to dissolve the great organizations and make them smaller, which is a backward step. There should be no limit to a corporation doing a large and legitimate business, such as would be possible under the licensing plan which I favor, writes W. L. Douglas, former governor of Massachusetts, in the Boston Herald.

Prejudices against corporations merely because they are big, perhaps, must be done away with. They give labor better returns. They cheapen product and thus benefit the consumer. They give opportunities to small investors who get returns otherwise unattainable. They employ able young men who have no capital at all, but who receive handsome salaries for their ability and service.

In place of the Sherman law it is my opinion there should be a department at Washington to grant licenses to all manufacturers and corporations in this country who do an interstate commerce business.

The law should be made so clear, plain and definite that it could not be misunderstood. It should require all capital to be paid in full. Semi-yearly statements should be given to the public and certified by a public accountant. There should be a board of examiners in each state to look after these corporations just as our national banks are watched by the national government. They should have the right to enter the offices and examine the records of all the directorates of these companies.

Naive Optimists.

"Six months ago there was another outburst of optimism as naive as though the world were still living in the sentimental era of glass exhibitions. Since then there has opened another era of political earthquakes and conflagrations, and the era of disturbance continues to extend. Before the Tripoli problem has been safely liquidated or the peace of the Balkans is assured, we have the outburst in China of an insurrection which may change the face of the far east and give an incalculable increase of force to all the impulses set moving by the triumph of Japan. All we can be certain of in the region of world politics is that nothing is certain. Do we need further lessons to convince us that the peace of civilization is founded upon the crust of a volcano?" asks the London Observer.

Didn't Go to Finish.

"I found 50 cents this morning," confided Jimmy.

"Found a whole half dollar!" cried his mother. "How fine! What did you do with it?"

"Pete Jones was along, so I gave him half."

"You dear, generous boy! Did you do that of your own accord?"

"Yessum—well, we decided that would be right."

"Jimmy! He didn't whip you and make you give up half?"

"No, mamma. If he'd licked me, he'd 'a' had it all. The scrap was a draw."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

DANGERS OF LEAP YEAR.

Leap year is a period of much danger to all men, but especially, it seems, for widowers and bachelors. The latter are simple-minded to a degree and are at a great disadvantage in meeting an aggressive charmer. Their gallantry and politeness prevent their resisting advances. If the fair one holds the bachelor's hand and caresses it, what can he do? He can't jerk it away as a girl might do—that would be discourteous. If she essays to kiss him, he cannot scream or give her a backhander across the face or rush away in high dudgeon—that would be unmanly and unchivalric He must submit It is a nice point whether he should reciprocate the fair one's acts of fondness in case he feels "it is so sudden," or is apathetic or is already engaged to some one else or is positive he "can never be hers." If he acts the coy maiden, receiving demonstrations of ardent affection with icy nonchalance, he must feel that he is lacking in courtesy. His manly heart naturally goes out in reciprocatory cordialty to the whole sex, and to be coldly repellent is foreign to his nature. If, on the other hand, he yields to his sense of what is due to the ladies and politely smiles upon their suit, meeting them halfway in acts of tenderness, he cannot escape the risk of being thought a base trifler with the holiest sentiments of a woman's heart.

The bachelor's position is clearly an embarrassing one in the years divisible by four. It is to him a new position. He lacks the elusive arts by which the ladies skilfully repel the advances their charms provoke. The aggresive role he understands, but the defensive puzzles him. His dilemma is that he must either seem to be a bear or seem to be an euthusiastic lover, whereas, in fact, he is neither, but only a meek, inoffensive man who is unprepared for the awful risks of matrimony and trembles at the thought of it. Best safety in such cases, it is said, lies in flight. The man must either reciprocate advances with ardent enthusiasm and bend his neck to the noose or flee. Happy the bachelor who is so situated that he can at any moment seize his suitcase and flee to the uttermost parts of the earth. —Baltimore Sun.

NO OCCASION FOR HASTE IN NAMING TAFT DELEGATES.

The Republican party in Maryland should avoid the suspicion that it is so fully under the control of Federal office-holders that Washington needs but press the button to have done what it wants done.

On the surface there seems little opposition here to sending a delegation to Chicago in favor of President Taft's renomination. If a fight should result, there would hardly be a chance to defeat the organization. But that is not a reason for blazoning to the world that the party here is merely a tailpiece of whatever Federal Administration dispenses patronage.

A convention pulled off early in the year with the purpose of demonstrating that Maryland is in the Taft bandwagon and in the hope that the President would gain prestige from this sort of support would not have the anticipated effect. It would merely be said that the administration had corralled delegates by aid of Federal office-holders. The declaration in his favor would carry about as much weight in the circumstances as if South Carolina or Texas had done the same thing.

As there is nothing to be gained by departing from the regular order, the sensible thing to do is to settle the question at the right time, and when action will not be viewed as a sort of snap proceeding, carried out with the idea of impressing the public with the President's strength.—Baltimore News.

GOOD ROADS.

There is a great deal of talk these days about good roads. The subject has been discussed in public meetings, in private "confabs," and has even entered politics—and politics is just the place where a plain business proposition such as this should not be. Of course it is right and pertinent for the Legislature to consider and provide for the building of good roads throughout the state; and this it has done. Several millions of dollars have been appropriated for the betterment of the public highways. It is also proper that a commission of competent men should be appointed to see that the work is well performed and the money properly expended. The whole people of the state in the end pay for these improvements. But in the hands of honest, efficient, business-like men there should be no question as to the successful accomplishment of the undertaking. The cost of material and labor for a given length of road is easily ascertainable, and the character of the subsoil at places known without much difficulty. The process of excellent road making is not something new, and there are those who have been engaged in it long enough to profit by their experience and get satisfactory results. The trouble is due largely to the fact that for years the mending of our roads has been looked upon as one of the political perquisites of party; and it is hard to get rid of the idea. Scores of men in each county have been given employment therein for no other purpose than to hold them in line for future political work and the roads received only half attention. The application of the ordinary principles which pertain to the conduct of any well regulated business is what the people desire to see adopted in our public road building; and they will be satisfied with nothing less.

The funeral took place Monday morning with services at St. Ann's Catholic church near New Germany; interment in St. Ann's cemetery.

DAVID SLABAUGH.

David Slabaugh, one of the oldest and best known residents of Garrett county, died at his home near Gortner Monday and was buried yesterday at the Union church cemetery at Gortner. Mr. Slabaugh is survived by his widow and a number of children.

MARGARET GRIFFIN.

Miss Margaret Griffin, aged thirty-five years, died at her home in Deer Park yesterday morning after a brief illness. Her funeral will occur tomorrow from St. Peter's Catholic church in Oakland.

NATHANIEL HART.

It becomes our sad duty to chronicle the departure of one who lived and labored among us for many years and who has gone to his reward. On the second day of May, 1833, Nathaniel Hart was born into the world; on the twenty-eighth day of December, 1911, he left the world for his reward on high. He left behind him a wife and a host of friends to mourn his departure. We do not grieve as those who have no hope, but the rather rejoice that the faithful servant of the Lord has finished his course and has been received up. As a young man he was wild and dissipated. He married a noble young christian woman who prayed for his salvation. One night he was returning home from a convivial party he saw through a window of his home his wife on her knees. He stopped to hear what she was saying. As he listened he heard these words: Oh Lord, save my husband! The prayer had its effect and the Lord saved him. He felt immediately that he must preach the gospel and for seven years he preached everywhere he could find an audience before he united with any church. His reason for not uniting with a church was that he could not find one which came up to his standard of the New Testament pattern. As he was talking to a Methodist minister about his views on baptism the minister told him that the Baptist church taught what he believed, so, after investigation he united with that church and for more than a half century was a faithful teacher of the Word. He was the first of his faith to preach in many parts of the mountains of Pennsylvania, West Virginia and Maryland. He organized and built many churches which are now strong and flourishing. Space will not permit to tell of his kindness to the widows and orphans and others in distress, but like his Master, he went everywhere doing good and has now received his crowd. His funeral was conducted by his pastor, C. W. Hudson, in the Baptist church at Loch Lynn and he was buried at Oakland. His friend of many years, Rev. J. G. McIndoe, assisted in the services. He fought a good fight, he finished his course, he kept the faith. C. W. H.

Married.

MURPHY—WARNICK.—Mr. Ernest W. Murphy, of Frostburg, and Miss Lois Pearl Warnick, of New Germany, were married Sunday, Dec. 24th, at the parsonage of the Salem Reformed church by the pastor, Rev. Geo. E. Metzer.

PORTER—LITTMAN—At the home of the bride's parents in Oakland on last Thursday night, a very pretty wedding took place when Miss Sue Littman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Littman, became the bride of Mr. Harry Porter, son of Mr. and Mrs. George T. Porter, of near Oakland. Rev. Dr. A. B. Riker performed the ceremony. The bride was very becomingly attired in a gown of silk and carried bride's roses. Aside from the immediate friends of the family those present included members of the choir of St. Paul's M. E. church, of which organization the bride was a valued member. The couple are residing in Fairmont, W. Va., where Mr. Porter is a civil engineer.

Improvements Completed.

A very neat and much needed improvement looking to the safety and convenience of handling county funds at the office of the County Treasurer in the new court house, was completed a few days ago when a handsomely equipped hardwood counter, surmounted by glass and brass fret work, was placed in position in the office.

Mine Weighmaster Killed.

Clifton Currence, of Thomas, W. Va., 40 years old, weighmaster at Mine No. 25 of the Davis Coal & Coke Company, near Childs Station on the Davis branch of the Western Maryland Railway, was found cut in two along the track. He had been run down by a late passenger train. No one knew of the accident until the decapitated body was found. He is survived by his wife and four children.

The public schools throughout the county opened Tuesday morning after the Christmas holidays. Owing to the illness of Capt. R. R. Sanner, principal, who suffered a slight attack of illness Monday afternoon, and Miss Browning, one of the assistants, who was ill several days, the scholars of those departments were dismissed until yesterday morning, when both instructors, having recovered, were present.

Dr. John E. Legge, who has been in Oakland since his return from Europe, left here Tuesday morning for Cumberland, where he has secured offices and will locate permanently for the practice of his profession. As was said in these columns some weeks ago Dr. Legge is one of the best equipped general practictioners in this portion of the state and goes into his new field with the best wishes of a large circle of friends for unbounded success.

The third of a series of flinch parties by the club formed some weeks ago by the ladies and gentlemen of Oakland, was held Monday night of this week in the club rooms at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Herman Creutzburg when twenty-four were present and at which the hostesses were Mrs. James Willison, Mrs. Creutzburg and Mrs. Benj. Sincell. The decorations were white and red, and the refreshments consisted of Neapolitan ice cream, cake and coffee.

BLAIR WOULD BE CONGRESSMAN

Montgomery County Friends Plan Hot Fight for Nomination.

Gist Blair, of Montgomery county, is an avowed aspirant for the Republican Congressional nomination in this district to succeed Representative David J. Lewis, and his friends are already at work planning to put up a vigorous fight in his behalf.

Blair sought the nomination two years ago, but was defeated by Brainard H. Warner, Jr. In that contest Blair beat Warner in four of the five counties of the district, but the tremendous vote rolled up for Warner in Frederick county more than wiped out the advantage in favor of Blair in the other counties. It is understood that Warner will not be a candidate for nomination this time.

Davis Steel Ranges.

The popularity of the DAVIS STEEL RANGE is constantly increasing. During the last twelve months the firm has placed one hundred Ranges, mostly to home trade, and are now putting it on the market, through the general stove dealers, shipping direct from the factory.

Their patent grate and liners have proven to be beyond question the most durable made. During the past five years, they have not furnished $5 worth of repairs, and some of the stoves have had hard use.

Mr. C. S. Davis, the patentee, has added some more new and valuable improvements, in connection with those they already have, using an over draught to the firebox, through round holes, that are placed in front of the liners, near the top, thus forming what you might term a hotblast firebox, that takes less fuel, burns up the gases, has a much better combustion, and adds materially to the life of the firebox.

This led to further experiments, and it was found that ventilated lids over the firebox could be used. By making the lids full of round holes, thus adding a downward draught to the fire, surrounding the firebox with cold air draught, from all four sides, enabling the user to always see the condition of the fire, without taking the lids off, and to cook on top of the ventilated lids instead of over the fire, with the lids off. The improvement is not only a novelty but practical.

Drawings have already been made by the patentee's attorneys for these new features, and practical demonstrations can be seen at any time, at the Davis Hardware Store of a full line of Ranges, with all the late improvements, that they are offering at prices from $28.50 to $45.00, according to size, style and finish.

The Davis combination Gas and Coal Range has been completed, and for simplicity of construction, completeness, convenience and durability is in a class by itself.

The two hole Gas Hot Plate of this Range can be attached to any of the Davis Coal Ranges when so desired.

O. H. S. Notes.

The O. H. S. Literary Society held its meeting December 22d, 1911. The members all took their parts except those who had the negative side of the debate. We suppose the boys were afraid to meet the girls. The girls rendered their parts very well, and different members of the school discussed the negative side. Miss Hanna, Miss Leary and Miss Reynolds were appointed judges. As the negative speakers failed to appear they did not render a decision, but were highly pleased with the debate on the affirmative side of the questions. Dr. Legge's address was very instructive and was much appreciated by all the students.

"Who-all's Got Faith to Come Along With Me?"

SYNOPSIS.

Elam Harnish, known all through Alaska as "Burning Daylight," celebrates his 30th birthday with a crowd of miners at the Circle City Tivoli. The dance leads to heavy gambling, in which over $100,000 is staked. Harnish loses his money and his mine but wins the mail contract. He starts on his mail trip with dogs and sledge, telling his friends that he will be in the big Yukon gold strike at the start. Burning Daylight makes a sensationally rapid run across country with the mail, appears at the Tivoli and is now ready to join his friends in a dash to the new gold fields.

CHAPTER IV.—Continued.

In the meantime there was naught to show for it but hunch. But it was coming. As he would stake his last ounce on a good poker hand, so he staked his life and effort on the hunch that the future held in store a big strike on the Upper River. So he and his three companions, with dogs, and sleds, and snowshoes, toiled up the frozen breast of the Stewart, toiled on and on through the white wilderness where the unending stillness was never broken by the voices of men, the stroke of an ax, or the distant crack of a rifle. Gold they found on the bars, but not in paying quantities, and in the following May they returned to Sixty Mile.

Ten days later, Harper and Joe Ladue arrived at Sixty Mile, and Daylight, strong to obey the hunch that had come to him, traded a third interest in his Stewart town site for a third interest in theirs on the Klondike. They had faith in the Upper Country, and Harper left down-stream, with a raft-load of supplies, to start a small post at the mouth of the Klondike.

"Why don't you tackle Indian River, Daylight?" Harper advised, at parting. "There's whole slathers of creeks and draws draining in up there, and somewhere gold just crying to be found. That's my hunch. There's a big strike coming, and Indian River ain't going to be a million miles away."

"And the place is swarming with moose," Joe Ladue added. "Bob Henderson's up there somewhere, been there three years now, swearing something big is going to happen, living off'n straight moose and prospecting around like a crazy man."

Daylight decided to go Indian River a flutter, as he expressed it; and lingered a few days longer arranging his meager outfit. He planned to go in light, carrying a pack of seventy-five pounds and making his five dogs pack as well, Indian fashion, loading them with thirty pounds each. Depending on the report of Ladue, he intended to follow Bob Henderson's example and live practically on straight meat. When Jack Kearns' scow, laden with the sawmill from Lake Linderman, tied up at Sixty Mile, Daylight bundled his outfit and dogs on board, turned his town-site application over to Elijah to be filed, and the same day was landed at the mouth of Indian River. He continued down Hunker to the Klondike, and on to the summer fishing camp of the Indians on the Yukon.

Here for a day he camped with Carmack, a squaw-man, and his Indian brother-in-law, Skookum Jim, bought a boat, and, with his dogs on board, drifted down the Yukon to Forty Mile. Then it was that Carmack, his brother-in-law, Skookum Jim, and Cultus Charlie, another Indian, arrived in a canoe at Forty Mile, went straight to the gold commissioner, and recorded three claims and a discovery claim on Bonanza Creek. After that, in the Sourdough Saloon, that night, they exhibited coarse gold to the skeptical crowd. Daylight, too, was skeptical, and this despite his faith in the Upper Country. Had he not, only a few days before, seen Carmack loafing with his Indians and with never a thought of prospecting? But at eleven that night, sitting on the edge of his bunk and unlacing his moccasins, a thought came to him. He put on his coat and hat and went back to the Sourdough. Carmack was still there, flashing his coarse gold in the eyes of an unbelieving generation. Daylight ranged alongside of him and emptied Carmacks sack into a blower. This he studied for a long time. Then, from his own sack, into another blower, he emptied several ounces of Circle City and Forty Mile gold. Again, for a long time, he studied and compared. Finally, he pocketed his own gold, returned Carmacks, and held up his hand for silence.

"Boys, I want to tell you-all something,' he said. "She's sure come—the up-river strike. And I tell you-all, clear and forcible, this is it. There aint never been gold like that in a blower in this country before. It's new gold. It's got more sliver in it. You-all can see it by the color. Carmack's sure made a strike. Who-all's got faith to come along with me?"

No one volunteered.

"Then who-all 'll take a job from me, cash wages in advance, to pole up a thousand pounds of grub?"

Curly Parsons and another, Pat Monahan, accepted, [illegible], with his customary speed, Daylight paid them their wages in advance and arranged the purchase of the supplies, though he emptied his sack in doing so. He was leaving the Sourdough, when he suddenly turned back to the bar from the door.

"Got another hunch?" was the query.

"I sure have," he answered. "Flour's sure going to be worth what a man will pay for it this winter up on the Klondike. Who'll lend me some money?"

On the instant a score of the men who had declined to accompany him on the wild-goose chase were crowding about him with proffered gold-sacks.

"About two ton."

The proffered gold-sacks were not withdrawn, though their owners were guilty of an outrageous burst of merriment.

"What are you going to do with two tons?" the storekeeper demanded.

"I'll tell you-all in simple A, B, C and one, two, three." Daylight held up one finger and began checking off. "Hunch number one: a big strike coming in Upper Country. Hunch number two: Carmack's made it. Hunch number three: ain't no hunch at all. It's a cinch. If one and two is right, then flour just has to go sky-high. If I'm riding hunches one and two, I just got to ride this cinch, which is number three. If I'm right, flour 'll balance gold on the scales this winter."

CHAPTER V.

Still men were without faith in the strike. When Daylight, with his heavy outfit of flour, arrived at the mouth of the Klondike, he found the big flat as desolate and tenantless as ever. Down close by the river, Chief Isaac and his Indians were camped beside the frames on which they were drying salmon. Several old-times were also in camp there. Having finished their summer work on Ten Mile Creek, they had come down the Yukon, bound for Circle City. But at Sixty Mile they had learned of the strike, and stopped off to look over the ground. They had just returned to their boat when Daylight landed his flour, and their report was pessimistic. But an hour later, at his own camp, Joe Ladue strode in from Bonanza Creek. He led Daylight away from the camp and men and told him things in confidence.

"She's sure there," he said in conclusion. "I didn't sluice it, or cradle it. I panned it, all in that sack, yesterday, on the rim-rock. I tell you you can shake it out of the grass-roots. And what's on the bed-rock down in the bottom of the creek they ain't no way of tellin'. But she's big, I tell you, big. Keep it quiet, and locate all you can. It's in spots, but I wouldn't be none surprised if some of them claims yielded as high as fifty thousand. The only trouble is that it's spotted."

A month passed by, and Bonanza Creek remained quiet. A sprinkling of men had staked; but most of them, after staking, had gone on down to

The Whole Bottom Showed as if Covered With Butter.

Forty Mile and Circle City. The few that possessed sufficient faith to remain were busy building log cabins against the coming of winter. Carmack and his indian relatives were occupied in building a sluice box and getting a head of water. The work was slow, for they had to saw their lumber by hand from the standing forest. But farther down Bonanza were four men who had drifted in from up river, Dan McGilvary, Dave McKay, Dave Edwards, and Harry Waugh. They were a quiet party, neither asking nor giving confidences, and they herded by themselves. But Daylight, who had panned the spotted rim of Carmack's claim and shaken coarse gold from the grass-roots, and who had panned the rim at a hundred other places up and down the length of the creek and found nothing, was curious to know what lay on bed-rock. He had noted the four quiet men sinking a shaft close by the stream, and he had heard their whip-saw going as they made lumber for the sluice boxes. He did not wait for an invitation, but he was present the first day they sluiced. And at the end of five hours' shoveling for one man, he saw them take out thirteen ounces and a half of gold. It was coarse gold, running from pinheads to a twelve-dollar nugget, and it had come from off bed-rock. The first fall snow was flying that day, and the Arctic winter was closing down; but Daylight had no eyes for the bleak-gray sadness of the dying, short-lived summer. He saw his vision coming true, and on the big flat was upreared anew his golden city of the snows. Gold had been found on bed-rock. That was the big thing. Carmack's strike was assured. Daylight staked a claim in his own name adjoining three he had purchased with plug tobacco. This gave him a block two thousand feet long and extending in width from rim-rock to rim-rock.

Returning that night to his camp at the mouth of Klondike, he found in it Kama, the Indian chief he had left at Dyea. Kama was traveling by canoe, bringing in the last mail of the year. In his possession was some two hundred dollars in gold-dust, which Daylight immediately borrowed. In return, he arranged to stake a claim for him, which he was to record when he passed through Forty Mile. When Kama departed next morning, he carried a number of letters for Daylight, addressed to all the old-timers down river, in which they were urged to come up immediately and stake. Also Kama carried letters of similar import, given him by the other men on Bonanza.

"It will sure be the gosh-dangdest stampede that ever was,' Daylight chuckled, as he tried to vision the excited populations of Forty Mile and Circle City tumbling into poling-boats and racing the hundreds of miles up the Yukon; for he knew that his word would be unquestioningly accepted.

One day in December Daylight filled a pan from bed-rock on his own claim and carried it into his cabin. Here a fire burned and enabled him to keep water unfrozen in a canvas tank. He squatted over the tank and began to wash. Earth and gravel seemed to fill the pan. As he imparted to it a circular movement, the lighter, coarser particles washed out over the edge. At times he combed the surface with his fingers, raking out handfuls of gravel. The contents of the pan diminished. At is drew near to the bottom, for the purpose of fleeting and tentative examination, he gave the pan a sudden sloshing movement, emptying it of water. And the whole bottom showed as if covered with butter. Thus the yellow gold flashed up as the muddy water was filtered away. It was gold—gold-dust, coarse gold, nuggets, large nuggets. He was all alone. He set the pan down for a moment and thought long thoughts. Then he finished the washing, and weighed the result in his scales. At the rate of sixteen dollars to the ounce the pan had contained seven hundred and odd dollars. It was beyond anything that even he had dreamed. His fondest anticipations had gone no farther than twenty or thirty thousand dollars to a claim; but here were claims worth half a million each at the least, even if they were spotted.

He did not go back to work in the shaft that day, nor the next, nor the next. Instead, capped and mittened, a light stampeding outfit, including his rabbit skin robe, strapped on his back, he was out and away on a many-days' tramp over creeks and divides, inspecting the whole neighboring territory. On each creek he was entitled to locate one claim, but he was chary in thus surrendering up his chances. On Hunker Creek only did he stake a claim. Bonanza Creek he found staked from mouth to source, while every little draw and pup and gulch that drained into it was likewise staked. Little faith was had in these side-streams. They had been staked by the hundreds of men who had failed to get in on Bonanza. The most popular of these creeks was Adams. The one least fancied was Eldorado, which flowed into Bonanza, just above Carmack's Discovery claim. Even Daylight disliked the looks of Eldorado; but, still riding his hunch, he bought a half share in one claim on it for half a sack of flour. A month later he paid eight hundred dollars for the adjoining claim. Three months later, enlarging this block of property, he paid forty thousand for a third claim, and, though it was concealed in the future, he was destined, not long after, to pay one hundred and fifty thousand for a fourth claim on the creek that had been the least liked of all the creeks.

In the meantime, and from the day he washed seven hundred dollars from a single pan, and squatted over it and thought a long thought, he never again touched hand to pick and shovel. As he said to Joe Ladue the night of that wonderful washing:

"Joe, I ain't never going to work hard again. Here's where I begin to use my brains. I'm going to farm gold. Gold will grow gold if you-all have the savvee and can get hold of some for seed. When I seen them seven hundred dollars in the bottom of the pan, I knew I had seed at last.'

The hero of the Yukon in the younger days before the Carmack strike, Burning Daylight now became the hero of the strike. The story of his hunch and how he rode it was told up and down the land. Certainly he had ridden it far and away beyond the boldest, for no five of the luckiest held the value in claims that he held. And, furthermore, he was still riding the hunch, and with no diminution of daring.

Mrs. M. E. Lippincott, of Philadelphia, made a disclosure on June 1, which should be read by every man and woman. Not only that, but Mrs. Lippincott says that everyone should hear of the wonderful history of this particular case and profit as she did. Here is the story in her own words:

"About one month ago I was attracted by your advertisement in a local newspaper on the merits of your Resinol Soap.

"Having at that time a very annoying eruption on my face I purchased a cake of the Resinol Soap, and before it was half used the eruption disappeared entirely, the old skin peeled off and fresh new skin formed.

"I wish to thank you for placing within reach so meritorious an article, which I do not hesitate to recommend to my friends."

Not only is Resinol Soap highly effective in removing skin affections, but Resinol Ointment has no equal in relieving eczema, scalds and burns or any form of eruptive skin disease, as tetter, ringworm, barber's itch, eruptions of poison ivy, stings of poisonous insects, pimples, rash, sunburn, prickly heat, chafing, itching, blackheads, boils, scalds, burns, etc. Resinol Ointment comes in opal jars at fifty cents and a dollar. Business.

A train in Arizona was boarded by robbers, who went through the pockets of the luckless passengers. One of them happened to be a traveling salesman from New York, who, when his turn came, flashed out $200, but rapidly took $4 from the pile and placed it in his vest pocket.

"What do you mean by that?" asked the robber, as he toyed with his revolver. Hurriedly came the answer: "Mine frent, you surely vould not refuse me two per cent discount on a strictly cash transaction like dis?"—Fun.

Indefinite.

"I want a puff," suddenly announced the petted, spoiled star.

"Yes, my dear Miss Starlite," meekly answered the long suffering manager. "Shall I call on the confectioner or the press agent?"

Things Queer and Curious

Newfoundland's Iron Mine

At Tilt Cove, Newfoundland, is the only iron mine that is operated on the island. The iron is just below the surface, and when the soil is scraped off the metal is taken out in large rectangular blocks. These are put through a crusher, and the iron is then shipped to Sydney, where all of it is used in local industries.

SPEAKER OF HOUSE

The "progressive" movement in China, which has culminated in the present uprising against the Manchus, has been in evidence for a long time in the University of Pao-Ting-Fu and other educational institutions. In the university the students instituted a parliament and conducted debates that have had not a little to do with the stirring up of the rebellion. Our illustration shows the speaker of this parliament in his official garb and wig.

BATHING IN GOLD COINS

A Parisian journalist who had speculated in railway shares won 200,000 francs as the result of a lucky venture. Drawing it in gold, he proceeded to a hotel, emptied the bags of gold in the bed and went to sleep literally in the sands of Pactolus. The man was so crazed by his good fortune that he found indescribable pleasure in revealing in a golden bath.

Paganini, the violinist, when he received the proceeds of his concerts (he insisted upon being paid in gold), used to wash his hands in sovereigns. A French novelist, Soulie, wrote a book called "The Memories of the Devil." It was successful; the publishers paid him for the first volume $10,000 in gold. The author carried the gold to his bedroom, poured it into a foot bath, and enjoyed for half an hour the excitement of moving his feet to and fro in a bath of gold coins, smoking meanwhile the biggest of Havanas.

LAST OF MIAMI INDIANS

The last surviving member of the Miami tribe of Indians is Mrs. Charles E. Dagenett, wife of Charles E. Dagenett, supervisor of employment in the United States Indian service, with headquarters in Denver. Her father was one of the most valued aids of the government and during the twenty years that he served as chief of the Miami Indians he acted as ambassador and rendered invaluable assistance to Uncle Sam in many matters of great importance to the red men and the government. Mrs. Dagenett is a graduate of Carlisle university, having received her diploma with the class of 1899. Since leaving school she has been active in Indian affairs and for several years, since her husband received his appointment to the Indian service, has been his chief assistant in which capacity she is still serving. She is the only living daughter of the famous Chief Tosoyana of the Miami tribe of which Colonel Roosevelt has written a history.

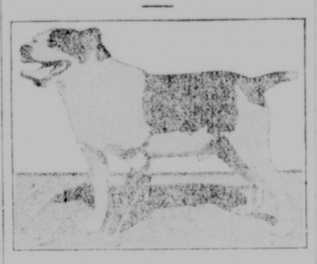
ONE PIE FOR 70 GUESTS

Seventy guests banqueted on a single pie at Gorleston, England, and there was plenty to spare when they had finished. The pie had a three-inch crust and weighed a hundredweight and a half. It was made in three sections or water tight compartments and each hold had a substantial bulkhead of crust. Its interior was packed with six rabbits, six kidneys, 28 pounds of beefsteak and potatoes, turnips, carrots and sprouts. The sea pie, as it is called, is boiled, not baked, and its builder, Skipper Harman, made the cooking process an eight hours' watch. This three-decker provided a savory meat which more than satisfied the guests, and its wrecked and dismantled hull provided ten gallons of excellent soup that was greatly welcomed by the poor of Gorleston.

WAR FOUGHT BY BOYS

We forget that the Civil war was waged for the most part by mere boys, says the Chicago Post. Of the 2,278,588 who enlisted on the Union side, practically all were boys. The 118,000 of this number who were over twenty-one years of age form but a fractional part of the enormous total of 2,250,000. A million of this total were, at enlistment, between eighteen and twenty-one. About 300,000 were eighteen years old. About 600,000 were seventeen, and some 100,000 from fourteen to fifteen years old. Three hundred were thirteen, 225 were twelve, 38 were eleven, and there were 25 who were only ten years of age at the time of enlistment. The figures on the southern side would probably show a yet earlier average age. It is this fact that keeps the pension roll alive today. If the average soldier was twenty at enlistment, he would be today but seventy-one years old, and his wife would be yet younger.

MILES OF WILD RICE



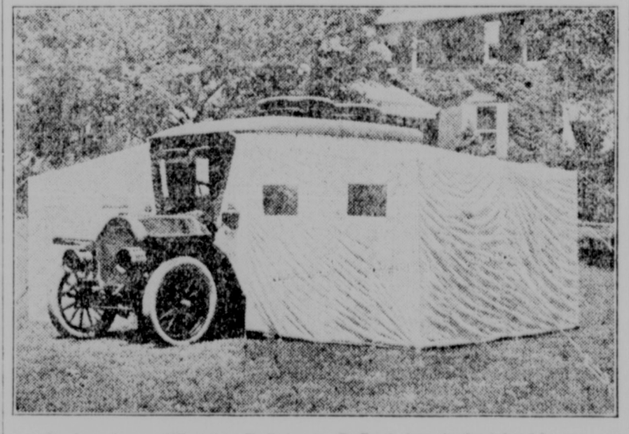
"Imagine thousands, nay millions of acres south of the Daly river covered with rice," wrote the acting administrator of the northern territory of Australia recently to the acting minister of external affairs. "I have gone through miles and miles of such wild rice in a canoe at the close of the wet season."

Senator Findley saw the territory placed beyond need of financial assistance by the treatment and sale of this rice. A small sample was sent to the federal analyst, who reported that it is difficult and probably unprofitable to cultivate a field continuously in rice on a river and that at any rate a mill test to prove suitability for starch manufacture would require two tons of rice. Senator Findley is sending to the territory for several tons for further experiments. Great hopes are entertained that the northern territory will prove one of Australia's most fertile areas.

UNKISSED AT ONE HUNDRED

Miss Rachel Bell, who lives on the same plot of ground where she was born at Adamsville, O., celebrated her hundredth birthday the other day. She says that she expects to live at least ten years longer, and that there is nothing so sweet as life when one gets old. Miss Bell maintains that she has never been kissed, and that though she had many offers to marry when she was young, the man never came around whom she could marry and feel satisfied that she was doing the right thing. When she was born her father kept vigil all night and day outside their cabin, protecting the mother and children from a band of Indians who were then pillaging the hamlets near Zanesville.

DOG HAS ARTIFICIAL LEG



A fox terrier known as "Bob" to all the residents of South Vienna, O., says Popular Mechanics, was recently run down by a motorcycle and lost his left forepaw. Now the dog runs about as happily as ever, and even offers the leather paw in shaking hands with his friends.

CUTICURA OINTMENT HEALED BAD SORE ON LIMB

"Some time ago I was coming up some steps when the board crushed under me like an egg shell, and my right limb went through to the knee, and scraped he flesh off the bone just inside and below the knee. I neglected it for a day or two, then it began to hurt me pretty badly. I put balsam fir on to draw out the poison, but when I had used it a week, it hurt so badly that I changed to ——— ointment. That made it smart and burn so badly that I couldn't use it any more, and that was the fourth week after I was hurt.

"Then I began to use Cuticura Ointment for the sore. It stopped hurting immediately and began healing right away. It was a bad-looking sore before Cuticura Ointment healed it, and I suffered so I couldn't sleep from two days after I fell until I began using Cuticura Ointment.

"Cuticura Soap is the best soap I ever saw. I have used all kinds of soap for washing my face, and always it would leave my face smarting. I had to keep a lotion to stop the smart, no matter how expensive a soap I used. I find at last in Cuticura Soap a soap that will clean my face and leave no smarting, and I do not have to use any lotion or anything else to ease it. I believe Cuticura Soap is the best soap made." (Signed) Mrs. M. E. Fairchild, 805 Lafayette St., Wichita, Kan., May 8, 1911. Although Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold by druggists and dealers everywhere, a sample of each, with 32-page book, will be mailed free on application to "Cuticura," Dept. 22 K, Boston.

It Sounded Well.

Horace Taylor, the artist, whose newspaper illustrations used to be admired here, came from Nokomis, Ill., in the Egypt district. In "Hod's" early days they organized a band in which he blew an inconsequential horn.

"We had a hard time naming the band," said Taylor. "However, as we were a thousand miles from the ocean and even a considerable distance from the great lakes, we called it the Marine Band of Nokomis."—Chicago Evening Post.

COAL INDUSTRY NOT PROSPEROUS

Report Made on Production in Appalachian States.

The production of the Appalachian coal fields in 1911 is discussed in a statement given to the press by Edward W. Parker, of the United States Geological Survey. Mr. Parker states that in general the condition of the coal mining industry in 1911 was far from prosperous owing to overproduction and depressed prices.

The Appalachian region as the principle source of coking coals was more directly influenced by the depression in the iron trade in 1911 than some of the coal-mining districts. In some of the coking districts many of the ovens were shut down throughout the year. The production of coke in the Connellsville district decreased 15 per cent, and other coking districts will show a still larger falling off. There was also a lighter demand from the railroads, and as the supply of both cars and labor was adequate, there was naturally an ability to produce and transport the coal in considerable excess of the ability of the market to absorb it. It is estimated that the production of bituminous coal in Pennsylvania in 1911 decreased about 3 per cent with a considerably larger decrease in value. In West Virginia the production was approximately the same as in 1910. During the first six months of the year the production fell short probably 3,000,000 tons, as compared with the last six months of 1910, but after the first of July there was some improvement in business, although prices were still depressed.

In the opinion of Mr. John Laing, chief of the West Virginia Department of Mines, the State's output of the year was 54,000,0000 long tons, or about 60,-500,000 short tons, compared with 61,-671,000 short tons in 1910. Some operators estimate that the production of the State will show an increase of about 5 per cent over that of the preceding year. Mr. Laing estimates that the production of coke in West Virginia in 1911 was not more than half as much as in 1910 This was partly made up, however, by the fact that a large amount of West Virginia coal is being shipped to by-product coke ovens in other states. For several years prior to 1911 the labor supply in West Virginia had not been sufficient for the requirements, but this is not the case in 1911. There were no serious interruptions to business owing to labor troubles, the few instances of dissatisfaction which developed having been settled satisfactorily within a few hours after the strike began, and the usual complaints of car shortage and the failure on the part of the railroads to handle the traffic were not made. Several attempts have been made to secure agreements among the operators by which prices could be put upon a living basis and ruinons competition abated.

In Alabama, according to conservative estimates, the output in 1911 decreased about 10 per cent from that of 1910. This has been due chiefly to curtailments of the production of pig iron, with a proportionate reduction in coke, and no curtailment of the output of coal from the mines of the iron-making companies. The commercial coal business of the state was anything but satisfactory. The demand was less than in 1910, and prices were greatly demoralized. Labor conditions were normal, the supply being sufficient and without interruption because of strikes. Although 1911 was so generally unsatisfactory, provisions for better conditions in the future were made by the construction of two large by-product coke oven plants at Koppers ovens, one operated by the Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railroad Company, the other by the Woodward Iron Co.

The trade conditions in Tennessee were similar to those in Alabama, and the decrease in output was about the same. The principle activity in the way of development in the entire Appalachian region was in eastern Kentucky, particularly in Pike and Harlan counties. That area will probably show an increased production over 1910.

The largest percentage of decrease in the Appalachian states was probably shown in the output of Ohio. This is due to the fact that in 1910 the production of that state had been stimulated by the strike in Illinois and southwestern fields. The output in 1911 was between 10 and 15 per cent less than in 1910. From January 1 to June 1, 1911, the demand for coal in Ohio was very light, and in some sections the shipments were scarcely 50 per cent of the normal, while the Lake trade was 25 per cent or more below normal during the greater of the year.

Brakeman Struck By Bridge.

O. W. Miller, of Cumberland, a Baltimore and Ohio brakeman, was struck by one of the overhead bridges in Oakland Monday night and suffered quite a number of more or less serious bruises on his head and face as well as a wound in his leg. He was given surgical attention by Dr. M. C. Hinebaugh at the Home Sanatorium and then sent to Cumberland on train No. 12, and placed in the Allegany Hospital. While Mr. Miller's injuries were painful they are not regarded as necessarily fatal.

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

The special meetings at Pleasant Valley were brought to a close last Sunday. There were about twenty-five conversions, which are about equally divided between the U. B. and M. E. churches at the place.

The special meetings in the M. E. church here will begin Sunday evening, when Dr. Reed, D. S., will preach and hold communion services. During the meetings the stores at Loch Lynn will close a 6 o'clock every evening, excepting Saturday.

The quarterly meeting for this charge will be held in the M. E. church Friday evening at 7.30 o'clock.

Cottage prayer meetings will be held each evening during the week preparatory to the special services to follow.

Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Shelton spent their Christmas in Washington City with Dr. and Mrs. Charles E. Shelton.

Miss Margaret Bishop, of Fairmont, W. Va., spent several days in the Park the guest of Miss Alice Traver.

Mr. Earl Enlow was here visiting his parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Enlow. Earl is now at Reading, Pa.

The county assessors are now on the grounds making assessments on Park property. They will finish up here sometime next week.

A committee of four gentlemen were here last week looking over the grounds and buildings for the purpose of selecting a place to hold a convention of the Seventh Day Adventists early next summer. The committee seemed pleased with the accommodations and will make a favorable report. It is expected that from four to five thousand will attend the convention should it be held here.

Mr. A. T. White, who has been with Messrs. Garthright & Harvey for a year, left here the first of this week to take a position to travel for the Rumford Baking Powder Company. We are sorry to loose his valuable services in our church and Sunday school and hope he may be back with us soon.

Miss Vernie Schrock entertained a house party from Friday to Monday last, composed of the following ladies and gentlemen: Misses Beatrice Heyward and Jennie Lee, of Mt. Lake Park; Mary and Wealthea Evans, of Frostburg, and Annie Lowenstein, of Oakland; Messrs. Paul Naylor, Wellington Crane, Roy Hammond, Mark White and Ralph Weber, of Oakland, and Wm. Huggins, of Terra Alta, W. Va. They all report a jolly good time.

The Ladies' Aid Society of the M. E. church will give a Lemon Social at Haydenhurst Saturday evening, commencing at 7.30 o'clock. Each guest will be furnished a lemon and be expected to pay one cent for each seed found therein. Refreshments free.

It is announced that Bishop Berry has been secured to conduct the camp-meeting at Mountain Lake Park next July. As chairman of the Commission on Evangelism, the Bishop is vitally interested in all spiritual and evangelistic movements, and his selection to superintend this historical summer meeting seems to be appropriate. Bishop Berry will summon to his aid some of the best preachers and workers of the churches and it is expected that the camp-meeting will have a great attendance next year.

SINES.

Bad colds seem to be the order of the day.

Mrs. Clifford Welch is on the sick list.

Mr. Henry Lewis and son Frank were guests at Mr. Marshall Friend's last week.

Mrs. Marshall Friend, who has been ill, is very much improved we are glad to note.

Miss Iva Friend was calling on Miss Hazel Kimmell Sunday.

Mr. Perry Sines, who has been visiting relatives and friends at Breedlove, W. Va., returned home Friday.

Rev. D. L. Reid preached some very interesting sermons at Bray last week.

Misses Nora and Iva Friend and Hazel Kimmell made a flying trip to Oakland one day last week.

Mr. Floyd Riley was the guest of Mr. Albert Welch Sunday.

Mrs. J. J. Garrett, of near Sines, left last Friday evening for Keyser, W. Va., where she will spend some time with relatives and friends.

Our school is well attended and is progressing nicely under the management of Mr. Carroll Skipper.

Best wishes for The Republican.

GOLDSBOROUGH BECOMES MARYLAND'S GOVERNOR

New Chief Executive Inaugurated at Annapolis Yesterday.

Annapolis, Md., Jan. 10—Phillips Lee Goldsborough was inaugurated as governor at noon today.

For the second time in a half century a Republican governor took the oath of office and began his administration over a State that has been traditionally strong in its allegiance to the Democratic party. The oath was administered shortly before 12 o'clock by Chief Judge A. Hunter Boyd, of the Court of Appeals, immediately after which the newly created executive delivered a brief inaugural address, outlining some of the policies which he hopes to follow in the next four years. The administration of the oath was preceded by the farewell address of Governor Crothers.

These ceremonies were held in the Senate chamber in the presence of the State Legislature, the members of the Governor-elect's family and a host of friends and fellow citizens from all parts of Maryland. Postmaster General Hitchcock, representing the national administration, and Governor Pennewell, of Delaware, were among those present.

The inauguration parade formed a few minutes after the Governor-elect concluded his inaugural address. It was participated in by members of the State militia and by members of the Republican organizations from all sections of the State. The parade started from the vicinity of Maryland avenue and the Naval Academy gate about 12:30 o'clock and proceeded thence to the State House Circle, south to west at the State House Circle, passing before Governor Goldborough, who reviewed it from the steps at the north side of the State House; to North street, to College avenue, to Bladen street, to the short line station

NEW ELECTION LAW SIGNED BY CROTHERS

Wilson Law Counties Have Been Afforded Little Relief by New Measure.

The Bosley bill, prepared as a substitute for the Wilson Ballot law, was passed by the House Monday afternoon by a party vote of 54 to 38.

The signature of the Governor made the measure a law yesterday.

By the passage of this law the Wilson act, passed at the extra session of 1901, when John Walter Smith was Governor, is wiped off the statuue books and the Baltimore City law, minus party designations and sample ballots, is substituted.

While the Republicans still object to the so-called Wilson law counties being provided with a measure distinct and separate in its workings from the laws of other counties the Democrats declare that in the passage of the Bosley bill the Republicans cease to have the Wilson law as a campaign issue.

The Republicans made a vigorous fight against its passage, Floor Leader Warburton, of Cecil, making his first speech. He voiced the protests of his party against anything else but a straightout, State-wide election law, modeled after Baltimore city, and warned the Democrats that two years from now the Republicans would control the Legislature, because of Democratic failure to do better in the way of repealing the Wilson law.

Only one Democratic speech was made, and that by Dorsey, of St. Mary's, who spoke for the party in the House.

When the bill came up for its third reading, W. Harry Pairo, of Baltimore city, speaking for the Republicans, moved that the consideration of the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was defeated by a vote of 54 to 29, and the bill was then passed by the same vote.

Speaker Trippe is having some difficulty in securing chairmen for the Temperance and Corporations Committees of the House. The Temperance Committee will be headed by a Baltimore city man, but several of the city delegation have declined it. The Anti-Saloon League fight is expected to be warm this session and there is some lively sidestepping. At this time it appears that the chances favor John G. Scott, of the Eighth ward. The Corporations Committee has practically lost its usefulness since the Public Service Commission was formed.

When the House met to pass the Bosley bill the simple primary bill, which had passed the Senate and been sent to the House so that the platform pledges could be attached to it there and afterward ratified by the Senate, was held up by the adjournment of the House.

It was the plan to have a conference upon the primary election amendments and attempt to secure some agreement. Several conferences, however, failed to bring about this agreement, and it is understood that the primary amendment, already on its third reading, will be killed.

When friends of the amendments learned that the measure would probably fail they hoped at first that Governor Crothers would regard the Bosley act and the primary amendments as twin pieces of legislation and refuse to sign one without the other.

It was agreed by members of the House Organization Committee to report that 75 employees will be all that are necessary for the business of the House. This will effect a saving of $15,000 as dompared with the expenses of the House at the session of 1910.

An effort will be made by some committee members to reduce expenses further by having the per diem of cer- of these 75 employes, if not all, cut from $5 to $4. It is understood that Speaker Trippe is heartily in favor of this plan and the regulars in the House are ready to have the reduction made. They figure that this will further reduce by $10,000 the expenses of the House at this session and save in all $25,000 for that branch of the Legislature.

It was agreed that the Republican caucus would be offered two places—a clerk and a stenographer. This would supply the two places to make the total of 75. It is understood that the Republicans may not accept these places, but it was thought best to offer them as a courtesy.

BALTIMORE SECURES DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION

Wins on Second Ballot Taken by the National Committee Tuesday Afternoon.

Washington, D. C., Jan. 9.—The National Democratic Convention of 1912 will be held at Baltimore, Md., on June 25th.

This was the decision of the National Committee here today after more than two hours' deliberation. The date for the meeting was chosen without difficulty, but two ballots were necessary for the selection of the city.

On the first vote Baltimore received 23 votes—26 necessary for a choice—and St. Louis, 18; Chicago, 6; Denver, 3, and New York, 1.

On the second ballot the vote was: Baltimore, 29; St. Louis, 22; Chicago, 1.

As soon as Chairman Mack announced that Baltimore had won, Marylanders went wild with enthusiam.

Robert Crain opened the argument for Baltimore. He made a convincing speech for the Maryland city, and evidently impressed the committee very favorably.

Mayor Preston, of Baltimore, and Senator Raynor, of Maryland, also spoke for Baltimore.

Card of Thanks.

We take this method of extending to our friends and neighbors in Deer Park and vicinity our heartfelt thanks for their many kindnesses during the illness and after the death of our sister, Miss Kate Griffin.

The Bible The Word of God

By Rev. Barry B. Hall, Pastor of Temple Baptist Church, Minneapolis, Minnesota. :-: :-:

All that comes from God must be perfect, complete. No so. Both the world and man came from God, and neither is perfect or complete. So the Bible came from God, although parts of it are crude and imperfect. The Bible, like all other things, is the result of development and growth. The patriarchs were in God's school and their ethical code was not completed until Christ came and fulfilled (completed) it. Certainly an ethical code allowing polygamy and 'an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth,' is crude and imperfect. But since Jesus completed that code no man has been able either to add to or take from it. It is the only code of ethics man has ever known that stands unchanged and unchangeable throughout the ages.

There are but two things in the visible world that do not die—an immortal soul and God's word. The Bible is a living thing. The spirit of secession is dead, but the spirit of union still lives. So all other ethical codes are either dead or dying, but the words of Jesus, which are increasingly exercising a greater influence over the destiny of both men and nations. Unlike all other books, it never becomes obsolete. All other books but the Bible which are a few hundred years old are obsolete and out of date. The Bible never grows old; it never dies. It is a living, growing thing. It grows on one; the rereading of familiar passages gives new light, and impresses one with the greatness of the book. The more one studies it with a reverent spirit the more its greatness looms up before him, and as his capacity to see more truth grows, the more truth he finds in the word. Every combination of social conditions only draws out of the Word new truth and more light.

All other books flourish best in the language in which they were written, but the Bible flows freely into all molds and lends itself with freedom to every language and dialect. It alone is adapted to all classes and conditions of people. It is a discoverer of the human heart, and reveals all men to themselves. It reveals to all races of men their motives, needs and sins. An educated Hindu, on hearing a passage read from the word, said, "That Book exactly describes us Indians."

The Bible is indestructible, it survives all attempts to destroy it. Yet it is hated as no other book because it condemns man and claims authority over him. Rome tried to burn it, and some of the greatest scholars of all the ages have tried to destroy it, but both alike miserably failed. Thomas Paine thought his "Age of Reason" would put the Bible out of print in fifty years, and thousands thought that Darwin's "Descent of Man" had destroyed it at one stroke, but they were deceived. Darwin really discovered nothing new, for both Moses and Christ were Theistic evolutionists. Evolution does not destroy the idea of a Creator; it only gives the Creator's method of creation.

The Bible stands unapproached as a life-giving book. It awakens dead nations and gives them new life. Christian nations, since the Bible was opened in the sixteenth century, have become responsible for all the world's advancement in science, literature, invention, commerce and discovery. When the open Bible came into Japan she awoke, received new life, arose and defeated Russia, a land without an open Bible. The open Bible has gone into China, and she is at this moment giving birth to a new republic. Laboring men, once but beasts of burden, under the influence of an open Bible, have ceased to be beasts of burden and have come to be men. The Bible is also a life-transforming book. It revolutionizes the lives of both nations and men. When Titus took Jerusalem, 1,100,000 of the Jewish people were put to the sword, many thousands were sold into slavery, and thousands were sold to make sport by being butchered or torn into pieces in the arena. When America took Cuba and the Philippines she banished yellow fever from the island and established a republic for the people, and in one ship she sent 600 teachers to the Philippines. Certainly a marvelous transformation. And it is also true of the individual; no man can habitually read the book with a reverent spirit without becoming a nobler, a truer and a better man.

Is the Bible the word of God? Have the civilizations of earth ever produced a book that could compare with it; has any other book ever exercised such an influence over the nations of earth; has any other book ever transformed the lives of men as the Bible has; is any other book a living book and indestructible as the Bible is? If this book is a book the like of which the civilizations of earth have not and cannot produce, then it was not produced by man alone, and therefore it must be the word of God, given in earthen vessels, to be sure, but the word of God.

TEMPERANCE NOTES

ATTITUDE OF MEDICAL MEN

Use of Alcohol for Medicinal Purposes Rapidly Diminishing—Does Not Stimulate Heart.

Dr. Richard C. Cabot contributes the following explanation as to the present day attitude of physicians towards alcohol:

"The use of alcohol as a medicine is steadily and rapidly diminishing. It is true that the use of all drugs has also fallen off considerably, but this change is more striking as regards alcohol. There are three main purposes for which alcohol has been used as medicine:

(1) As a quick stimulant—for fainting, exhaustion, and extreme cold. This service doctors now generally agree is better performed by hot coffee, hot tea or hot soup. The heat is the main thing.

(2) As a support to the heart in heart disease and in fevers. Here the use of alcohol still continues, but it is constantly and steadily diminishing, because research has shown that it does not stimulate a bad or good heart action, as was formerly supposed. Some physicians believe that alcohol helps the patient in his fight against the germs, but the weight of opinion is against this. By most physicians alcohol is still occasionally used in fevers and in diabetes for a purpose still to be mentioned.

(3) As a food. Though alcohol is undoubtedly a poison to the nervous system this harmful effect is neutralized in some cases of illness by the fact that it does supply fuel and energy to the body. When other foods are rejected (wholly or in part) by the stomach or when, as in diabetes, certain common foods cease to benefit the body, alcohol may be valuable, but this is comparatively rare."

In a recent article in the Boston Medical and Surgical Journal Dr. Cabot contributed some interesting figures showing the diminished use of alcohol in the Massachusetts General hospital. The figures, showing also diminished use of other drugs as well, have been arranged in both tabular and chart form and used as an exhibit at the Boston "1915" exposition.

In 1898 the hospital expended a total for alcohol drinks of $2,322, or 46 cents per patient. These figures were increased the following year to $3,002, or 57 cents per patient. Since that time there has been a steady decrease, and in 1907 the total cost of alcoholic stimulants used was but $813, or 13 cents per patient. During the same period the cost of other medicines administered also decreased, not because of lessened prices for drugs, but because fewer medicines of any sort are now administered.

EFFECT OF SMALL QUANTITY

Backbone of Contention That Moderate Drinking Is Harmless Has Been Thoroughly Broken.

The backbone of the contention that moderate drinking is harmless has been now so thoroughly broken that physicians do not hesitate to express unequivocal convictions upon the subject. Thus Dr. A. W. Ives, in the Detroit Medical Journal, says:

"It is not pretended that there are in these cases (moderate users) pathologic changes due to alcohol, but even where there is as yet no such demonstrable change, there is a disturbance in the cranial circulation and a drug effect causing defective cerebration, loss of will power; loss of the power to think and judge up to one's normal; there is a reduction of intellect. There generally is, however, increased gullibility, loquacity, and a well-recognized inability to judge of just the impression one is creating, of the kind of an exhibition one is making of himself. A drug that can bring a brain's function to the point of coma cannot, even in mild doses, add anything to the power of that brain. . . .

"It is the most subtle and far-reaching of all poisons. . . . It tends to shorten life. . . . Its influences are strongly hereditary."

TOPERS IN LONDON SCHOOLS

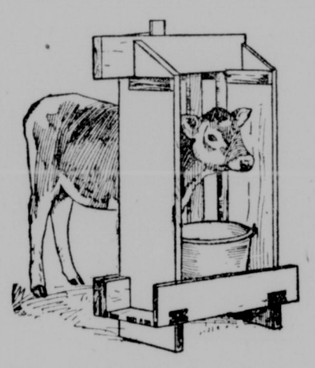
"Do children drink alcohol?"

The question was put to F. G. Mackereth of London, who has been making inquiry into the matter, and he made answer at a meeting of the Women's Temperance league which greatly horrified the good women there. In one school alone, he said, he found that 40 per cent. of the children were regular alcohol drinkers.

In fact, from the investigations he had made he had come to the conclusion that there must be something like 300,000 child drinkers in London, and probably 2,000,000 in the large towns and districts. Parents, in sheer ignorance, often gave their children strong drink because they thought it was good for them, and a woman present at the meeting volunteered the information that she knew for a fact in some public schools beer was almost compulsory.



POSSIBILITIES OF CALF ARE DETERMINED BY FEED AND CARE

Youngster Should Always be Allowed to Have First or Colostrum Milk of Its Mother and Permitted to Nurse Until Eighth or Ninth Milking—Eight Essentials.

(By D. H. OTIS, Wisconsin.)

Young calves need whole milk for the first few days. The calf should always have the first or colostrum milk of the cow and be allowed to nurse the cow until the eighth or ninth milking, when the milk is suitable for human food. Feed often with small amounts to avoid over feeding. Teach the calf to drink and feed whole milk for at least three weeks, changing to a skim milk diet gradually.

The amount of milk fed should be carefully regulated. A good plan with the normal calf is to give four pounds (two quarts) of whole milk three times per day, fed sweet and at blood temperature. In the state of nature the calf gets milk containing about three per cent. fat. Our domesticated cows have been bred in some instances to give nearly twice this amount. Milk that is too rich may cause serious trouble from scours, and in feeding such milk care should be exercised to give limited amounts at the proper temperature. The feeding of whole milk should be continued for about three or four weeks, when the number of meals may be reduced to two per day. From one-half to a pint of skim-milk may now be substituted for an equal quantity of whole milk. The amount of skim-milk may be gradually increased and the amount of whole milk correspondingly decreased until, at the end of a week or ten days, the calf is getting all skim-milk.

Skim-milk is a cheap feed for calves but should be fed carefully in limited quantities and only while it is warm and sweet. Skim-milk may form the principal diet of the calf for eight months or a year. Factory skim-milk should always be pasteurized to avoid the spread of tuberculosis. The best skim-milk is that which is fresh from the separator and still warm. Experiments show that it is only one-fourth as expensive to raise a calf on skim-milk as whole milk. Two pounds of grain with the proper amount of skim-milk equals one pound of butter fat. Buttermilk or whey may profitably be fed to calves.

Grain for calves should be fed first while the calf is quite small with a little bran to aid the calf in learning to eat. High priced concentrates are unnecessary and give not better results than corn meal, oats and bran, ground barley, etc., when fed in proper combinations. At four to six weeks a calf has good teeth and can grind his own feed. A variety of feeds is advantageous and best results will usually be secured from mixtures.

The following list may serve as a guide to the calf feeder in making selections or combinations to suit his conditions:

1. Corn meal gradually changed in four to six weeks to shelled corn with or without bran.
2. Whole oats and bran.
3. Whole oats and corn chop, the latter gradually replaced by shelled corn in four to six weeks.
4. Ground barley with bran or shelled corn.
5. Shelled corn and ground Kafir corn or sorghum.
6. Whole oats, ground barley and bran.
7. A mixture of 20 pounds of corn meal, 20 pounds of oat meal, 20 pounds of oil meal, 10 pounds of blood meal and 5 pounds of bone meal, changed to corn, oats and bran when calves are three months old.
8. A mixture of 5 pounds whole oats, 3 pounds bran, 1 pound corn meal and 1 pound of linseed meal.

The calf may be taught to eat grain by rubbing a little on its mouth when it is through drinking milk. From this it will soon learn to eat from the feed box.

The roughage for calves should first be fed at two or three weeks of age when the calf begins to eat grain. Good clean hay, either timothy, blue grass, clover or alfalfa, may be used. Corn silage is an excellent calf feed when fed in moderate amounts. Good pasture is an essential after four to six months of age, and if the calf is turned out for only a few hours each day at first scours will be avoided.

PURE-BRED IS MOST PROFITABLE

Farmer Will Find His Stock Not Only Better in Looks, But His Profits Will Show Big Increase.

Nearly every farmer has several dogs and in nearly all cases they are not worth their feed. A pair of good Scotch collies, English collies, shepherds, beagles, fox terriers or any other breed to which you may take a fancy can not only be made to pay for their keep, but will add a nice little sum to the farm purse, as young dogs of a pure breed can always find a ready sale.

To have all the stock on a farm of a pure breed seems to some people to be impossible, but the farmer will find that his stock are not only better in looks, but with careful management an increase of from 25 per cent. to 50 per cent. in his profits can easily be made.

Eggs and Exercise.

The hens to lay well in cold weather must have plenty of exercise. If they are to be confined, give them a deep litter of straw to scratch in, and place the grain feed in this straw so they will scratch. Inactive hens will not lay. It is a good plan on the farm to allow the chickens the run of all the barns and stables during the day. They will do no damage at this time and will secure a lot of feed that would otherwise go to waste. In securing it they will be compelled to exercise, which will promote laying. Also, the barn is a dry, warm place for fowls in winter, and dryness and warmth are great factors in their health and productiveness. They can easily be shut out of the barn at night.

New Rake Patented.

For weeding gardens and flower beds a rake has been patented which carries a small triangular hoe on the crossbar.

LARGE DEMAND FOR FAT GEESE

Corn Meal and Milk, With Some Beef Scraps, Makes Almost Ideal Ration—Mash Also Good.

Dressed geese are largely in demand in the cities during the fall months, but choice birds will bring good prices the entire year, writes W. F. Purdue, in an exchange. Do not offer old stock, however, as they are not desired by the purchasers, and are more suitable to their owners as breeders. There is no advantage of selling off the old stock of geese, as they live many years, and the older birds are generally best for breeding purposes, and the young ones bring better prices in the market.

Do not proceed to fatten the geese suddenly, but confine gradually. Allow several in a small yard, which should be kept clean and somewhat darkened.

Corn meal and milk, with some beef scraps, wheat and brewers' grains fatten well.

A mash composed of four parts cornmeal, one part wheat bran, one part middlings and one part of beef scraps is a very good ration. Wet this just enough to have it in a dry, crumbly state, and feed all they will eat up clean three times a day.

Do not give them green food while fattening. They should be kept away from bathing water during this period, but a plenty of water for drinking purposes should be kept in their pen. Also keep a good supply of grit before them. Fast for twenty-four hours before killing.

Goslings may be put up to fatten when from 8 to 10 weeks old. After they are 12 weeks old they will begin to shed, and will fatten readily then until the end of the season. Previous to being confined they should have a good range where grass is plentiful, and it will then require but a few days to get them ready.

Dry Shelter for Sheep.

If you are going in for a few sheep this season, don't overlook the matter of shelter. Sheep must be kept dry as to fleece and feet, otherwise your venture will result disastrously. Provide dry quarters for wet weather and you'll have no difficulty in carrying them over.

Feeding Mare With Colt.

Is it fair to expect a mare to do a full day's work and suckle a vigorous and always hungry colt without extra allowance of feed?

GUNGEET the prophet held up his hand.

A sudden cry smote the chilly air, the red edge of the sun creeping behind the snow cap of Everest seemed to the multitude a reflection on the scythe which Gungeet held in his hand, reddened with the blood of the Ranee's first born, which had been offered as a propitiatory sacrifice to the Sun God. It was mid-winter—the winter solstice—and the sun rays were so feeble that the sun worshippers were sore afraid that unless the blood of a royal prince was shed for absorption by their weakening god the world would pass into darkness and all would die.

As the sun rose higher in the heavens the multitude of worshippers exchanged gifts, and on the crags and high places of the Mount of Ghoom, which is above Darjiling, in the Himalayas, goats were sacrificed to the sun god, who was hailed by the multitude as a newborn babe, refreshed and renewed with the blood of their princeling offering.

For thousands of years before the birth of Jesus of Nazareth this drama was enacted in the mountains of India and the tradition was carried by the merchants into Persia, Egypt and China to become later part of the Pagan saturnalia of the Romans and the Druids.

For two centuries of the Christian era there is no indisputable evidence of any celebration of Christ's birth. The primitive Christians, like sensible opportunists, made it the festival of the "Light of All Nations," borrowing from the east, the birthplace of all religions, the birthday of the sun god, which was held by the Romans (on the day when light got the betetr of darkness, and the days began to get longer) as a great festival, in celebration of "the birthday of the unconquered sun."

The first historical account of the celebration of Christmas day is connected with the persecutor, Diocletian, who, when holding court at Nicomedia, about 300 A. D., on learning that a multitude of Christians were assembled in the city to celebrate the birthday of Jesus, ordered the church doors to be closed and the building to be set ablaze, so that all the worshippers perished in the flames. Diocletian was possessed of the most terrible of all heresies, that moral forces can be put down by physical ones, Christianity by fire and sword, but his successor, Julian, in the next generation, when Diocletian had done his worst, and done it thoroughly, had to admit that all was in vain. He may not, in fact, have said, "Thou hast conquered, Oh, Galilean!" though Julian proved it.

Early in the thirteenth century the Christian church sanctioned feasting on Christmas day by removing the obligation of observing abstinence whenever that festival should fall on a Friday. By abstinence is meant that flesh meat shall not be indulged in, and as every Friday throughout the year was a day specially marked for such mortification, Christmas must, indeed, have been somewhat cheerless when the feast was in reality more than a fast by reason of its occurrence on a Friday. That, however, is quite forgotten by present-day observers; and for close on 700 years Christmas day has been observed by even the most piously inclined as the occasion for indulging in good cheer.

In "Merry England" the festival is made a thoroughly enjoyable one, though the days have changed somewhat since Dickens rode through the streets of London and told of the scenes of Christmas joy he witnessed in the lamplit streets. Nowadays electricity has taken the place of gas and lamplight, and instead of the slow, wheezy horse vehicles of Dickens' day the streets of Merry England are traversed by electric and oil motor carriages. But the good, old-fashioned dinner prevails, and from king to commoner all go to the place each calls home to eat well-made soup, goose or turkey, potatoes, sprouts, mince pies and Christmas pudding.

"Stille Nache, heilige nacht," has been sung in Germany for many untold Christmases beneath the illuminated pine tree, and its population of sixty-five millions will enjoy their gingerbread and honey cakes.

In Denmark Christmas is a most important and beautiful festival. Despite all other changes, it preserves its old character, and is universally celebrated among rich and poor.

In Russia the spirit of St. Nicholas is rampant, and the streets of St. Petersburg, Moscow, Riga and other centers are alive with silvery-belled drochas, all bearing happy muscovites exchanging calls and bearing each other presents, which are opened at sweet-laden tables shrouded in vapor from the steaming samovers.

In New York City there will be millions of conspiracies to surprise the children, for with our polyglot peoples no nation realizes to the extent the United States does the inner meaning for the world of the festivals of the Christ child. Here, more than anywhere else in the world, the spirit of Christmas invites our own happiness in seeking that of others, and in the accomplishment of good will toward men we know we yearly replant the rose that blossomed in the snow of the first Christmas night.

THE idea of a new coming of Christ today is an influence, if not an obsession with countless millions of people in all parts of the world.

With all Christians it is a thrilling thought, or a devout wish. With some it is a faith and a prophecy. The Adventists, under their various denominations—Evangelical, Advent Christians, Seventh Day, Life and Advent Union and others—look for Christ's return at a nearly date within the present age, according to the same Hebrew prophecies which forecast his birth at Bethlehem of Judea. There are in the United States alone 2,544 Adventist churches, with an aggregate of 100,000 communicants.

The Jews expect a Messiah yet to come.

The Behaists, or "Truth-Knowers," whose cult, a modern offshoot of Mohammedanism, has made remarkable headway in Europe and America during the past decade or two, believe that the re-incarnation of the Master has already taken place in our time. Their priests and propagandists declare it their mission to make known to the world the glad tidings that Beha Ullah, the head of their faith, who dwells in the flesh at Acre in Syria, is none other than Jesus Christ re-incarnated and come again to earth in fulfillment of the ancient prophecies.

The Theosophists, whose "Universal Brotherhood" was founded by Mme. Blavatsky in 1875, with headquarters at Adyar, Madras, India, believe the incarnate appearance of Christ in this world to be imminent at the present moment. They believe that the Jesus of our faith, even now incarnate but not manifested to man, will take a new body, manifest himself visibly and lead mankind in the evolution of a higher civilization, an epoch of Christian socialism in which wisdom and compassion will make a true brotherhood of man at a time within the lives of the younger people of the present generation.

The above enumeration includes only a few of the world-wide sects and creeds that either look for a new birth of Christ, or believe that such a reincarnation has already, and recently, taken place. The idea, more or less definitely formulated, animates an incalculable number of smaller communities and individuals not taken account of here.

And it is a significant fact that, however widely at variance their theories and grounds of faith may be, all these millions of Adventists meet on common ground in the popular belief that this present age reproduces, in the world's cycles, the Augustan age of old Rome, with its over-ripe and decadent civilization and accompanying spiritual unrest.

The earthly scene is set for some new and awesome act in the drama of Eternity.

The Scriptures of old and the signs of the times today, thoughtful men point out, alike warn us that the hour of fate is at hand. Christians have done their best and their worst to the Church of God for now over eighteen centuries, and she stands today a mournful exhibition of their devastating work. Broken and divided into hundreds of warring sects, she no longer hears the voice that inspired the early church. Truly it is time to expect that the Lord will himself arise and come to rebuild the spiritual Zion and restore the waste places of the spiritual Jerusalem. Although we "know not the day or the hour," yet the time when the Lord's coming is at hand is not altogether hidden from us. The signs which are to precede and usher in his coming are plainly and abundantly set forth in Scripture, and we are exhorted to watch for them and know that the time is near. All these predicted signs in the social, moral, political, civil, ecclesiastical and spiritual spheres, declare the Adventists, are now either fulfilled or fulfilling.

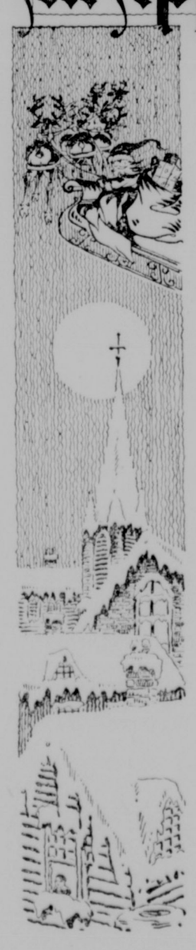
All the ecclesiastical prophecies of Christ's second coming rest on the same foundation—namely, the fulfillment of previous Biblical prophecies and the assumption that this indicates further fulfillments yet to come. It is claimed that inasmuch as the birth of Christ was foretold (Isaiah vii., 14), and that the birth should take place in Bethlehem of Judea (Micah v., 2), and the several other prophecies concerning a Messiah (Isaiah liii., 8-9; Psalms xvi., 10), all came to pass precisely at the time and in the manner prescribed, that the fourth prophecy, relating to the second appearance of the Messiah, demands expectant belief.

In the New Testament the third and fourth chapters of Second Timothy and the twenty-fourth of St. Matthew are regarded by many as forecasting the present condition of Christendom. We are living in the divided state of the decadent Roman Empire. The nations are torn with strife and contention, and are supporting millions of men in arms in anticipation of vast wars in the near future. Such was the condition of the world at the time of Christ's first coming. "In the last days, perilous times shall come;" men were to depart from the faith and go in devious ways. Atheism, infidelity, socialism and anarchy have risen in a great wave that is eating at the very foundations of our religious, political and social life.

In the way of physical portents it is estimated that there have been more earthquakes within the last century or so than in all previous times in the recorded history of the world.

What do these signs of the times, heavenly and earthly phenomena, political and religious upheavals, mean? To the Adventists they mean that Christ is coming again, and soon.

A Christmas Tableau.



Many years ago, says an old legend, there lived in a mysterious region a band of Christian monks whose life duty it was to plant seeds and grow crops of toys for Santa Claus to distribute. These monks dressed in white gowns and wore Christmas wreaths about their heads.

From this tradition a Christmas pantomime could be devised. A clever person can make many additions. Arrange stage as a beautiful garden, and place small Christmas trees here and there. On these trees dolls and other toys appear to be growing. While music is played softly the curtain rises, disclosing the monks working in the garden. In the distance is heard the muffled sound of sleigh bells. Santa Claus enters, bows reverently to the monks, shows his empty pack, which they slowly fill from the laden trees.

The monks can be personated by older boys or girls.

An Appeal to Santa Claus

Hi there, Mister Santa Claus,
Hiking through the sky,
Careful lest you break the laws
Speeding swiftly by.
Better give your car a rest
In its onward flight,
Come down here and be my guest
Just for Christmas night.

I'll show you a thing or two
You'll do well to see;
Little people—not a few—
Waiting wistfully;
Hoping you will not forget
They are waiting there.
Doomed, I fear, but to regret
In the frosty air.

Cheery lot of little souls
You would find them all
If, in seeking out your goals,
You should pause to call.
There they stand all in a row,
Wondering what's the hitch;
Wondering why it is you go
Solely 'mongst the rich.

They would deem at bit of cheer,
Tiny though it be,
Sign that, when the Yule is here
With its songs of glee.
They were not forgotten; sign
Sent them from above
They were heirs to a divine
Thoughtfulness and Love.

Leave the wealthy to their own!
They don't need your care.
Let your loving smile atone
For the cupboard bare.
Seek the children of the poor,
Make their need your cause,
And you'll make your wreaths secure,
Mister Santa Claus.

The Mistletoe.

Some of the names by which this plant was called are "misselden," or more commonly, "missel."

This plant was venerated by the pagans of Greece and Rome. There is reference to the mistletoe in the works of Virgil, in the Edda and in Celtic legends.

The white berries which bring a blush to the fortunate maiden's cheek, give the quick admirer the right to kiss any person caught under the mistletoe bough. Its charm is against the evils of a lonely, single life.

It Means Health For the Child

The careful mother, who watches closely the physical peculiarities of her children, will soon discover that the most important thing in connection with a child's constant good health is to keep the bowels regularly open. Sluggish bowels will be followed by loss of appetite, restlessness during sleep, irritability and a dozen and one similar evidences of physical disorder.

At the first sign of such disorder give the child a teaspoonful of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin at night on retiring and repeat the dose the following night if necessary—more than that will scarcely be needed. You will find that the child will recover its accustomed good spirits at once and will eat and sleep normally.

This remedy is a vast improvement over salts, cathartics, laxative waters and similar things, which are altogether too powerful for a child. The homes of Mrs. Geo. L. Ormsby, Xenia, Ohio, and Mrs. Jas. McLain, Hammondsville, Ohio, are always supplied with Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, and with them, as with thousands of others, there is no substitute for this grand laxative. It is really more than a laxative, for it contains superior tonic properties which help to tone and strengthen the stomach, liver and bowels so that after a brief use of it all laxatives can be dispensed with and nature will do its own work.

Anyone wishing to make a trial of this remedy before buying it in the regular way of a druggist at fifty cents or one dollar a large bottle (family size) can have a sample bottle sent to the home free of charge by simply addressing Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 201 Washington St., Monticello, Ill. Your name and address on a postal card will do.

The Difference.

"John M. Harlan," said a Chicago lawyer, in a eulogy of the late Supreme court justice, "had a way of pointing an observation with a story. Once he wanted to rebuke a man for exaggeration, so he said he was as bad as a Pittsburg millionaire who was being interviewed by a New York reporter.

"'Where, sir, were you born?' the reporter, as he sharpened his pencil, asked.

"'I was born in Pittsburg,' said the millionaire.

"'And when did you first—er—see the light of day?'

"'When I was nine,' the millionaire replied. 'My people then moved to Philadelphia.'"

Fellows In Distress.

An efficient woman principal of a New York grammar school, though devoid of good looks and bearing the marks of long service in her profession, still retains the charm of a delightful frankness. One day while watching the pupils pass out of her building two by two, as usual, she noticed one boy marching alone, with his arm to his eyes, sobbing tumultuously. In answer to her solicitous inquiry as she drew him from the line, the little fellow wailed: "I—I haven't g-got no pardner!"

The principal extended a prompt and sympathetic hand. "Shake, dear boy, shake!" she invited. "I haven't, either."

THE LITTLE WIDOW
A Mighty Good Sort of Neighbor to Have.

"A little widow, a neighbor of mine, persuaded me to try Grape-Nuts when my stomach was so weak that it would not retain food of any other kind," writes a grateful woman, from San Bernardino Co., Cal.

"I had been ill and confined to my bed with fever and nervous prostration for three long months after the birth of my second boy. We were in despair until the little widow's advice brought relief.

"I liked Grape-Nuts food from the beginning, and in an incredibly short time it gave me such strength that I was able to leave my bed and enjoy my three good meals a day. In 2 months my weight increased from 95 to 113 pounds, my nerves had steadied down and I felt ready for anything. My neighbors were amazed to see me gain so rapidly, and still more so when they heard that Grape-Nuts alone had brought the change.

"My 4-year-old boy had eczema very bad last spring and lost his appetite entirely, which made him cross and peevish. I put him on a diet of Grape-Nuts, which he relished at once. He improved from the beginning, the eczema disappeared and now he is fat and rosy, with a delightfully soft, clear skin. The Grape-Nuts diet did it. I will willingly answer all inquiries. Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

"STOP THE PAPER!"

Nothing is more usual in a rural community than for some one to show his resentment of a local paper's attitude on a public question by threatening to "stop the paper." But somehow or other the paper does not stop every time some irritated brother tells it to. We have seen express trains run right straight on in spite of the fact that an excited "purp" sat on his "behime" legs between the rails and howled at it to stop. We always have hoped for the best and declined to think of his fate over a hearty breakfast of sausage cakes, etc. The pup deserved no harsh treatment. He was simply excited and failed to calculate to a nicety the discrepancy between an express train and a bull pup. But the train could not stop to reason with him and quiet his nerves. It had to keep on going. Just so with a newspaper, if it wants to get anywhere. It would really give us great pleasure to enlighten the mind and quiet the spirit of every excited friend who finds offence in something we have said or done, but life is too short. Too many more important things are waiting for us. We have to go on doing the thing we think ought to be done and saying the thing we think ought to be said. If this excites you beyond endurance, good friend, you must decide on what you will do, but not on what we will do. You must not think to "stop the paper," because you can't, you know; but you can stop TAKING the paper, which is a very different and much easier performance. You will thereby, of course, grieve us sorely, but not crush us utterly. We would not have you go through your remaining life, burdened with the remorse of having ruined a neighbor by withdrawing your subscription. Your subscription (probably unpaid) has these many years stood between us and starvation. Its withdrawal will be an awful blow—but we shall probably survive until spring and then we can go out and graze by the road-side.

PLEASANT VALLEY

We have not seen any items from Pleasant Valley for quite a while, but "we're not dead yet."

We are all very well pleased to see this light sledding snow, but the thermometer has been registering from 16 to 18 degrees below zero.

Miss Myrtle Gauer, who was taken very ill in Grafton, came to her home at this place. She is somewhat improved at this writing.

South Point school is progressing very well under the management of Miss Marie Cosgrove, of Westernport, Md.

Harvey Bittinger has been unable to attend high school for several days on the account of sickness.

Chas. Queer spent Sunday last with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Queer.

Mrs. Lincoln Callis, of Loch Lynn Height, has been visiting her son, Joseph Callis, at this place.

We were glad to see George Queer's and Delbert Davis' names on the O. H. S. honor roll for December.

Some of our young people have been attending the revival meeting at the White church.

Robert Moomaw spent Christmas with his mother at this place. He has returned to Fairmont where he is employed.

Prayer meeting every Wednesday evening at 7.30 o'clock. Everybody invited to attend. SHAMROCK.

[A letter each week from Pleasant Valley will be quite acceptable.—Ed. Republican.]

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

And now we have real winter with the thermometer frequently below zero, reaching eleven below Monday morning.

The ice on the lake is eight inches thick and clear as glass. Messrs Garthright & Harvey and Leighron & Harvey are filling their large ice houses, and the Mountain Lake Hotel house is being filled by Mr. Roy Winter.

Mr. C. F. Dawson met with a painful accident Saturday evening at his home when he fell and broke his thigh near the hip joint. Dr. Broadwater reduced the fracture and the patient is now doing well, but will be housed up for many weeks.

The Lemon Social at Haydenhurst last Saturday evening was a very enjoyable affair. Thirty persons were present, notwithstanding the inclement weather. Instrumental music was furnished by Mr. T. B. Doman and daughter Dottie, and Misses Gertrude Enlow and Elizabeth Chance gave readings. Refreshments were served and all departed about 10.30, well pleased with the occasion.

The special services at the M. E. church commenced Sunday night with a fine seomon by Dr. Reed, who also preached Monday night.

We have not learned when the B. & O. will commence shipping ice from the lake. The large ice house at the lake will be filled within the next few days.

SUTTON.

Our school is progressing nicely under the able management of Miss Margaret Smith and with an enrollment of fifty-four pupils.

The weather changed suddenly and on Friday night the mercury dropped to 12 below zero. Saturday morning it was down to 17 below zero.

Mr. H. S. Coleman, our merchant, killed the champion porker, which tipped the beam at 508 pounds. This was the largest hog butchered in our section and probably the largest in District No. 3.

We were glad to see Mr. John Spiker, who has been afflicted with rheumatism, on the streets at Sutton.

We are glad to note that Mr. John F. Robeson is recovery from a serious injury received from a fall on the ice.

Mr. George R. Pope is also around again. He has been suffering from a painful felon on his hand.

Mr. Archie Broadwater and wife visited Mr. H. S. Coleman a few days ago.

Mr. Ray Wiland spent a few days with Mr. W. H. Green.

Mr. Raymond Beeman and Mr. Will Fraley visited at Mrs. Katy Knapp's recently SCHOOL BOY No. 2.

BITTINGER.

During the last four days and nights the mercury has been keeping well down to the zero point. Some snow has fallen and in all respects this has been the coldest period of the winter.

Mrs. Frank Wagner, of Salisbury, Pa., who until recently was Miss Huldah Wiley, of this village, is spending a few days with relatives here.

Simon Opal, who was injured by the falling of the roof of his father's sawmill about three weeks ago and who was taken to a hospital in Baltimore, returned to his home at this place last Saturday afternoon and will soon be about again.

The regular annual meeting of the Mutual Telephone company was held in this village last Saturday afternoon. The meeting was well attended by stock holders and the old officers were re-elected to serve for another year.

Mr. and Mrs. David Miller, of Deer Park, spent last Saturday night in this village, and were treated to a rousing serenade by the boys.

Messrs. Walter Haenfling and Lawrence Speicher, of Accident, arrived in this town last Saturday evening just in time to get a share of the serenading at the telephone central, and returned home Sunday afternoon happy and much refreshed.

Dennis Brenneman, the famous fox hunter, will doubtless dispose of his gun and dogs at a sacrifice now, since the visit of the stork to his home last Saturday, as he will be kept busy rocking the new heir to his estate.

BLOOMINGTON.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Warnick spent New Year's day with Mrs. Warnick's mother, Mrs. Wright, at Tunnelton.

Harvey Miller shows his appreciation of army life by re-enlisting after having served three years. He is now stationed at Fort Howard, near Baltimore.

Mrs. Lottie Bonner and little daughter, Miss Bernadine, returned to their home in Parkersburg Saturday afternoon after spending Christmas week with Mrs. Bonner's parents, Dr. and Mrs. H. M. Kemp.

Miss May Warnick, after twenty months of efficient work as clerk in Geo. Warnick's store, has returned to her home in Elk Garden. While here she was active in church work, taught a class in Sunday school and was organist for both Sunday school and church. She will be greatly missed and the best wishes of the church and community go with her.

William Sullivan died Wednesday afternoon, January 3rd, after a short illness from typhoid fever. He leaves a wife and a little son about four years old. This makes four deaths in the Sullivan family in less than three years. The stricken family has the heartfelt sympathy of the community. The deceased was twenty-six years of age. The funeral took place last Friday from the First M. E. church of Piedmont, Rev. Wm. Harris officiating.

The year begins with fairly good business prospects, the mines are all in operation and the stores are doing well for the first of the year. We hope this will be Bloomington's most prosperous year.

GORTNER.

Clint. Slabaugh, of St. Louis, attended the funeral of his father, D. J. Slabaugh, at Gortner Wednesday, returning to St. Louis Saturday.

Mr. and Mrs. Oris Miller, of Eastern Maryland; John King and Miss Myrtle Shoemaker, of Eglon; Miss Myrtle Lathrum and Mrs. Hurley Miller, of Mason, were guests of Miss Anna Gortner Saturday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Gill Slabaugh and two danghters returned to Piedmont Thursday.

Miss Bridget Maroney, teacher of our school, was absent several days of last week attending the funeral of her friend, Miss Griffin, of Deer Park. Her place was filled by her sister, Miss Mary Maroney.

Mr. George Pugh, traveling for Pugh & Beavers, of Terra Alta, made his usual call at Gortners Wednesday morning.

Mr. and Mrs. John Stutzman, of Ohio, are visiting Mrs. Stutzman's parents, Mr. and Mrs. S. J. Lichty.

We understand the firm of Swartzentruber Bros., who own the brick and tile plant and the apple butter factory near Gortner, have dissolved partnership, being bought out by L. J. Swartzentruber.

There will be preaching in the Union church Sunday evening, Jan. 14th, by Rev. Bauman, of the U. B. church.

Davis Steel Ranges.

The popularity of the DAVIS STEEL RANGE is constantly increasing. During the last twelve months the firm has placed one hundred Ranges, mostly to home trade, and are now putting it on the market, through the general stove dealers, shipping direct from the factory.

Their patent grate and liners have proven to be beyond question the most durable made. During the past five years, they have not furnished $5 worth of repairs, and some of the stoves have had hard use.

Mr. C. S. Davis, the patentee, has added some more new and valuable improvements, in connection with those they already have, using an over draught to the firebox, through round holes, that are placed in front of the liners, near the top, thus forming what you might term a hotblast firebox, that takes less fuel, burns up the gases, has a much better combustion, and adds materially to the life of the firebox.

This led to further experiments, and it was found that ventilated lids over the firebox could be used. By making the lids full of round holes, thus adding a downward draught to the fire, surrounding the firebox with cold air draught, from all four sides, enabling the user to always see the condition of the fire, without taking the lids off, and to cook on top of the ventilated lids instead of over the fire, with the lids off. The improvement is not only a novelty but practical.

Drawings have already been made by the patentee's attorneys for these new features, and practical demonstrations can be seen at any time, at the Davis Hardware Store of a full line of Ranges, with all the late improvements, that they are offering at prices from $28.50 to $45.00, according to size, style and finish.

The Davis combination Gas and Coal Range has been completed, and for simplicity of construction, completeness, convenience and durability is in a class by itself.

The two hole Gas Hot Plate of this Range can be attached to any of the Davis Coal Ranges when so desired.

About forty new members have been received since Conference, and the pastor, who is very popular among his own people, is also greatly respected by the other churches and the general community.—Pittsburg Christian Advocate.

Fine Dinner Was Tendered.

Mrs. L. L. Loar tendered her husband a very delightful surprise party Monday evening at their home on Washington street in the nature of a dinner, to which a number of his immediate family were invited, it being the occasion of his birthday.

Mr. Loar was at Clarksburg Monday looking over his store there and he returned home on train No. 12. When he arrived at his home he found the guests surrounding the table awaiting him. He was taken completely by surprise and a very joyous dinner party followed.

Those present were Mr. Loar's mother, Mrs D. H. Loar and daughters, Misses Lottie and Grace, and son, Judson, all of Oakland; George W. Loar, of Grafton; Miss Ethel and Mr. Lawrence Loar, his daughter and son, and Mrs. Loar's mother, Mrs. Sarah Wright, of Westernport, Md. The dinner consisted of turkey and all the accompaniments. The relatives from Oakland arrived on train No. 55 Monday and Mr. Loar had no idea of their presence in the house until he was called out to dinner.—Grafton Sentinel.

Banking Officers and Directors.

At the annual meeting of the stockholders of the various banks in Garrett county, held on Tuesday of this week, the same boards of directors were re-elected for another year, and so far as can be learned the same officers were reelected with the exception of the assistant cashier of the First National Bank of Oakland, when Mr. W. L. Thomas was selected by the board of directors of that bank to take the position made vacant by the resignation of Mr. M. R. Hamill.

We publish in these columns today the list of appointments of road supervisors and constables made by the Board of County Commissioners in session last week. The appointments give general satisfaction, the Commissioners in making them having exercised their best judgment in selecting those who in their opinion would render the best service to the general public.

Mr. William R. Offutt, of Oakland, sold his recently erected handsome dwelling on Second street Tuesday to Dr. Fleming Howell, of Clarksburg, W. Va., who will take posession May 1st. Dr. Howell is a retired physician and comes to Oakland to make this his permanent home. Mr. Offutt stated yesterday that he will erect another dwelling during the coming summer. While the consideration for the property has not been made public it is understood that the price paid was $12,500.

While a number of Oakland and Garrett county people generally had planned to attend the inauguration of Governor Goldsborough at Annapolis yesterday, comparatively few went, all on account of the extreme cold weather which prevailed all over the country since last Friday. Oakland was represented, however, by Col. N. U. Bond, chairman of the Republican County Committee, who will return to Oakland tomorrow morning, and by Mr. Andrew Shartzer.

Last Monday Messrs. Will Browning and Perry Frantz gathered from the merchants and residents of Oakland a large quantity of groceries and clothing for a family residing a few miles west of Oakland who had been deserted by the husband and father and left in destitute circumstances. The family consists of the wife and five children, one of whom is an epileptic, and none large enough to work and contribute to the wants of the family. The two young men took the provisions to the family in a sled and made them happy.

Married.

BOWMAN—GARDNER.—A very quiet home wedding was solemnized Tuesday evening, January 2, 1912, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Gardner, at Kent, Ohio, when their daughter, Kathryne E., was joined in marriage to Mr. M. B. Bowman, of Oakland, Md. Mr. Bowman is the eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. S. L. Bowman. The bride wore a beautiful dress of pale blue silk. They were attended by a brother and a sister of the bride. The happy couple have the best wishes of their many friends. They will reside at 547 Wooster Ave., Akron, Ohio.

KITTLE—JENKINS—Ray Kittle, of this city, and Miss Ola Jenkins, of Maryland, were married on Christmas day at the home of the bride. The groom is well and favorably known here, and his bride is receiving a cordial welcome from his many friends. They will make this city their home. Mr. Kittle intending to enter the mercantile business in the near future.—Weston Republican.

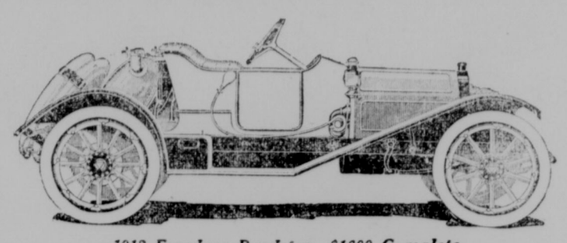
West Virginia has a larger proportion of criminals than the average state, but there are 22 state which surpass West Virginia in that respect. According to the United States census statistics for 1910 West Virginia in the year sent to penal institutions 5,995 persons or 598 to every 100,000 of population, whereas the average for all the states of the union was 522 to every 100,000. West Virginia's prison population increased 49 during the year 1910, accorning to later figures—the commitments to penal institutions for the year numbering 5,995, while the discharges, including deaths, were 5,946. Arizona has 2,992 prisoners to every 100,000 of population while North Carolina has but 123 to every 100,000. The latter heads the list while Arizona is at the foot of the list.

Kitzmiller House Party.

A Christmas week house party at the home of Mr. and Mrs. G. V. Pew ended with a New Year's party at that home. The house was prettily decorated with poinsettia and mistletoe. Musical selections were rendered by Miss Howell and Mr. Marble. Among those present were: Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Harrill and their daughter Gladys, Misses Bess Dian and May Wenning, of Elkgarden; Miss May Davis, of Keyser; Miss Rose Murray and Mrs. Sue Laughlin; Messrs. Wm. Seaber, of Piedmont, Ney Smith, Geo. Coffman, John Marble and J. H. Shircliff.

Back From the South.

Emanuel Hershberger, of Grantsville, who accompanied C. J. Yoder and Val Bender on a trip to the Gulf states, returned home last Saturday morning. He left his companions at Bay Minette, Ala., where they were looking over some land with a view to buying. Mr. Hershberger made the trip purely for pleasure and reports having had a very good time. He went as far as New Orleans and saw many interesting sights. Mr. Hershberger is quite a seasoned traveler, having made a trip to the Pacific Coast some years ago. He has also at various times visited the Middle West states and Canada.—Meyersdale Republican.



The Next Attraction at the Maryland.

Joseph M. Weber's merry musical importation, "Alma, Where Do You Live?" is scheduled to appear at the Maryland Theatre, Oakland, January 30th. The piece is said to be one of the most exquisite musical farces that ever was brought to this country, and its melodies are of the humming and whistling kind. The book is by Paul Herve, the music by Jean Briquet, and the English translation was made by George V. Hobart. The most alluring waltz runs through the entire play. Nina Collins will be seen in the title role, and William Friend, the well known comedian, plays the principal comedy role. Among the supporting cast, which numbers fourteen artists, everyone of which has splendid opportunity to display their talent, are Geo. M. Bogues, Stephen M. Stott, Count de Vassey, Abbott Adams, John Martin, Maud P. Terrill, Violet Jewel, Marie Anniss and Louis M. Blake and a large chorus.

Fire Destroyed Dwelling.

Monday night the dwelling house of Mr. Benj. Paugh, located about four miles north of Oakland on the State Road, was entirely destroyed by fire, along with almost all the furniture and wearing apparel of the family. The fire caught from an over heated pipe leading from the stove to the chimney. The loss sustainee by Mr. Paugh is placed at seveval hundred dollars.

SYNOPSIS.

Elam Harnish, known all through Alaska as "Burning Daylight," celebrates his 30th birthday with a crowd of miners at the Circle City Tivoli. The dance leads to heavy gambling, in which over $100,000 is staked. Harnish loses his money and his mine but wins the mail contract. He starts on his mail trip with dogs and sledge, telling his friends that he will be in the big Yukon gold strike at the start. Burning Daylight makes a sensationally rapid run across country with the mail, appears at the Tivoli and is now ready to join his friends in a dash to the new gold fields. Deciding that gold will be found in the up-river district Harnish buys two tons of flour, which he declares will be worth its weight in gold, but when he arrives with his flour he finds the big flat desolate. A comrade discovers gold and Daylight reaps a rich harvest.

CHAPTER V.—Continued.

Back in Dawson, though he remained true to his word and never touched hand to pick and shovel, he worked as hard as ever in his life. He had a thousand irons in the fire, and they kept him busy. Heavy as were his expenses, he won more heavily. He took lays, bought half shares, shared with the men he grub-staked, and made personal locations. Day and night his dogs were ready, and he owned the fastest teams; so that when a stampede to a new discovery was on, it was Burning Daylight to the fore through the longest, coldest nights till he blazed his stakes next to Discovery. In one way or another (to say nothing of the many worthless creeks) he came into possession of properties on the good creeks, such as Sulphur, Dominion, Excelsis, Siwash, Cristo, Alhambra, and Doolittle. The thousands he poured out flowed back in tens of thousands.

Dawson grew rapidly that winter of 1896. Money poured in on Daylight from the sale of town lots. He promptly invested it where it would gather more. In fact, he played the dangerous game of pyramiding, and no more perilous pyramiding than in a placer camp could be imagined. But he played with his eyes wide open.

Corner lots in desirable locations sold that winter for from ten to thirty thousand dollars. Daylight sent word out over the trails and passes for the newcomers to bring down log-rafts, and, as a result, the summer of 1897 saw his saw mills working day and night, on three shifts, and still he had logs left over with which to build cabins. These cabins, land included, sold at from one to several thousand dollars. Two-story log buildings, in the business part of town, brought him from forty to fifty thousand dollars apiece. These fresh accretions of capital were immediately invested in other ventures. He turned gold over and over, until everything that he touched seemed to turn to gold.

With the summer rush from the Outside came special correspondents for the big newspapers and magazines, and one and all, using unlimited space, they wrote Daylight up; so that, so far as the world was concerned, Daylight loomed the largest figure in Alaska. Of course, after several months, the world became interested in the Spanish War, and forgot all about him; but in the Klondike itself Daylight still remained the most prominent figure.

CHAPTER VI.

It was held by the thousands of hero-worshipping chechaquos that Daylight was a man absolutely without fear. But Bettles and Dan MacDonald and other sourdoughs shook their heads and laughed as they mentioned women. And they were right. He had always been afraid of them from the time, himself a lad of seventeen, when Queen Anne, of Juneau, made open and ridiculous love to him. For that matter, he never had known women. Born in a mining-camp where they were rare and mysterious, having no sisters, his mother dying while he was an infant, he had never been in contact with them.

But it was left to the Virgin to give him his final fright. She was found one morning dead in her cabin. A shot through the head had done it, and she had left no message, no explanation. Then came the talk. Some wit, voicing public opinion, called it a case of too much Daylight. She had killed herself because of him. Everybody knew this, and said so. The correspondents wrote it up, and once more Burning Daylight, King of the Klondike, was sensationally featured in the Sunday supplements of the United States. The Virgin had straightened up, so the feature-stories ran, and correctly so. Never had she entered a Dawson City dance-hall. When she first arrived from Circle City, she had earned her living by washing clothes. Next, she had bought a sewing-machine and made men's drill parkas, fur caps, and moosehide mittens. Then she had gone as a clerk into the First Yukon Bank. All this, and more, was known and told, though one and all were agreed that Daylight, while the cause, had been the innocent cause of her untimely end.

And the worst of it was that Daylight knew it was true. Always would he remember that last night he had seen her. He had thought nothing of it at the time; but, looking back, he was haunted by every little thing that had happened. In the light of the tragic event, he could understand everything—her quietness, that calm certitude as if all vexing questions of living had been smoothed out and were gone, and that certain ethereal sweetness about all that she had said and done that had been almost maternal. He remembered the way she had locked at him, how she had laughed when he narrated Mickey Dolan's mistake in staking the fraction on Skookum Gulch. Her laughter had been lightly joyous, while at the same time it had lacked its old-time robustness. Not that she had been grave or subdued. On the contrary, she had been so patently content, so filled with peace. She had fooled him, fool that he was. He had even thought that night that her feeling for him had passed, and he had taken delight in the thought, and caught visions of the satisfying future friendship that would be theirs with this perturbing love out of the way.

And then, when he stood at the door, cap in hand, and said good night. It had struck him at the time as a funny and embarrassing thing, her bending over his hand and kissing it. He had felt like a fool, but he shivered now when he looked back on it and felt again the touch of her lips on his hand. She was saying good-by, an eternal good-by, and he had never guessed. At that very moment, and for all the moments of the evening, coolly and deliberately, as he well knew her way, she had been resolved to die. If he had only known it! Untouched by the contagious malady himself, nevertheless he would have married her if he had had the slightest inkling of what she contemplated. And yet he knew, furthermore, that hers was a certain stiff-kneed pride that would not have permitted her to accept marriage as an act of philanthropy. There had really been no saving her, after all. The love-disease had fastened upon her, and she had been doomed from the first to perish of it.

Six thousand spent the winter of 1897 in Dawson, work on the creeks went on apace, while beyond the passes it was reported that one hundred thousand more were waiting for the spring. Late one brief afternoon, Daylight, on the benches between French Hill and Skookum Hill, caught a wider vision of things. Beneath him lay the richest part of Eldorado Creek, while up and down Bonanza he could see for miles. It was a scene of a vast devastation. The hills, to their tops, had been shorn of trees, and their naked sides showed signs of goring and perforating that even the great world of which he had heard other men talk and of which he was as ignorant as a child. There were games out there to play. It was a larger table, and there was no reason why he with his millions should not sit in and take a hand. So it was, that afternoon on Skookum Hill, that he resolved to play this last best Klondike hand and pull for the Outside. It took time, however. He put trusted agents to work on the heels of great experts, and on the creeks where they began to buy he likewise bought. Wherever they tried to corner a worked-out creek, they found him standing in the way, owning blocks of claims or artfully scattered claims that put all their plans to naught.

Followed wars, truces, compromises, victories, and defeats. By 1898, sixty thousand men were on the Klondike, and all their fortunes and affairs rocked back and forth and were affected by the battles Daylight fought. And more and more the taste for the larger game urged in Daylight's mouth. Here he was already locked in grapples with the great Guggenhammers, and winning, fiercely winning. Possibly the severest struggle was waged on Ophir, the veriest of moose-pastures, whose low-grade dirt was valuable only because of its vastness. The ownership of a block of seven claims in the heart of it gave Daylight his grip, and they could not come to terms. The Guggenhammer experts concluded that it was too big for him to handle, and when they gave him an ultimatum to that effect he accepted and bought them out. The plan was his own, but he sent down to the States for competent engineers to carry it out. In the Rinkabilly watershed, eighty miles away, he built his reservoir, and for eighty miles the huge wooden conduit carried the water across country to Ophir. Estimated at three millions, the reservoir and conduit cost nearer four. Nor did he stop with this. Electric power plants were installed, and his workings were lighted as well as run by electricity. Other sourdoughs, who had struck it rich in excess of all their dreams, shook their heads gloomily, warned him that he would go broke, and declined to invest in so extravagant a venture. But Daylight smiled, and sold out the remainder of his town-site holdings. He sold at the right time, at the height of the placer boom. When he prophesied to his old cronies, in the Moosehorn Saloon, that within five years town lots in Dawson could not be given away, while the cabins would be chopped up for firewood, he was laughed at roundly, and assured that the mother-lode would be found ere that time. But he went ahead, when his need for lumber was finished, selling out his sawmills as well. Likewise, he began to get rid of his scattered holdings on the various creeks, and without thanks to any one he finished his conduit, built his dredges, imported his machinery, and made the gold of Ophir immediately accessible. And he, who five years before had crossed over the divide from Indian River and threaded the silent wilderness, his dogs packing Indian fashion, himself living Indian fashion on straight moose meat, now heard the hoarse whistles calling his hundreds of laborers to work, and watched them toil under the white glare of the arc-lamps.

But having done the thing, he was ready to depart. And when he let the word go out, the Guggenhammers vied with the English concerns and with a new French company in bidding for Ophir and all its plant. The Guggenhammers bid highest, and the price they paid netted Daylight a clean million. It was current rumor that he was worth anywhere from twenty to thirty millions. But he alone knew just how he stood, and that, with his last claim sold and the table swept clean of his winnings, he had ridden his hunch to the tune of just a trifle over eleven millions.

His departure was a thing that passed into the history of the Yukon along with his other deeds. All the Yukon was his guest, Dawson the seat of the festivity. On that one last night no man's dust save his own was good. Drinks were not to be purchased. Every saloon ran open, with extra relays of exhausted bartenders, and the drinks were given away. A man who refused this hospitality, and persisted in paying, found a dozen fights on his hands. The veriest chechaquos rose up to defend the name of Daylight from such insult. And through it all, on moccasined feet, moved Daylight, hell-roaring Burning Daylight, overspilling with good nature and camaraderie, howling his he-wolf howl and claiming the night as his, bending men's arms down on the bars, performing feats of strength, his bronzed face flushed with drink, his black eyes flashing, clad in overalls and blanket coat, his ear-flaps dangling and his gauntleted mittens swinging from the cord across the shoulders. But this time it was neither an ante nor a stake that he threw away, but a mere marker in the game that he who held so many markers would not miss.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Through It All Moved Daylight, Hell-Roaring, Burning Daylight.

AS IT SOMETIMES HAPPENS.

The man at the corner of the down town alley was selling some kind of cement.

It was worth 25 cents a bottle, as he explained to his hearers, but in order to introduce it he was making a special price of one dime, good for this particular occasion only, and he guaranteed satisfaction or money refunded.

"Will it mend broken china?" inquired a lean, undersized man in the crowd.

"It will mend anything but a broken promise or a ruined character. Say, my friend, here's a couple of sticks of wood, fastened together at the ends. If you break them apart I'll make you a present of a bottle."

Then he gave them a sudden, violent wrench.

But they didn't break apart.

It is saddening to have to spoil a story in his manner, but sometimes, in the interests of historical accuracy, it has to be done.

Dire Necessity.

"Yes, sir, in a year from now this Amalgamated Balloon stock will be worth $10,000 and I'll sell it to you for 50 cents."

"If it'll be worth $10,000 in a year from now, why don't you keep it yourself?"

"Well, you see, I need a shave and a hair cut, and I'd be a holy show if I waited that long."—Judge.

A ROSTHERN, SASK., FARMER THE LUCKY WINNER.

Sir Thomas Shaughnessy of the Canadian Pacific Railway offered $1,000 in gold as a prize for the best 100 lbs. of wheat, grown on the American continent, to be competed for at the recent Land Show in New York. In making the competition open, the donor of this handsome prize showed his belief in the superiority of Canadian wheat lands, by throwing the contest open to farmers of all America, both United States and Canada. The United States railways were by no means anxious to have the Canadian railways represented at the show and a New York paper commenting on the results of the competitions says that they were not to be blamed, as the Canadians captured the most important prize of the show.

The winner of this big wheat prize was Mr. Seager Wheeler of Rosthern, Saskatchewan, and its winning has brought a great deal of credit on the district. The winning wheat was the Marquis variety, and received no more attention from Mr. Wheeler than his other grain, but he is a very particular farmer. His farm is one of the cleanest and best kept in the Rosthern district, and this year he won first prize in a good farm competition which included every feature of farming and every part of the farm. Last winter Wheeler was a prize winner at the provincial seed fair in Regina.

Wheeler is a firm believer in sowing clean seed of the best quality procurable, consequently his grain is much sought after by the best farmers for seed purposes.

Wheeler is an Englishman. He is a pioneer of Rosthern, coming here fifteen years ago. In the last six years he has done much experimenting, particularly in wheat varieties. His farm resembles an experimental farm. A long driveway, lined on both sides with trees, leads to a modest house, the home of Wheeler, a modest, unassuming man with the appearance of a student rather than a man engaged in commercial pursuits.

There are now no free homesteads to be had in this district, and farm lands are worth from $20 to $40 per acre, which a few years ago were secured by their present owners, either as a free gift or purchased at from $5 to $8 per acre.

It is not many miles from Rosthern, where the farmer lives, who secured the first prize for wheat last year at the National Corn Exposition at Columbus and West of Rosthern, about 150 miles, lives Messrs. Hill and Son, who won the Colorado Silver Trophy, valued at $1,500, for the best peck of oats, also awarded at the National Corn Show at Columbus in 1910.

Not contented with the high honors obtained in its wheat, Canada again stepped forward into the show ring, and carried off the Stillwell trophy and $1,000 for the best potatoes on the continent. This time the winner was a British Columbia man, Mr. Asahel Smith, the "Potato King," of that province. The exhibit consisted of one hundred and one varieties drawn from all parts of the province aggregating in weight one and a half tons.

At the recent Dry Farming Congress, held at Colorado Springs, and at which time it was decided to hold the next Congress at Lethbridge, in 1912, the Province of Alberta made a wonderful showing of grains, grasses and vegetables.

"At the Congress, Alberta got more prizes and trophies, ten to one, than any state of the Union," said Mr. Hotchkiss to the Edmonton Bulletin. "We brought back all but the building with us, and they offered us that, saying we might as well take all that was going. We would have brought it along, too, if we had had a flat car to put it on. Alberta captured nearly 50 first prizes, 20 seconds, 3 thirds, 9 cups, 40 medals, 50 ribbons and 2 sweepstakes. The grand sweepstake prize, for the best exhibit by state or province, a magnificent silver cup, was presented to us with much ceremony at a reception to the Canadians in the Empress hotel. The presentation was made by Prof. Olin, chairman of the judging committee, and the cup was received on behalf of the province by the Hon. Duncan Marshall.

Precise.

The proofreader on a small middle-western daily was a woman of great precision and extreme propriety. One day a reporter succeeded in getting into type an item about "Willie Brown, the boy who was burned in the West end by a live wire."

On the following day the reporter found on his desk a frigid note asking, "Which is the west end of a boy?"

It took only an instant to reply—"The end the son sets on, of course."—Ladies' Home Journal.

Kidney Trouble Is Very Deceptive

Kidney disease is much more common than most people imagine. Many sufferers do not know what's ailing them—until the trouble becomes serious. Some trifling affection may run into the dread diabetes, dropsy or Bright's disease before one realizes there's anything wrong with his kidneys.

Usually the most noticeable symptoms which first appear are far from the seat of the trouble, and the sufferer mistakes the nature of his ailment. Dull headaches or nervousness, for instance, he never thinks of as signs of diseased kidneys.

Even the aching back and sides, rheumatism, pains or twitching in groins or limbs, sore, inflamed muscles, he may consider indications of some other trouble. Unnaturally colored or cloudy urine, too frequent or too scanty urination, burning sensation, are of course readily recognized as symptoms of such disorders.

Because of the deceptive and dangerous character of these ailments, if you suspect your kidneys are diseased, lose no time in beginning treatment. The best possible remedy for you is Dr. Derby's Kidney Pills. They are quite different from anything else in the market. They act in two ways—cleanse the clogged kidneys of their poisonous impurities, strengthen them so they perform their duties normally, naturally. There's no other way to really cure kidney derangements, restless bladder troubles and rheumatism—and permanently banish those frightful aches and pains.

Get a package of these marvelous Dr. Derby's Kidney Pills at once. 25c and 50c packages. If you want to try them first ask your druggist for a free sample package, or same will be sent direct by Derby Medicine Co., Eaton Rapids, Mich.

HIS VOCATION.

"I suppose you'll be an agriculturist when you grow up?"

"No'm. I'm jest goin' to work on this farm, that's all."

Somewhat Inconsistent.

The young woman had spent a busy day. She had browbeaten fourteen sales-people, bullyragged a shop-walker, argued victoriously with a milliner, laid down the law to a modiste, nipped in the bud a taxi chauffeur's attempt to overcharge her, made a street-car conductor stop the car in the middle of a non-stop run for her, discharged her maid and engaged another, and otherwise refused to allow herself to be imposed upon. Yet she did not smile that evening when a young man begged:

"Let me be your protector through life!"

Some Undertaking.

The official undertaker of a small town was driving through the county on one of his regular missions. A woman came out to the gate of a farm yard and hailed him.

"I don't seem to recall your name, madam," he said.

"That's funny!" she said. "It ain't been more'n a year and a half ago since you undertook my first husband."

Two Women.

Dutch Cap

Photographed by Underwood & Underwood, N. Y.

Nationality in caps is one of the striking features of this season's fashions. This quaint Dutch cap is made of fine mesh net, embroidered in Delft blue. The roses at the ears have no foliage, but on the left side there are ribbon pendants to match in color.

DESIGN FOR FACE CLOTH BAG

Dainty Woman Will Be Careful to Have Separate Receptacle for This Most Necessary Utensil.

The absolutely dainty girl is especially careful of her face cloth. She uses it but one day, and in order that it may not acumulate germs and other impurities she is particular to keep it out of the way of them—in a bag. This bag, like all of the other toilet belongings of the dainty girl, is a fetching affair of cretonne, shaped like a correspondence card envelope and about twice the size of such a receptacle.

To make one of these face cloth bags, cut a paper pattern of a correspondence envelope, enlarge it doubly and lay it upon a piece of cretonne. Then cut a similar shape from rubberized tissue cloth, place the edges of the two materials together, bind them with ribbon and join three of the points together under a fancy button, leaving the fourth edge for the flap, whose point should be equipped with a loop large enough to go over the button.

The rubber lined envelope is really the only sanitary receptacle for a face cloth, and it is the only one in which a damp rag can be placed safely. Even this should not be permitted to become water soaked, as it inevitably will do unless frequently spread out flat and hung in the sun.

SMART BIG COATS

Though much exaggerated in details of trimming, the big costs of contrasting colors are smart and fetching. These coats are worn over simple little trotteur frocks of mohair or serge in the mornings, though they are not considered correct for ceremonious afternoon wear. This coat is built of good brown duo face cloth, having a reverse in plaided effect. The trimmings of this plaid fabric, the big buttons with wooden rims and the huge patch pockets on the outer side of the coat give the simply cut garment great style and snap.

LACE CAPS NOW THE FAD

Use for Stored Away Pretty Laces Has Been Found—Most Acceptable Presents.

For a new purpose girls are turning out their stores of pretty laces and looking them over or buying silk net and allover lace remnants, to say nothing of Cluny and Mechlin edges.

They are making caps. And not for any mythical grandmamma, either. It is the dainty coiffure of the bonnie maid who makes it that is to be crowned with this charming bit of vanity. If she has learned the art of making fine and always new needlepoint lace it is probably a theater cap that she is fashioning of the black silk lace braids which one sees her tacking deftly to a stamped pattern.

When finished it will be drawn up with a cord of the palest pink tea rose silk, and on the left side will be a spray of rosebuds of the same delicate shade, unless, indeed, she is a brunette, in which case the cap may have the completing touches of deep, clear, cardinal cord or ribbons and blossoms.

Another girl is making her friends the most delightful little morning or boudoir caps. These are usually of allover lace, like the quaint mob caps of Colonial times, but with frills turning up and more airy little frills turning down against the wearer's soft hair, and these, too, are of lace. For a bride of tomorrow she is setting loving stitches in a most coquettish little effair to be worn at breakfast, adorned with a rose of soft, lustrous moonlight blue satin, and with this will go a demure little reticule of the same shimmery satin to be fastened at the belt of the young amateur housewife.

Waist With Jacket Effect.

One of the smartest ready-to-wear waists in a dark tone with a vivid color in striking contrast is navy blue satin with cardinal red satin The waist is made with a jacket effect that has sharp open corner at a high waist line, the front being filled with a vest of the red satin. This dark blue jacket has a low round neck, above which there is another round neck of red satin, and the yoke and stock are of white lace. There is a red lapel over a jabot of white lace, and the short blue sleeves have unders of the red. Pearl buttons and red buttonhole effects are the only trimming.

Straight Line Coats.

There is little chance of novelty in the cut of long heavy coats made of double-faced fabrics, says the Drygoods Economist, as the material does not lend itself favorably to fancy outline; therefore, the dominant style is the straight line, full-length cut with large collars, revers and cuffs, with low left-side fastening. The buttons are very large and usually have a suggestion of color in harmony with the trimming effects of the coat.

Gloves Loosened.

Kid gloves that are too tight should be folded for a short time in a piece of woolen cloth that has been dipped in hot water and wrung as dry as possible. When the gloves have become warm and damp, they can easily be drawn on the hands. Gloves that have shrunk in cleaning respond readily to this treatment.

Holiday Bags.

Many of the fancy work bags exhibited now in preparation for the holidays have their draw strings pull up through fancy rings of brass or celluloid. These rings can be bought in all the dainty colors at the notion counters.

The KITCHEN CABINET

THE devil is content that we should excel in good works, provided he can make us proud of them.

"Wherefore let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall."

HELPFUL HINTS.

A clever little idea for refreshments for a children's party is this: Get a box of animal crackers and with a heavy sirup fasten the animals upright on round salted crackers or the long saltines may be used. Decorate with chocolate by putting in eyes with melted chocolate. These will delight the little people and there is nothing harmful in such refreshments.

Never shake rugs or hang them on lines to be beaten. One such treatment will often ruin a rug. Place them on the ground and beat or sweep them. They can be very satisfactorily cleaned by spreading on a porch and carefully sweeping. The best way, of course, is to use the vacuum cleaner on them, as then there is no wear on them.

Celery on Chestnut Salad.—Take equal measures of celery and cooked chestnuts, cut in thin slices. Add a few tablespoonfuls of French dressing. At serving time arrange on lettuce and garnish with slices of latticed apples.

A very pretty way of serving individual butter for company is to make the balls much smaller, using three small ones on each butter plate instead of one, and from parsley break a stalk with three stems, inserting the end in each butter ball. The effect is very pleasing, as they look more like flowers than butter.

When out of cake put delicate crackers together with white or chocolate frosting. Chopped nuts and raisins may be added and these little cakes served with tea will be happily received by any guests.

A cleaner for wall paper: Take a cup of sifted flour, one tablespoonful of salt, one tablespoonful of coal oil, two tablespoonfuls of vinegar, two tablespoonfuls of ammonia and a half cup of water. Mix in a small saucepan and cook until the moisture is evaporated, stirring constantly.

Remove from the fire and knead with the hands until ready to use. Use a small piece, kneading and turning it to keep the clean side out to rub with.

When troubled with rats put fresh unslaked lime around their runways. If they get burned they will be careful never to try it again.

WAYS OF SERVING CHICKEN.

Chickens are not now so expensive that one may not feel extravagant to serve one occasionally.

Braised Chicken.—Dress, clean and truss a four-pound fowl. Fry two slices of fat salt pork, cut one-fourth inch thick, then add five slices of carrot cut in small cubes, one-half a sliced onion, two sprigs of thyme, one sprig of parsley, a bay leaf, and cook ten minutes. Add two tablespoonfuls of butter and fry the fowl, turning often until the surface is well browned. Place on a trivet in a deep pan, pour over the fat, add two cups of water or chicken stock. Cover and bake in a slow oven until tender, basting often.

Serve with a sauce made from the fat in the pan.

Maryland Chicken.—Dress and clean and cut up two small chickens. Sprinkle with salt, pepper and dip in flour, egg and crumbs; place in a greased dripping pan and bake thirty minutes in a hot oven, basting after the first five minutes' cooking, with a third of a cup of melted butter. Arrange on a platter and pour over two cups of cream sauce.

Fried Chicken, Southern Style.—Cut up the chicken at the joints as for serving, plunge in cold water and while wet dredge with flour, salt and pepper, having as much flour adhere to the chicken as possible. Try out a pound of fat salt pork, cut in pieces and cook the chicken in this until tender and well browned. Serve with a white sauce made of half milk and cream.

Modern Marriage.

Frederick Townsend Martin, the satirist of the "idle rich," made a witty speech, at a literary dinner in New York, about modern marriage. "Love," he said, "certainly has a very small place in a marriage a la mode. I was talking the other day at a tea to a beautiful debutante, when a beautiful bride, a girl of 18 or so, passed with her husband. The husband was an old fellow of 70, and the debutante, nodding toward him, said: "'I suppose Bessie married Millions for his money.' 'If she did,' said I severely, 'it was a very wrong and foolish thing to do.' 'Yes, wasn't it?' said the debutante. 'Old Millions looks so healthy. I'm sure he'll live to a hundred.'"

BOY CARRIED OFF HONORS

Inquisitive Person Probably Still Is Looking for Information That He Didn't Get.

Every one who has lived in a small town knows the type of person generally detested there for his inquisitive habits. That even children delight in thwarting the purposes of such a person is shown by an incident related by a New Englander.

A woman in a New England town wished a friend to share her cider vinegar and sent her nine-year-old son to deliver it. He returned quickly, his face wearing a satisfied smile.

"Mrs. Brown was much obliged, ma, but I met Mr. Parker just after I got there. He said, 'Hullo, sonny! I wonder if you've got molasses in that jug?' and I said 'No, sir.' He said, "Got vinegar?' and I told him 'No, sir.'

"At last he said, 'Well, that's a jug in your hand, ain't it?' and I put my jug on the ground and said, 'No, sir.'"

IT IS CRIMINAL TO NEGLECT THE SKIN AND HAIR

Think of the suffering entailed by neglected skin troubles—mental because of disfiguration, physical because of pain. Think of the pleasure of a clear skin, soft, white hands, and good hair. These blessings, so essential to happiness and even success in life, are often only a matter of a little thoughtful care in the selection of effective remedial agents. Cuticura Soap and Ointment do so much for poor complexions, red, rough hands, and dry, thin and falling hair, and cost so little, that it is almost criminal not to use them. Although Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold everywhere, a postal to "Cuticura," Dept. 21 L, Boston, will secure a liberal sample of each, with 32-page booklet on skin and scalp treatment.

Not for Earthly Ears.

Doctor Reed, a minister, was opening the Sunday morning service at his church with the usual prayer. While he was in the midst of it a stranger entered the church and took a seat far back.

Doctor Reed was praying in a low note, and the man in the rear, after straining his ears for a while, called out: "Pray louder, Doctor Reed. I can't hear you."

Doctor Reed paused, opened his eyes and turned them around until they rested on the man in the rear. Then he said: "I was not addressing you, sir; I was speaking to God."—London Watchdog.

Resigned.

The sick man had called his lawyer "I wish to explain again to you," said he weakly, "about willing my property."

The attorney held up his hand reassuringly. "There, there," said he, "leave that all to me."

The sick man sighed resignedly. "I suppose I might as well," said he, turning upon his pillow. "You'll get it, anyway."

GOT THE LETTERS MIXED

Clergyman's Mistake Resulted in Giving Decided Surprise to Dignified Archbishop.

One of the most amusing stories which the Hon. Lionel A. Tollemache tells in "Nuts and Chestnuts," is that entitled, "The Wrong Envelope." Mr. M——, a missionary, shortly before leaving England, received two letters—one from Archbishop Tait asking him to dine, and the other from the secretary of a religious society, a very old friend, asking him to preach. He accepted the archbishop's invitation, and at the same time wrote to the secretary, but put the letters into the wrong envelopes.

After the dinner at Lambeth the archbishop said to him: "Mr. M——, do you always answer your dinner invitations in the same way?"

"I do not understand, your grace."

The letter, which was then shown to the missionary, ran thus: "You old rascal! Why did you not ask me before? You know perfectly well that I shall be on the high seas on the date you name."—London Tit-Bits.

The Human Heart

The heart is a wonderful double pump, through the action of which the blood stream is kept sweeping round and round through the body at the rate of seven miles an hour. "Remember this, that our bodies will not stand the strain of over-work without good, pure blood any more than the engine can run smoothly without oil." After many years of study in the active practice of medicine, Dr. R. V. Pierce found that when the stomach was out of order, the blood impure and there were symptoms of general breakdown, a tonic made of the glyceric extract of certain roots was the best corrective. This he called

Alcohol and Length of Life.

To the Editor of The Republican:

About seventy years ago a young man in England wished to insure his life. He applied to a London Company for a policy. When it was learned that he did not drink liquor, he was told that he must pay an extra premium, as it was then believed that a little whiskey or wine was healthful, and that a man who did not drink would not live as long as one who did. The young man did not think the company was right, so he formed a company which insured only persons who did not drink. This was the United Kingdom Temperance and General Provident Institution. For ten years this company insured only persons who did not drink. Then it opened a new department which insured those who drank a little. Even these were carefully chosen as to health and the amount they drank.

The company was in this way able to watch for more than sixty years and see which of their policy holders died the earlier—those who drank or those who did not drink. They found that among those who drank there were many more deaths in proportion than among those who did not drink. Among the policy holders in the prime of life, that is, among those between forty and fifty years of age, the proportionate number of deaths among drinkers was even greater than among those of all ages. It was found that out of every 100 deaths expected among the drinkers, 93 deaths actually occurred, while among those who did not drink, only 70 out of every 100 expected deaths occurred.

Similar results have been obtained by other British societies. A Canadian company, which recently established a department for insuring only those who did not drink, found, by five years experience ending in 1909, that the number of deaths in the new department was only a little over one half of the older department.

An interesting study was made in 1909 of all the deaths of men of sixty years and over occurring in the one month of April. The results were what were to be expeced from the experience of the insurance companies. Of the 175 deaths of men over sixty years of age information as to their drink habit was obtained in 152 cases: 73 did not drink; 75 were moderate drinkers; 4 were heavy drinkers. The drinkers on the average had reached the age of sixty-eight years, but those who did not drink passed the three score and ten mark, reaching over 72 years, or four years more than the drinkers. Figures for the age of forty-five and over would probably have shown a larger difference because of the heavier death rate in drinkers between forty and sixtv. None of the heavy drinkers had reached the age of eighty, but 19 who did not drink and 8 moderate drinkers had passed it. C. W. H.

GOVERNOR GOLDSBOROUGH URGED MANY REFORMS

Discussed State's Welfare in His Inaugural Address.

In his inaugural address Gov. Goldsborough said in part as follows:

"In the first place, I am led to believe that much of the embarrassment which is encountered in trying to draw to the State immigration of a desirable character grows out of the administration of our election laws. It is hard to persuade desirable persons to come to that part of our state most needing them when we leave the protection of their political right to a class of men so carried away by mistaken partisan zeal that they are willing to forget the principles of common honesty and resort to trickery and fraud in order to deprive citizens of the constitutional right to fully participate in the affairs of government. It is necessarily important that you should turn your attention to the passage of laws which will guarantee to every citizen legally qualified the right to cast his ballot as his conscience dictates and to provide for an accurate and non-partisan count of the ballot as cast. In the absence of fraud, which in no case should be given effect. The physical act of voting should be made easy, but the Corrupt Practices act should be so amended as to make the use of money or other things of value for the purpose of corrupting the electorate impossible and applying the legal maxim that 'fraud vitiates any transaction,' to have the courts declare upon proof of an improper use of money or methods, any election void without reference to the extent of the fraud. With this reform accomplished we can well leave to the citizenship of our state the control of its own destinies, as it will be found appreciating a faithful service, and willing to condemn in an unmistakable fashion those servants who have been found faithless. Could the people be left free and untrammeled in the selection of their officers and public servants, there is little or no danger of bad government.

"I desire especially to call your attention to the importance of providing a means by which the assessment of property throughout the state shall be uniform, thereby insuring an equal proportion of the burden of the government by the taxpayers in the various localities. This is becoming very important, as the state has entered upon a plan for the construction and maintenance of roads, which will be hereafter referred to, and the state tax rate is assuming a size which attracts the attention of the public. In my own judgment, this can best be accomplished by the creation of a commission with ample authority to supervise the assessment of property throughout the whole state. All the assessment laws heretofore passed have properly recognized this as particularly a state function, and if the state is to exercise it, it should be done impartially and thoroughly.

"In the next place, I would call to your attention the importance of providing by proper legislative enactment for the compensation to workingmen injured in industrial accidents. This has been attempted in several of the more progressive states. Some of the plans devised have been held unconstitutional while others have stood the test, not only of legality but have received the cooperation and enthusiastic support of the workingmen themselves, and, indeed, of the capital engaged in industrial enterprise. To this latter class I would draw your attention and suggest that it would be possible for you, in your wisdom, to so enact a law that would meet the proper demands of the injured workingmen as well as provide satisfactory protection to capital.

"It is from the children of today that the citizens of tomorrow are make. It is therefore highly important that the greatest care should be taken with their education and development, and all educational legislation should be with a view to making the child a better and more useful citizen when he shall reach the age where the law imposes the cares and duties of such upon him. The state can never afford to be niggardly in its appropriations for these purposes and no money necessary to adequately house and instruct in all the grades, privileges and duties of good citizenship can be considered wasted.

"Many of our citizens thoughtlessly consider the State's care of the indigent, insane and feebleminded as a charity. This view is not correct. There is no more solemn obligation upon the State than that the indigent, insane and feeble-minded and helpless poor should be properly cared for. It is not expected that they should be kept in luxury, but it is essential that their physical and moral well-being should be carefully looked after and the care of these unfortunates should be in the hands of the most efficient agencies that it is possible for us to procure, and the greatest care should be observed that all the money appropriated for this purpose shall be be used solely in their interests, and extravagance should find no place in the management of our institutions for this object, as the inmates themselves will need all the services that it will be possible for the State to render.

"It has been found impossible for the State to discharge its full obligation in taking care of the indigent sick, orphans and paupers, and much of the burden of this has fallen upon quasi-private hospitals and institutions throughout the State, to which the State has lent as large a measure of aid as has been found possible. I approve of this policy and shall encourage a continuance of it in as liberal manner as the finances of the State will justify.

"The construction and completion of the system of State roads is, I believe, approved by every citizen of Maryland, and indeed, is becoming a demand on their part, for it is recognized that such internal improvements not only adds greatly to the value of real estate but contributes no little amount to the pleasure of living, lightens the labor of those who till the soil and brings their children closer to the advantage of the large communities, contributing not only to wealth but to education.

"Thus it is a fair presumption that you gentlemen of the Legislature desire the continuance of the most excellent work, seriously begun under the administration of my immediate predecessor, Governor Crothers, who has given so much admirable thought and effort towards the subject and has been generally the means of stimulating the conscience of the people to a realization of its importance and the great good flowing therefrom.

"I would suggest, however, that in the administration of such an important matter and in the expenditure of such vast sums of money as are necessary to conduct this great work to its ultimate completion, the taxpayer of the State should be kept constantly advised of the manner in which the moneys are being expended and the work done, and to this end it is my judgment that some system of accounting reports should be established whereby this information can be easily, obtained by anyone seeking it and, indeed, should be made the subject of frequent publication.

"Repeating again that the system of roads throughout Maryland should be built, is it not well, however, that the strictest economy consistent with proper road construction should be practiced to the end that every dollar spent should produce a dollar's worth, and that the credit of the State pledged by way of bond issue, should not be spent beyond the point absolutely necessary to accomplish this splendid improvement?

"While we are building these roads we must bear in mind that their existence and construction necessarily entail the burden of maintenance. It is poor economy to provide for the construction of these roads without amply caring for their future upkeep. The amounts spent and to be spent are too great to throw away, and, as the life of a road without care is short we should see to it that the proper provision is made to give them this care; otherwise in a few years we will find our money spent, the taxpayer discouraged, because we will have no permanent improvement to represent the expenditure.

"Pledging to the people of the State from whom I take my commission, my best endeavor in the discharge of my duties, asking their support and encouragement and submitting myself to the Divine will, relying for help and guidance upon Him who is the source of all strength, I am now ready to take the oath of office perscribed by the Constitution."

The Governor further dwelt upon a new charter for Baltimore city, the oyster question, immigration and country life, and concluded with a further recommendation for the exercise of economy.

BURGNER NOT GUILTY OF FORGERY

Well Known Piano Tuner Had Clear Record and Was Acquitted.

A. F. Burgner, of Oakland, the well known piano tuner, who has been the centre of a rather ugly case of forgery, it being charged that he raised tickets of the B. & O. by purchasing a ticket to the "Park" at Grafton and raising it to "Parkersburg." The case has been the center of a good deal of interest as he is well known in Oakland. It came up for settlement in the federal court at Philippi Monday. Among the witnesses summoned to appear in behalf of Burgner to help him prove an alibi—that he was in Grafton the days the ticket was purchased and passed—were Judge John Homer Holt and two daughters, at whose home Burgner worked the day of the purchase, and Rev. Leland Jerome Powell, of the Baptist church, on whose piano the accused worked the day of the charged passage by him of the raised ticket.

Religion as Satisfaction

TEXT—One thing thou lackest.—Mark 10:21.

This is a character study in black and white. The picture is drawn by a determined hand and there is no hint of hesitation. Stroke follows stroke until the complete portrait is before us. The story is as complete as it is concise. It begins in comedy and ends in tragedy. The young man, impulsive, optimistic and temperamentally enthusiastic, hurries breathlessly into the presence of Jesus with the long hushed question of his heart upon his lips, and then when our hopes for him are highest we behold him making what Dante calls "The Great Refusal" and returns to his old life as ill at ease and with his heart as hungry as ever.

Let us not misunderstand this young man. He was no comedian trifling with sacred things and then casting them thoughtlessly away from him. He was intense, enthusiastic, a nobleman at heart, and when Jesus looked upon him he fell in love with him. He had climbed the ladder of lawful ambition, and while still a young man was in the council of the elders. Honor did not spoil the humility of his heart, and in the presence of the Master he bowed in graceful reverence. Richly endowed with worldly wealth, he was still more richly endowed with a nature rich in the virtues that make for righteousness.

Jesus was intensely interested in this young man. We read that "He loved him." I think he was interested in him on account of his youth. Christ and young manhood, as has been said, are as magnet and steel. This young man had all his life to live. The years with all their possible achievements were still before him.

Christ was interested in this young man because he was rich. Riches and wealth meant power, and power is another name for responsibility. Jesus spoke hard words about rich men and about rich men who loved money, who trusted in money, who because of their money forgot about God. Jesus, however, did not despise a man because he was rich. He loved the rich young ruler. It was a rich man who begged his lifeless body as it hung unclaimed upon the cross. Two rich men took his dead body and wrapped it tenderly in the choicest of linen and laid it away in a costly sepulcher.

Jesus knows and recognizes no class. Riches and poverty to him are but the tools with which character fashions circumstances. "The man's the gowd for a' that." It is written of him that "he made his grave with the rich in his death." There is pathos and tragedy in that sentence. "Must the Master wait till death to dwell in the habitations of the rich?" May he not make his abode with the rich in his life? Let the rich man open the door and Christ will enter in to share his lonely isolation, and will satisfy the hunger of his heart.

Jesus was interested in this young man because he was moral. His life was pure and his hands clean. For him, a good name was better than great riches. He followed the quest of the best. He was one of the Knights of the Round Table, who had pledged his honor to "live sweet life of purest chastity." To gain the love and admiration of Jesus it is not necessary to wander off into forbidden paths of sin, and to run the gauntlet of a dissipated life. For all young men who are fighting sin and the devil and carrying a clean conscience in the midst of contaminating circumstances Jesus has a warm welcome.

Jesus was interested in this young man, who, with his youth, his position, his influence, his purity of life, was still dissatisfied and came with the cry of unrest "What lack I yet?" This is a wonderful thing that he should have so much and yet not have enough.

Jesus answered the young man's question by a command. "Come, follow me." In a great book recently published there is this striking sentence, "If the gods went their way and were satisfied, and the beasts went their way and were satisfied, the unrest of man can only mean that he is not rightly related to his present life." Now, is not that just the truth? How can a man be rightly related to this present life in which he is set if he leaves out God and refuses to become related to the eternal realities that lie all around him, in the world of truth and beauty and goodness? Are youth, and worldly honor, and riches the only things that life needs to be related to? Out of all these human relationships the cry is heard, "What lack I yet?" And Jesus responds promptly, "You lack the love and the light of the presence of the God of truth."

The human heart is homeless until it finds the Heavenly Father." Find God, and you find rest and peace and satisfaction. Religion is satisfaction. Religion completes life and perfects love, and only in the presence of God is the soul satisfied.

No sacrifice is too great to gain this great treasure. "Sell all that you have and give to the poor if necessary." Let nothing hold you back from following after Christ in the life of self-surrender and loving service.

Temperance

SMALL DOSES ARE INJURIOUS

Maintained That Temperance or Self-Control Is Promoted by Total Abstinence From Alcohol.

The immediate effects of small doses of alcohol on the nervous system have only been demonstrated comparatively recently, says an English temperance publication. Prof. Victor Horsley has lectured on the action of alcohol on the brain and nervous system, and has quoted the experiments of Kraepelin, who found the reaction time (i. e., the time between observing a signal and indicating that it had been observed) distinctly diminished by alcohol although not consciously so to the person affected. These have been confirmed by Dr. Kellogg and others. Dr. Schmidt and Dr. Furer have published elaborate tables of numerous experiments on the action of alcohol upon mental operations, such as learning by heart, associations, requiring chiefly automatic movements, were at first rendered easier, yet these were soon done with increasing difficulty, while the higher associations were, from the first, enfeebled.

The increase of automatic actions is no proof of stimulation. All such actions are performed more readily when the attention is not fixed upon them. It is as would be the case were a narcotic to affect a horse and his rider, but to affect the rider first. As the grasp of the reins relaxed the horse might start off more quickly and more erratically, depending upon surrounding circumstances, because free from the check and control of his master. As the influence extended gradually to him his movements would become increasingly sluggish. The excitement of the drinker is the result of surrounding stimuli, not checked by the judgment and will, which are at once enfeebled. Hence, it is maintained that temperance, i. e., self-control, is promoted by total abstinence from drugs such as alcohol, which weakens it.

Other functions of the nervous system have been proved to be impaired by alcohol, even in small doses, such as one or two teaspoonfuls, for instance, the sensibility of touch, the acuteness of vision and hearing, and the muscular sense. In all these cases the subject is perfectly unaware of any injurious alteration, and it can only be demonstrated by sensitive and accurate tests.

It may be truly said that the devil in solution is a devil of dissolution, disease and death. The immediate effects of small doses can be shown to be injurious by precise observations, but the effect is cumulative and becomes obvious after several years of continuance.

It is this fact of unquestionable harm done by alcohol without warning to the drinker, both immediately and after years of moderate drinking, through chronic degeneration of tissues which render the advice to take it moderately so dangerous, apart altogether from the real risk of acquired craving for excess.

DRINK HABIT IS CONDEMNED

Sir Victor Horsley, Distinguished English Medical Authority, Denounces Pernicious Custom.

Sir Victor Horsley, the distinguished English medical authority, recently addressed in Liverpool, England, a meeting of medical practitioners and others, arranged by the United Kingdom alliance, at which the lord mayor presided.

Sir Victor's subject was "A Social Basis of Teetotalism," and in the course of his address he condemned the custom of "standing drinks" and of providing alcohol at public and private banquets and dinner parties. He recalled the fact that his late majesty the king was the first of the rulers of the British empire to break through the custom of alcoholic drinking, when he gave leave for his health to be drunk in water. Sir Victor went on to suggest that if medical practitioners were to be active and patriotic citizens, they ought all to be total abstainers, because the social reforms that were of interest today were only to be carried as soon as they succeeded in getting rid of the national custom of drinking alcohol.

The scientific view was that even small doses—what was called the dietetic use of alcohol—had an injurious effect. It acted upon the higher and most intellectual part of the brain by weakening initiation and loosening control of the judgment and the tongue. It was a common remark at dinner parties that people did not begin to talk until the wine had gone round. Mr. Justice Bargrave Deane, in his evidence before the divorce commission, had expressed the opinion that the worst evil was not the result of drunkenness, but the result of small quantities of alcohol. In a number of cases he believed that as medical practitioners they could all say the same thing of their own knowledge. The way to get the nation to give up this alcohol drinking custom was surely by securing a diminution of the opportunities of getting alcohol. The last license bill having been thrown out of the house of lords, the only other alternative—the high license system—fortunately for the community, had been carried in the budget, and local option was another method which might be applied.

Things Queer and Curious

Turkey's Mid-Europe Remnant

The only remnant of Turkey left in, one may say, mid-Europe is the island of Ada Kaleh, on the Danube. It still belongs to Turkey, but is under the protection of Austria, and is an important point, which, in eventualities, would command the navigation of the river. The island was once a strong fortress, and is still garrisoned by a detachment of Austro-Hungarian soldiers, who have "look-outs" at each point of vantage. From the gate of the strongly fortified bastion one can see the citadel, with its bazaars and primitive cafes flanking the narrow streets. The mosque is richly draped with valuable carpets, but otherwise is a very plain building. The sultan, to keep the island inhabited by Turkish people, sends as a gift each year a shipload of coffee, tobacco, sugar, sweets, and various other commodities and they have the privilege of selling their coffee and sugar at Orsova, a few miles distant on the Hungarian shore, duty free to the extent of one pound in weight.

IOWA'S STRANGE ICE CAVE

The ice cave at Decorah, Iowa, is one of nature's wonders. The only other caves of a similar character of note are one located in Kentucky and another in Russia. Scientists have advanced several theories as to the formation of ice in the Decorah cave during the summer time. It is a known fact, however, that ice forms in the summer and disappears in winter. That the amount of moisture in the ground has its bearing has also been proved by the disappearance of ice in times of continued extreme drouth. When this condition arises, though the ice may disappear, the cave will be cool and damp. When conditions are normal ice begins forming in the spring and increases to the thickness of three to four inches. The cave is located in the side of a bluff on the north side of the city and fully 100 feet above the Upper Iowa river. Its location is picturesque and the citizens of Decorah have constructed a fine drive that extends for a half mile along the face of the bluff. At one time a speculative citizen thought to make money out of the cave by closing the entrance with a door and charging admission. The door stopped the circulation of air, the ice melted, and the speculator had his expense for nothing.

LUMINOUS TREES

There is a remarkable tree or shrub in a small gulch near some springs in western America. It is about six or seven feet in height, with a trunk, which, at its base, is three times the size of a man's wrist. It is remarkably characteristic as to its foliage, which, at certain seasons of the year, is so luminous that it can be distinguished on the darkest night for a distance of more than a mile, while in its immediate vicinity it emits sufficient light to enable a person to read the finest print. The luminous property is due to parasites.

BAY OF FUNDY "BORE"

The Bay of Fundy "bore," or tidal wave, is a tidal phenomenon well worthy of note, as it is the longest in the world. It is caused by the sea forcing the water up the funnel-shaped bay and into the Petitcodiac river, where the water assumes the form of a white crested wave, or "bore." It occurs every time the tide comes in, and is from three to eight feet in height. The "bore" is seen to best advantage at the time of full moon, and is a very interesting sight.

DINNER TASTERS OF PARIS

Paris has a corps of professional dinner tasters, whose function it is to test and pass judgment upon all food prepared for banquets and similar occasions of state. When they "O. K." a dish it may be set before a king.

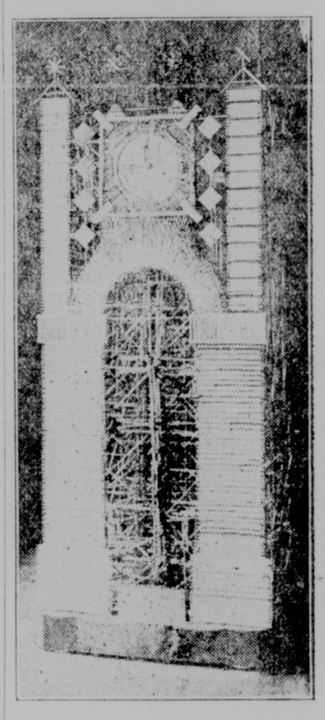
OLDEST CHAIR IN AMERICA

Hanover, Pa., lost the oldest and what is believed to be the most remarkable piece of furniture in America when the famous Bingley armchair, which has seen five centuries, was expressed to Hagerstown, Md., the home of Joseph Parker Bingley, who inherited it by the will of his father, the late John Jackson Bingley of Hanover. Kept as an heirloom, the ancient chair has been passed down from father to son for many generations. J. Edward Bingley of Baltimore, Md., is heir apparent to the coveted relic.

The chair is a massive piece of work, made in Yorkshire, England, in 1430. It represents the type of architecture popular in those days. English oak, inlaid with various kinds of wood, was used in its construction. The back is handsomely carved and at the top figures of birds are engraved. The joints are mortised and held together with wooden pegs.

Sixty-two years before Columbus discovered America this chair was built, and it remained in the town of Bingley, named from the ancestors of the present owner, during the reign of twenty English monarchs, from Henry VI. to Victoria. After a brief stay at Leeds, it was taken to Manchester.

In 1856 the chair was brought to this country on the ship Mary Hale and was landed at Baltimore. In the Civil war the chair was in Richmond, Va., where the owner temporarily left it in the care of a friend while he escaped to the north. Subsequently it was sent to Watertown, N. Y., and in 1894 was brought to Hanover.



FEEDING THE RATS

A Calcutta correspondent reports a "truly horrible incident" which befell an English lady. Her "butler" was in the habit of calling loudly beneath her window every evening about 7. His cry suggested that he was calling either the cattle or the chickens home; but though she had neither, the lady for some time took no notice, until one evening, having the curiosity to look, she was horrified to see the butler, like a dusky pied piper, surrounded by a troop of rats. There were quite 50 of them, from the big bandicoots to small muskrats, all being fed on the remains of her soup, meat and other bits. In a plague country this was an amusement that was speedily ended.

LIGHTING BY SUGAR

The suggestion has been put forward that there is every possibility that, in the near future, sugar will play an important part in the provision of a new method of artificial lighting. Experiments have shown that when disks of loaf sugar are placed on a lathe and rapidly rotated while a hammer plays lightly against them, there is an almost continuous radiation of artificial light. At present the practical value of the discovery is nil, but it is quite within the bounds of possibility that discoveries will soon be made that will render its practical application a certainty. The cause of the phenomena is not at present correctly understood, but it is probably due to some change in the formation of the sugar crystals. Cases where the act of crystallization is accompanied by flashes of light are not unknown and probably this is due to some similar cause. At any rate, this appears to be the only feasible explanation, as it has been proved that the light is not caused by the heating of the sugar during the experiment.

CLOCK MADE ALL OF STRAW

Ingenious men of many times and many lands have made numerous curious timepieces, but few of them surpass the clock built by a German shoemaker. It is made wholly of straw, several thousand pieces being used in its construction, and its total weight is seven ounces. There are eight pendulums and the mechanism is wound up by the pressing of a button, when it runs for five hours.

ROPES OF HUMAN HAIR

We are constantly getting some of our cherished ideas shattered by research. One of the stories which was not always accepted as an axiom relates to the ladies of Carthage, who, we were taught, cut off their hair, offered their tresses in the temples of the gods and then turned them into ropes for the warships when their country was threatened. The news now comes from Antwerp, through a French source, that a manufacturer in that city has turned his attention to this method of rope making. He asserts that human hair possesses great durability, a strand can lift just three-quarters of a ton, and another advantage is that such a rope does not stretch. The Amsterdam manufacturer's idea is to use his hair ropes for aeroplanes in place of wire stays.

Bones Evicted From Graves

It is the custom among the less wealthy classes in Greece to bury a body for three years only. At the end of that period the bones are exhumed, that room may be made in the grave for other bodies. The boxes and bundles of human bones, here shown awaiting removal by relatives or friends of the deceased, are seen outside the charnel-house of the cemetery at Athens.

New Year's In Scotland

by A. Ireland Robertson

THE stern, Cavinistic Puritanism of Scotland has doubtless to answer for some idiosyncrasies of the people. While it produced heroes and martyrs, men of unwavering probity and dauntless courage whose rigid adherence to their convictions compels respect, it was also responsible for a certain narrowness of vision and for intolerance in some directions. To these less estimable characteristics Scotland owed the doubtful distinction which she enjoyed till within the past few years of being the only Christian country in the world in which the greatest of the Christian festivals was ignored. Ignored it was, absolutely. Christian observances and Christmas festivities were anathema to the true-blue Scot of a generation ago. Not, be it noted, because he objected to mirth and joviality in themselves. Those who imagine that the old life of Scotland from year's end to year's end was dull, gray and colorless make a profound mistake. The observance of Christmas was ignored because it offended the religious susceptibilities of the Scot.

Even yet non-observance of Christmas must, in truth, be reckoned among the peculiarities of Scotland. A better, kinder and more tolerant spirit exists, but the old feeling is not quite dead. Moreover national customs and the usages of centuries are not to be changed quickly. Christmas observance in Scotland is, at the best, only in its infancy.

It is when Christmas festivities have come to an end, and roast turkey, goose, plum pudding and mince pies are but memories (more or less pleasant), that Scotland enters upon her great annual saturnalia. From time immemorial boisterous, and in many cases bacchanalian revelry has been associated with the close of the old and the opening of the new year. Formerly the period was distinguished by the significant title of "The Daft Days." The name was given more particularly to the season between Hogmanay (the last day of the year) and Handsel Monday (the first Monday after New Year's day), but, like the generosity which characterized it, the time was not strictly limited.

The name indicates very expressively the spirit, fun and uproarious joviality of the period and the irresponsibility of the revelers. While the Daft Days have now been shorn of some of their glory, much of the spirit remains. And although it is still, as it has been in the past, associated with foolish errors of judgment, it is, on the whole, a spirit to be cherished. For it is a genial spirit, a spirit of good will, of generosity and of hospitality. It is the Spirit of Christmas—a trifle belated.

The New Year in Scotland sees the union of sundered households. Now is the time when sons and daughters who have gone forth to the battle of life return to the old home and the old hearth; when ancient feuds are healed; when friends abroad are remembered with love and friends at home entertained. It is a spirit of generous hospitality which, as the year draws to a close, leads the guidman and the guidwife to lay in their kebbuck (a cheese), and a stock of shortbread, currant bun and other indigestible luxuries.

The first and, in most parts of Scotland, the greatest of the Daft Days was Hogmanay. Lexicographers have puzzled greatly over this term, and many guesses have been made as to its derivation and origin. It is said by some to come from the Scandinavian hoggu-nott, hogenat, or hogg-night, while others, perhaps the majority, hold that it comes from the French. The opening words of an old Scots' ditty, "Hogmanay, Trolloday," are supposed to be a coruption of Homme est ne—Trois Rois la. And Hogmanay is also said to be derived from Au gui menez!—a cry used by boys and girls in some parts of France when visiting houses on the last day of the year. Jamieson, the great authority on the Scots language, gives a big selection of derivations, and a writer who quotes several observes very ingenuously that "the reader may select for himself that which he considers the most probable."

It used to be customary in Scotland, and is still in some places, for bands of children to visit the houses of the well-to-do on the last day of the year for the purpose of receiving a "Hogmanay piece." The "piece" consists sometimes of oatmeal cake and cheese, but more frequently of richer dainties such as shortbread. It is not regarded by either givers or recipients as a dole; it is a hospitable gift in recognition of the season. Rhymes are recited by the children, but these vary in different localities. One which is still in use in Aberdeenshire and the north of Scotland runs thus:

"Get up, guidwife, an' shak' your feathers,
An' dinna think that we are beggars;
For we are bairns come oot to play;
Get up an' gie's oor Hogmanay."

One of the most common rhymes was the following brief couplet. Sometimes it was tacked on to one or other of those already given:

"Oor feet's cauld, oor shoon's thin,
Gie's a piece an' let's rin."

Another version has it:

"Gie's cor cakes, and let's rin."

Still another old greeting is:

"Hogmanay,
Trolloday,
Gie's o' your white bread, an' nane o' your gray."

There are many others; the children in some places singing a long ditty.

A Hogmanay custom of a very curious kind is peculiar to certain parts of the highlands. Young and old in the district gather at the house of some substantial farmer, and one of the stoutest of the company drags the dried hide of a cow round the house behind him, three times. The rest follow, beating the hide with sticks and singing the following extraordinary rhyme:

"Hogmanay, yellow bag,
Beat the skin.
Carlin in neuk, carlin in kirk,
Carlin ben at the fire,
Spit in her two eyes, spit in her stomach,
Hogmanay."

This is supposed to have something to do with warding off fairy spells, the evil eye and the effect of witchcraft generally. After completing the third round the company halt at the door and each person proceeds in a rough rhyme, more or less extemporized, to extol the hospitality of the owner of the house, upon which all are regaled with bread and butter, cheese and whisky. But the strange performance has an equally curious sequel. Before leaving the house one of the visitors, having solemnly burned the breast part of the skin of a sheep, puts it to the nose of everyone that he or she may smell it. There is no difficulty in doing so! It may not be nice, but as a protection against witchcraft it is infallible. It is also said to protect from infection.

"At Wemyss, a Curious New Year Game, Known as Yettlins, Has Been Played Since Time Immemorial."

In Carlisle—yes, I know Carlisle is not in Scotland, but it is so close to the border that I am not traveling very wide of my subject in mentioning a custom there. In Carlisle for weeks before the New Year householders are serenaded by boys who seek to entertain them with an odd mixture of the comic and the religious, generally winding up with a refrain after this fashion:

"If you cannot spare a penny,
You can spare a halfpenny;
And if you haven't a halfpenny,
God bless you."

The poetry halts badly, but the concluding sentiment is excellent.

In Elginshire and some other parts in the north there was a curious ditty called "The Thiggars' Chant," which was sung by a band of young persons who visited a number of houses on New Year's Day. It begins:

"The guid New Year is noo begun,
Besouthen, besouthen.
An' a' the beggars begin to run,
An' awa' by southern toon."

The guidwife is appealed to "be nae sweir" to deal her "fordels to the puir," and she is also warned that if she has plenty and will not give anything "the deil will get ye when ye dee." Even were she disinclined to be generous such a therat would, of course, compel hospitality. The party is invited to enter:

"Come in, come ben, you're welcome here
Besouthen, besouthen;
An' away' by southern toon."

Hogmanay was the chief night for the performances of the guisers of gysards, or guizards, although they did not confine themselves to that evening, their "season" continuing right through the Daft Days. In places in which guising still goes on the performances, however, are nearly always on the evening of Hogmanay. The guisers are masquers, and their drama bears some resemblance to the old Twelfth Night mumming in England, and, like it, is believed to be a relic of the mystery plays.

The versions found in different parts of the country are not identical, but they bear a certain family resemblance to each other. The dressing was not by rule, but was entirely dependent on the available "wardrobe." Sometimes the boy performers donned shirts which had belonged to their fathers, adorned their heads with paper caps, and had brilliant sashes round their waists in which were hung swords of lath, or metal if they could be obtained. The most simple form of guising was that in which two boys sang while a third, who was dressed as a girl, and known as Bessie, engaged in a number of antics.

But a more ambitious form was that of the Galashans, or Galatians, or Galoshens—the name varies. The Galashans wore hideous masks, paper caps, and such odd garments as they were able to get hold of. One of them announced himself thus:

"Not Because He Objected to Mirth and Joviality in Themselves."

"Galashan, Galashan,
Galashan is my name,
Sword and buckler by my side,
I hope to win the game."

To which another promptly and fiercely retorted:

"The game, sir, the game, sir,
Is not within your power;
I'll cut you down in inches
In less than half an hour."

A terrific battle ensued, and at last one of the performers was "cut down." A doctor was called for, and there entered a boy clad in a dark suit and a battered tall hat, carrying a bag supposed to contain the implements of his profession. He announced himself as:

"Dr. Brown,
The very best doctor in all the town."

After a number of antics, including the comic administration of pills from a huge box, the "dead man" was restored to life. Then "Bessie" went round with a money-box.

It is customary in Scotland to "sit out" the old year. In the towns the custom dates from time immemorial, but in the country it was long considered unlucky to be out of bed when the new year was ushered in. Early in the evening the children were washed and put to bed. An oat cake, known as a bannock, was baked for each, and great care had to be taken in the process of baking, for a child whose bannock was broken while being fired would not survive the following year. At half-past eleven the seniors went to bed, but before retiring they covered the fire and carefully swept up the hearth, carrying out of the house every particle of ash. An anxious eye was kept on the fire, however, for to have allowed it to expire before the new year began would have been unlucky.

But it was different in the towns. Then, as now, the streets were crowded at twelve o'clock at night on Hogmanay. It has been said that a generation ago the streets were busier at midnight on Hogmanay than at midday. A vast crowd still gathers every year at the Tron Kirk in Edinburgh, waiting till twelve o'clock strikes. A similar gathering is found at the town house or principal church in many other towns. In some places the bells are rung. In Dundee the advent of the new year is announced by the boom of the time gun.

Immediately the clock strikes twelve the crowds melt as by magic. Everybody rushes off to be "first-foot" to some of his friends. Formerly the first-footers carried a spiced bowl of wassail, a mixture composed of hot spiced ale, with a dash of whisky in it, and sometimes sugar and other ingredients. The concoction was known in Scotland as the "hot pint." In these days a bottle of whisky is carried.

No "first-foot" must enter a house "empty-handed." Of course the whisky bottle prevents any calamity happening on this score. The personality of the "first-foot," however, counts for much. It is of vital importance to have a lucky "first-foot," and fortunately there are many marks to distinguish the lucky from the unlucky. There are still persons to be found who would as soon admit his Satanic majesty as their first visitor for the year as an unlucky "first-foot." In some places the "first-foot" must be a bachelor, but this is not a common restriction. Among those who are to be reckoned lucky as a "first-foot" are clergymen, persons who spread out their feet, persons who were born feet first, persons noted for kindness, a sweetheart, etc. A horse is a lucky "first-foot." So is a hen. Among those who are unlucky in the role of "first-foot" we find associated persons with flat feet, thieves, persons who walk with their toes turned in, deformed persons, persons whose eyebrows meet, the hangman, the grave digger and (tell it not among members of the Women's Social and Political union, whisper it not in the ears of members of the Women's League of Freedom) women generally. A pig is an unlucky "first-foot," and so is a hare. Perhaps this may be useful information to some readers.

On New Year's day, and still more frequently on Handsel Monday, there used to be popular shooting matches or Wapinschaws. But difficulties with regard to the gun tax have ruined these.

Handsel Monday, as I have already mentioned, is the first Monday after New Year's day. It was so called because on this day servants, children and friends were presented with their handsel—a generic term for gifts in money or kind. In the towns Christmas boxes are supplanting handsel. Of course the thing is the same—the only difference being in the name.

At Wemyss, on the Fifeshire shore of the Firth of Forth, a curious New Year game, known as Yettlins, has been played since time immemorial. It appears to be peculiar to the locality. The play takes place over a portion of the shore called the Skelleys. The name indicates the nature of the place, for Skelleys is an old Scots word used to describe a stretch of flat rocks of a shelving formation. The course, if such it can be called, is about a mile in length, and is over the rocks all the way. At each end is a goal marked by a huge boulder. The yettlins, which give their name to the game, are balls of cast iron, about two and one-half inches in diameter and weighing about a pound and a half. Each player has a ball, and the object of the game is by repeated throws to cover the distance between the goals. The one who reaches the goal in fewest throws scores a "hail," and a certain number of hails constitute a game. The yettlin goes at immense speed when it is thrown, and the delivery is pretty high.

Another very remarkable local custom connected with the New Year is the burning of the clavie. It takes place in the little village of Burghead, on the southern shore of the Moray Firth, a few miles north of Elgin, and is quite unique. The ceremony is held invariably on New Year's eve old style. The clavie, which is built according to regulations rigidly fixed by ancient custom, consists of half an archangel tar barrel supported on a stout pole. It is packed with wood, which is piled up a foot above the brim, after which tar is poured over it copiously. Into a space which has been left in the center a piece of turf is put, it being imperative that no match should be employed. While the flame is gathering strength the crowd gives three cheers for the king, the provost, the town, the harbor and the railway. Then a stalwart fisherman seizes the blazing clavie and carries it off. As soon as he reaches the junction of two streets he is relieved, and in this way the clavie is carried round the town. At every street corner the bearer is changed. There is keen competition for the honor of carrying the clavie, but it is no light task. Not only is it a heavy burden, but the bearer runs some risk of being scalded by the boiling tar which bubbles and drops. Moreover, it is imperative on the bearer to run, in spite of the fact that a stumble implies his own death during the year and misfortune to the town

The Old Year and the New

Twelve strikes, and the bells are tolling,
For the dying year is dead.
With its failures and successes,
The old year has swiftly sped.

Hark! the bells are chiming, chiming
A peal for the dawning year.
Hope, with bright wings, rainbow tinted,
Softly whispers in our ear:

"Give the new-born year a greeting,
Pray that we may act aright;
Helping others, and for others
In life's battle let us fight."

May the New Year bring a blessing
On all men, afar and near;
Peace, and Love, and Hope be with us
In the dawning, glad New Year.

ADVERTISING AS A GUARANTEE.

Advertising is a guarantee of good faith. It is evidence of efficiency and success.

The advertising of local stores in such a town as ours is one of the cleanest phases of modern business. Retail trade attracts a substantial class of men who prefer to tell the truth for its own sake, and would not cheat their neighbors if they could.

Of course motives of self interest also warm them to take pains to make advertising produce disgrunted customers who can make a lot of trouble for a store which depends for success on its own townspeoples.

It men of less responsible character sometimes go into retail trade, they are too shrewd to make mis-statements in the cold publicity of advertising type. Our experience is that complaints of misrepresentation are almost never heard.

The public thus learns from experience that local store advertising is trustworthy. As it deals with such subjects of surpassing interest as cost of living and the fashions of the day, every line of it is read with most discriminating attention.

People like to read and think about stopping before visiting a store. A great many purchases are practically made from the newspaper before the buyer leaves home.

Futhermore, liberal advertising tells the public that a merchant is making good. Lack of it is interpreted as lack of confidence in one's business.

The firm that does not advertise is classed with the firm that seeks an obscure location in some remote side street, as too small to serve the public efficiently.

When a firm advertises freely, it gives the idea that it has a large trade to pay the expenses of the publicity. A big breezy impression of achievement is conveyed.

Nothing succeeds like success. Human nature is such, that to succeed, one must often give the impression that he has already succeeded. The public is slow to deal with propositions that do not suggest successful efficiency.

The man who has faith enough to discount the future a little, to put his earnings into his business, and by liberal advertising give the impression of having a big trade already, is sure to get it if only his goods are right.

IN OLD GARRETT.

Here in old Garrett county
From Potomac to Pa.
Lime and gravel, God's great bounty,
Supply best material for highway.
He intended us to use it,
No doubt, in building roads
To lighten some the burdens
Of the beasts that draw our loads.

But the rock is where He placed it,
And the gravel's in the pit,
Waiting unborn generations
To construct our roads of it.
We just keep on a pulling
Through the mud and up the grade,
Building roads with good intentions,
Like the devil's own are made.

We've got to answer for it
On the resurrection morn,
When good old Angel Gabriel
Sounds the summons on his horn.
We've got to give good reason
Why we didn't use that stone,
To the King of Golden Highways,
Sitting there upon His throne.

We'll have to stand before Him
And confess that we've been slow
To carry out His wishes
In this matter here below;
Stand there with guilty conscience
Hear some supervisor say
"Good Lord, we 'lowed to use it
If You hadn't come today."

IT HAS SETTLED DOWN FOR REAL WORK

General Assembly Reconvened at Annapolis Monday Night.

When the Legislature met Monday night the Garrett county representatives were all in their places.

The ladies who are marshalling the Woman's Suffrage forces had invited the members of the General Assembly to meet with them Monday, but, aside from several newspaper men, no males attended the proposed conference. This was not construed as a negative sentiment for the proposition of woman suffrage, but the non-attendance was due almost entirely to the fact that few of the members had as yet returned from spending the recess at their homes, it being late in the evening before most of the legislators put in an appearance at the State House.

By a vote of 73 to 6 the Democratic members of the Legislature in caucus nominated General Murray Vandiver for State Treasurer. Immediately after the vote was announced the selection of General Vandiver was made unanimous

The caucus was an interesting one, and, despite the fact that the friends of General Vandiver were in such full control, Senator Lee and his handful of followers made a gallant fight. They supported Mr. Robert G. Hilton, of Montgomery county. The smallness of the Hilton vote was a great surprise. While it had been generally believed in political circles for some weeks that General Vandiver would be re-elected treasurer, it was thought that, as a result of the opposition of Senator Lee, a good sized vote would be polled against him in the caucus. It was at least thought that the men who stood by Senator Lee in his fight to organize the Senate and house would follow him in his fight against General Vandiver, but they did not. Probably their desertion was due to the fact that they realized that General Vandiver had more than enough votes to insure his nomination and that personally they did not care to oppose him.

A Few Don't For Cold Weather.

Don't get the idea in your head that you are so well seasoned to frigid temperature that no amount of exposure will hurt you.

Don't think that frostbitten ears are of small moment. A frozen ear is a nuisance for a long time and always remains sensitive.

Don't let your feet become too much chilled. Chilblains are worse than the seven-year itch.

Don't believe all you hear about the benefit of cold air when the thermometer hovers around zero. There are many persons to whom extreme cold is anything but a tonic.

Don't persuade an anaemic individual who can hardly stand a bath in tepid water that what he needs in the morning is an ice cold tub. You may have to attend his funeral.

Don't neglect ordinary precautions about wrapping up on the theory that the thing to do is to "harden" one's self quickly. Doctors have had all they could do to pull some persons through who thought they had just reached the stage where nothing was too cold for them.

Don't forget to shut the door.
Don't forget the poor.

To the Editor of The Republican.

Whereas, it has been currently rumored in the neighborhood in which I live that the monument recently erected at the grave of my son, William McLean, cost the sum of $60. I, the father of the deceased, desire to deny this report and for the benefit of those who appear to be so much interested to state that this monument cost the sum of $110. It appears that these remarks have been spoken with a desire to injure myself and family and I wish to have the same ceased, and as I have not been able to trace the matter down as yet, I am, however, ready to prove to the satisfaction of anyone interested that the former statement is not correct and that the monument cost just exactly what I have said it did and which statement I am ready to prove.

Very respectfully.

A WILD RIDE DOWN SEVENTEEN MILE GRADE

Seven Dead Engines and a Live One in the Lead.

Seven dead engines and a live one in front, with caboose No. C1154 attached, had a wild ride down the seventeen mile grade of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad last Friday night, and it is almost a miracle that the train kept to the track and that no one was killed.

Conductor Sebolt was called at 6 p. m. to take the engines from Grafton to Cumberland and through to the Mt. Clare shops, and the train ran alright until after crossing the top of the grade and running two miles down from Altamont when the right main driving rod broke on the engine, No. 1855, hauling the train in charge of Engineer Frank Freeland. The engineer was compelled to leave his post as the rod, weighing several hundred pounds, had already torn away a part of the right side of the cab and was going up and down at a rapid rate. At the same time the train of engines started down the seventeen mile grade at an ever-increasing speed with nothing to stop the eight engines. The breakmen hurriedly set the hand brakes on the tank cars, but without effect, there being about twelve hundred tons weight in the train. When the train reached the bottom of the grade and was finally brought to a standstill the trammen all congratulated each other on having come through the wild ride down the mountain in safety. The front engine was almost torn to pieces on the side of the broken driving rod.

Besides Fireman Morrison, who was struck on the jaw by a piece of broken bolt and painfully injured, all escaped harm.

FINE DWELLING DESTROYED

Home of Mr. G. Semmes Hamill With Much of Its Furnishings Burned.

The handsome and well appointed home of Mr. G. Semmes Hamill, located on Alder street at the corner of Seventh, was burned at four o'clock Sunday morning. With the thermometer registering twenty degrees below zero, a young woman employed as a house girl was the first to discovered the fire, which originated in the furnace room. She ran from her room to the room occupied by Mr. Hamill and succeeded in arousing him just in time for him to save a portion of his wardrobe and escape to the street.

The furniture in three or four rooms on the lower floor of the building was saved by neighbors who responded to the alarm, but much very valuable and handsome furniture was consumed.

The loss amounts to several thousand dollars above the insurance, which was $9000.

The home of Mr. A. R. Sperry, of Harper's Ferry, who recently moved to that point from Mt. Lake Park, caught fire Sunday morning and would have been destroyed had it not been for the efforts of some of the citizens and students of Storer College. Mrs. Sperry has been quite ill for several weeks and was carried from the burning building to the home of a neighbor.

Rev. Hicks in his predictions for January, says: "The Mercury period is central on the 18th. Watch your barometer as this period develops. If it falls to very low reading, fierce winter gales will surely follow; rains will follow turning to destructive sleet; blizzards will rush down from the northwest, and a furious cold wave will wind up the storm turmoil about the 20th to 23rd.

Mr. William R. Offutt has purchased from Mr. D. M. Dixon a lot with a frontage of one hundred feet located on Second street and being a portion of the property recently purchased by Mr. Dixon from Mr. N. U. Bond, and upon which Mr. Offutt will erect a handsome dwelling as soon as the weather conditions will permit. The plans for the building are already in the hands of Mr. Offutt and it will be constructed of buff brick, Colonial style.

Considerable delay has been experienced in receiving the necessary repairs for the steam heating plant at the grammar school, which was put out of business more than a week ago by the freeze, hence an enforced vacation is being taken by both scholars and teachers. The probabilities are that the repairs will be here in time to instal them and have everything in readiness for school Monday morning.

Dr. Charles E. Shelton, superintendent of Mountain Lake Park, who has been residing in Washington since late in the fall, is now at the Park where he is superintending the harvest of ice from the lake. Yesterday quite a number of carloads were cut and shipped and a large quantity has already been stored in the Association's ice house for consumption next summer. The ice measures about ten inches in thickness and is clear as crystal.

A charter has been granted by the Secretary of State of West Virginia to the Eastern Panhandle Orchard Company, of Keyser, W. Va., to develop orchard lands, build cold storage and manufacture boxes. Authorized capital, $500,000. Incorporators: E. V. Romig, John T. Sincell and H. L. Arnold, of Keyser; W. W. Giffen, of Pittsburg; Dr. W. S. Bell, of Philadelphia. Some of the promoters have already been engaged in real estate deals, particularly orchard lands.

FORMER COLD WEATHER RECORDS ALL BROKEN

Oakland Experienced Coldest Day in Her History Saturday With 40° Below.

When Oakland awoke last Saturday morning her citizens were made keenly aware that it was not a summer day by a whole lot, but the surprise did not come until the thermometers had been read which showed the mercury standing at 40 degrees below zero—emphatically the coldest day ever experienced by our "oldest citizens." This record was made at 7.15 o'clock and registered as such at the green houses of Messrs. H. Weber & Sons Company upon a thermometer placed there by the U. S. Weather Bureau.

With the extreme weather prevailing naturally much suffering was experienced by railroad and other men who were compelled to be out of doors. Trains on the B. & O. ran from two to ten or more hours late and in some cases freight trains were brought to a standstill owing to the fact that the engines froze to the rails.

O. H. S. Notes.

Our literary program last Friday was well rendered. The debate was good and the debaters became enthusiastic over the question and manifested considerable persuasive ability. No doubt some of the students, on account of their drill in debating, will decide to follow the profession of law after completing the high school course. The question for debate was, Resolved, That Fire is more destructive than Water. The judges rendered a decision in favor of the negative.

Miss Hellice Rathbun sang several beautiful solos. She is a sweet singer and the students are always delighted to hear her. We hope she will sing often for us.

In the absence of our president, Miss Eleanor Hinebaugh, our vice president, Fred. Peddicord, occupied the chair. Fred is a good executive and filled the office with dignity.

The constitution for our society was unanimously adopted as drawn up and read before the society by our principal. We expect to conduct our society strictly in compliance with parliamentary proceedings.

Miss Eleanor Hinebaugh, who spent her Christmas vacation in Baltimore, returned to this breezy city Sunday, and is again pursuing her work at school.

On account of illness, two of our teachers, Misses Leary and Hamill, could not be at their post of duty last Monday.

Some of the boys are anxious to get up a glee club with the principal as their director. We hope this possibility will be made real. We would be glad to have the boys sing at our morning exercises, literaries and on other occasions.

We are getting ready a comedy, "The Daughter of the Desert," to be given soon. There are fifteen characters in this cast.

If there is a junk dealer in this community or anywhere else, who wishes to buy iron cheap he can do so by inquiring at the high school. We have about three tons of first class iron and steel to sell to the the first man that comes for it.

Likewise, if there is any school teacher in this community who would like to purchase a second-hand organ at a very low price for her school, she can buy such a one at the high school. Come and examine the organ. We will give you the best bargain on earth.

Owing to the death of Prof. Bender's father, which occurred Wednesday morning, the classes of Prof. Bender are in charge of Prof. Sanner, of the grammar school. The teachers and pupils of the school extend their sympathies to Prof. Bender in the loss of his father.

New Synod to Form.

A new Synod of the Ev. Lutheran church contained within certain prescribed bounds of the State of West Virginia and a portion of Maryland, including those churches of Garrett and Allegany counties, will be formed very shortly when the ministers and lay delegates meet for the purpose at Fairmont, W. Va., which city has been selected as the place of holding the conference. The date originally set for the meeting was on the 16th inst., but owing to the fact that while a large number of the churches in the bounds of the new conference have already voted on the matter and decided in favor of it, sufficient time has not elapsed since the subject was placed before the various congregations to allow all of them to vote, hence the meeting has been postponed and will not be held until sometime during the early days of February.

Local Option from Every Pulpit.

The Anti-Saloon League is planning to have the local option bill discussed from every pulpit in Maryland on January 28th and the replies already received from pastors assure the success of the movement. The League has prepared leaflets which will be supplied free to the churches for distribution to all voters to aid them in writing members of the legislature on the local option question. The League reports that interest is stronger than ever before among the church people of the state.

As usual the League's annual local option demonstration at the Lyric in Baltimore will be held on the same day as the concerted discussion. The speaker will be Hon. J. C. Pritchard of North Carolina, a Justice of the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals, who was formerly U. S. Senator and one of the leading factors in driving the saloons out of his state. He was recommended to the League by Hon. Seaborn Wright and will be introduced to the Lyric audience of men only by Hon. John C. Rose, U. S. District Judge, of Baltimore. Mr. J. Booker Clift who introduced the local option bill will speak briefly and Mr. Daniel Baker of the League's Headquarters Committee will bring brief greetings from the Men and Religion Movement, and the Superintendent will report on the campaign to date.

Skating Rink Notice.

The skating rink, located in the Brown building on Third street, will until further notice be open only on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday nights of each week.

SYNOPSIS.

Elam Harnish, known all through Alaska as "Burning Daylight," celebrates his 30th birthday with a crowd of miners at the Circle City Tivoli. The dance leads to heavy gambling, in which over $100,000 is staked. Harnish loses his money and his mine but wins the mail contract. He starts on his mail trip with dogs and sledge, telling his friends that he will be in the big Yukon gold strike at the start. Burning Daylight makes a sensationally rapid run across country with the mail, appears at the Tivoli and is now ready to join his friends in a dash to the new gold fields. Deciding that gold will be found in the up-river district Harnish buys two tons of flour, which he declares will be worth its weight in gold, but when he arrives with his flour he finds the big flat desolate. A comrade discovers gold and Daylight reaps a rich harvest. He goes to Dawson, becomes the most prominent figure in the Klondike and defeats a combination of capitalists in a vast mining deal. He returns to civilization.

CHAPTER VII.

In no blaze of glory did Burning Daylight descend upon San Francisco. Not only had he been forgotten, but the Klondike along with him. The world was interested in other things, and the Alaskan adventure, like the Spanish War, was an old story. He settled down in St. Francis Hotel, was interviewed by the cub-reporters on the hotel-run, and received brief paragraphs of notice for twenty-four hours.

Several months passed in San Francisco, during which time he studied the game and its rules, and prepared himself to take a hand.

Tiring of being merely an onlooker, he ran up to Nevada, where the new gold-mining boom was fairly started—"just to try a flutter," as he phrased it to himself. The flutter on the Tonopah Stock Exchange lasted just ten days, during which time his smashing, wild-bull game played ducks and drakes with the more stereotyped gamblers, and at the end of which time, having gambled Floridel into his fist, he let go for a net profit of half a million. Whereupon, smacking his lips, he departed for San Francisco and the St. Francis Hotel. It tasted good, and his hunger for the game became more acute.

And once more the papers sensationalized him. BURNING DAYLIGHT was a big-letter headline again. Interviewers flocked about him. Old files of magazines and newspapers were searched through, and the romantic and historic Elam Harnish, Adventurer of the Frost, King of the Klondike, and Father of the Sourdoughs, strode upon the breakfast table of a million homes along with the toast and breakfast foods. Even before his elected time, he was forcibly launched into the game. Financiers and promoters, and all the flotsam and jetsam of the sea of speculation surged upon the shores of his eleven millions. In self-defence he was compelled to open offices. He dabbled in little things at first—"stalling for time," as he explained it to Holdsworthy, a friend he had made at the Alta-Pacific Club. Daylight himself was a member of the club, and Holdsworthy had proposed him. And it was well that Daylight played closely at first, for he was astounded by the multitudes of sharks—"ground-sharks," he called them—that flocked about him. He saw through their schemes readily enough, and even marveled that such numbers of them could find sufficient prey to keep them going. Their rascality and general dubiousness was so transparent that he could not understand how any one could be taken in by them.

So it was that he resolved to leave the little men, the Holdsworthys, alone; and, while he met them in good fellowship, he chummed with none, and formed no deep friendships. He did not dislike the little men, the men of the Alta-Pacific, for instance. He merely did not elect to choose them for partners in the big game in which he intended to play. What this big game was, even he did not know. He was waiting to find it. And in the meantime he played small hands, investing in several arid-lands reclamation projects and keeping his eyes open for the big chance when it should come along.

And then he met John Dowsett, the great John Dowsett. It was the first big magnate Daylight had met face to face, and he was pleased and charmed. There was such a kindly humanness about the man, such a genial democraticness, that Daylight found it hard to realize that this was the John Dowsett, president of a string of banks, insurance manipulator, reputed ally of the lieutenants of Standard Oil, and known ally of the Guggenhammers. Nor did his looks belie his reputation and his manner. Physically, he guaranteed all that Daylight knew of him. Despite his sixty years and snow-white hair, his hand-shake was firmly hearty, and he showed no signs of decrepitude, walking with a quick, snappy step, making all movements definitely and decisively.

It was not long afterward that Daylight came on to New York. A letter from John Dowsett had been the cause—a simple little typewritten letter of several lines. But Daylight had thrilled as he read it. The bald sentences seemed gorged with mystery. "Our Mr. Howison will call upon you at your hotel. He is to be trusted. We must not be seen together. You will understand after we have had our talk." Daylight conned the words over and over. That was it. The big game had arrived, and it looked as if he were being invited to sit in and take a hand. Surely, for no other reason would one man so peremptorily invite another man to make a journey across the continent.

They met—thanks to "our" Mr. Howison—up the Hudson, in a magnificent country home. Daylight, according to instructions, arrived in a private motor car which had been furnished him. Dowsett was already there, and another man whom Daylight recognized before the introduction was begun. It was Nathaniel Letton, and none other. Daylight had seen his face a score of times in the magazines and newspapers, and read about his standing in the financial world, and about his endowed University of Daratona. He, likewise, struck Daylight as a man of power, though he was puzzled in that he could find no likeness to Dowsett. Except in the matter of cleanness—a cleanness that seemed to go down to the deepest fibers of him—Nathaniel Letton was unlike the other in every particular. Thin to emaciation, he seemed a cold flame of a man. Not more than fifty, thatched with a sparse growth of iron-gray hair, he looked several times the age of Dowsett.

They drank—that is, Nathaniel Letton took mineral water served by the smoothly operating machine of a lackey who inhabited the place, while Dowsett took Scotch and soda and Daylight a cocktail. Leon Guggenhammer arrived in the midst of the drink, and ordered Scotch. Daylight studied him curiously. This was one of the great Guggenhammer family; a younger one, but nevertheless one of the crowd with which he had locked grapples in the North. Nor did Leon Guggenhammer fail to mention cognizance of that old affair. He complimented Daylight on his prowess—"The echoes of Ophir came down to us, you know. And I must say, Mr. Daylight—er, Mr. Harnish, that you whipped us roundly in that affair."

Leon Guggenhammer was young and fat. Not a day more than thirty, his face, save for the adumbated puff sacks under the eyes, was as smooth and lineless as a boy's. The talk soon centered down to business. Dowsett broached the plan, aided by an occasional remark from the other two, while Daylight asked questions. Whatever the proposition was, he was going into it with his eyes open. And they filled his eyes with the practical vision of what he had in mind.

"I Must Say, Mr. Harnish, That You Whipped Us Roundly in That Affair."

"They will never dream you are with us," Guggenhammer interjected, as the outlining of the matter drew to a close, his handsome Jewish eyes flashing enthusiastically. "They'll think you are raiding on your own in proper buccaneer style."

"Of course, you understand, Mr. Harnish, the absolute need for keeping our alliance in the dark," Nathaniel Letton warned, gravely.

Daylight nodded his head.

"And you also understand," Letton went on, "that the result can only be productive of good. The thing is legitimate and right, and the only ones who may be hurt are the stock gamblers themselves. It is not an attempt to smash the market. As you see yourself, you are to bull the market. The honest investor will be the gainer."

"Yes, that's the very thing," Dowsett said. "The commercial need for copper is continually increasing. Ward Valley Copper, and all that it stands for—practically one-quarter of the world's supply, as I have shown you—is a big thing, how big, even we can scarcely estimate. Our arrangements are made. We have plenty of capital ourselves, and yet we want more. Also, there is too much Ward Valley out to suit our present plans. Thus we kill both birds with one stone. Not only will you bull Ward Valley, but you will at the same time gather Ward Valley in. This will be of inestimable advantage to us, while you and all of us will profit by it as well. And as Mr. Letton has pointed out, the thing is legitimate and square. On the eighteenth the directors meet, and, instead of the customary dividend, a double dividend will be declared."

"There will be all sorts of rumors on the street," Dowsett warned Daylight, "but do not let them frighten you. These rumors may even originate with us. You can see how and why clearly. But rumors are to be no concern of yours. You are on the inside. All you have to do is buy, buy, buy, and keep on buying to the last stroke, when the directors declare the double dividend. Ward Valley will jump so that it won't be feasible to buy after that."

"And one other thing, Mr. Harnish," Guggenhammer said, "if you exceed your available cash, or the amount you care to invest in the venture, don't fail immediately to call on us. Remember, we are behind you."

"Yes, we are behind you," Dowsett repeated.

Nathaniel Letton nodded his head in affirmation.

CHAPTER VIII.

Back at his hotel, though nearly two in the morning, he found the reporters waiting to interview him. Next morning there were more. And thus, with blare of paper trumpet, was he received by New York. Once more, with beating of tom-toms and wild hullaballoo, his picturesque figure strode across the printed sheet. The King of the Klondike, the hero of the Arctic, the thirty-million-dollar millionaire of the North, had come to New York. What had he come for? To trim the New Yorkers as he had trimmed the Tonopah crowd in Nevada?

They were prepared for him to play, and, when heavy buying of Ward Valley began, it was quickly decided that he was the operator. Financial gossip buzzed and hummed. He was after the Guggenhammers once more. The story of Ophir was told over again and sensationalized until even Daylight scarcely recognized it. Still, it was all grist to his mill. The stock gamblers were clearly befooled. Each day he increased his buying, and so eager were the sellers that Ward Valley rose but slowly. A wildly exciting time was his during the week preceding Thursday the eighteenth. Not only was he gambling as he had never gambled before, but he was gambling at the biggest table in the world for stakes so large that even the case-hardened habitues of that table were compelled to sit up. In spite of the unlimited selling, his persistent buying compelled Ward Valley steadily to rise, and as Thursday approached, the situation became acute. Something had to smash. How much Ward Valley was this Klondike gambler going to buy? How much could he buy? What was the Ward Valley crowd doing all this time? Daylight appreciated interviews with them that appeared—interviews delightfully placid and non-committal. Leon Guggenhammer even hazarded the opinion that this Northland Croesus might possibly be making a mistake. But not that they cared, John Dowsett explained. "It is purely gambling from beginning to end," were Nathaniel Letton's words; "and we refuse to have anything to do with it or to take notice of it in any way."

During this time Daylight had several secret meetings with his partners—one with Leon Guggenhammer, one with John Dowsett, and two with Mr. Howison. Beyond congratulations, they really amounted to nothing; for, as he was informed, everything was going satisfactorily. But on Tuesday morning a rumor that was disconcerting came to Daylight's ears. It was also published in the Wall Street Journal, and it was to the effect, on apparently straight inside information, that on Thursday, when the directors of Ward Valley met, instead of the customary dividend being declared, an assessment would be levied. It was the first check Daylight had received. It came to him with a shock that if the thing were so he was a broken man. And it also came to him that all this colossal operating of his was being done on his own money. Dowsett, Guggenhammer and Letton were risking nothing. It was a panic, shortlived, it was true, but sharp enough while it lasted to make him remember Holdsworthy and the brick-yard, and to impel him to cancel all buying orders while he rushed to a telephone.

"Nothing in it—only a rumor," came Leon Guggenhammer's throaty voice in the receiver. "As you know," said Nathaniel Letton, "I am one of the directors, and I should certainly be aware of it were such action contemplated." And John Dowsett: "I warned you against just such rumors. There is not an iota of truth in it—certainly not. I tell you on my honor as a gentleman."

Heartily ashamed of himself for his temporary loss of nerve, Daylight returned to his task. The cessation of buying had turned the Stock Exchange into a bedlam, and down all the line of stocks the bears were smashing. Ward Valley, as the apex, received the brunt of the shock, and was already beginning to tumble. Daylight calmly doubled his buying orders. And all through Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday morning, he went on buying, while Ward Valley rose triumphantly higher. Still they sold, and still he bought, exceeding his power to buy many times over, when delivery was taken into account. What of that? On this day the double dividend would be declared, he assured himself. The pinch of delivery would be on the shorts. They would be making terms with him.

And then the thunderbolt struck. True to the rumor, Ward Valley levied the assessment. Daylight threw up his arms. He verified the report and quit. Not alone Ward Valley, but all securities were being hammered down by the triumphant bears. As for Ward Valley, Daylight did not even trouble to learn if it had fetched bottom or was still tumbling. Not stunned, not even bewildered, while Wall Street went mad, Daylight withdrew from the field to think it over. After a short conference with his brokers, he proceeded to his hotel, on the way picking up the evening papers and glancing at the head-lines. BURNING DAYLIGHT CLEANED OUT, he read; DAYLIGHT GETS HIS; ANOTHER WESTERNER FAILS TO FIND EASY MONEY.

He passed up to his rooms, ordered a Martini cocktail, took off his shoes, and sat down to think. After half an hour he roused himself to take the drink, and as he felt the liquor pass warmingly through his body, his features relaxed into a slow, deliberate, yet genuine grin. He was laughing at himself.

"Buncoed, by gosh!" he muttered.

A FEDERAL HEALTH BOARD.

It is gratifying to note that the bill for the creation of a federal health board will not be allowed to pass without a protest. Reports of organized resistance come from all parts of the country, and it may be that the opposition will soon be sufficiently solidified to defeat a project that promises infinite mischief for the community, and suffering and injustice for the individual.

The proposal is based upon those specious claims that are notoriously hard to controvert. If a federal health board were to confine its activities to the promulgation of salutary advice upon hygienic matters, to the abatement of quackery, and to the purity of drugs, it might be possible to say much in its favor, although it would still be difficult to say that such an organization is needed. But we know that it will attempt to do far more than this, seeing that its adherents have loudly proclaimed their intentions. Indeed, there is no secrecy about them. It is confidently expected that the board will consist of advocates of one school of medicine only and that the methods of that school will be not only recommended, but enforced upon the nation. Indeed a board that was in any way representative of the medical profession as a whole would be stultified by its own disagreements. Outside the domain of simple hygiene, for which we need no federal board at all, there is no single point of medical practice upon which allopaths, homeopaths, eclectics and osteopaths could be in unison. Any board that could be devised by the wit of man must be composed of representatives of one school only, and this means that all other schools are branded as of an inferior caste, even though nothing worse happened to them. And something worse would happen to them. If we are to establish a school of medicine, if we are to assert that the government of the United States favors one variety of practice more than others, why not establish also a sect of religion and bestow special authorities upon Baptists, Methodists and Episcopalians? An established school of religious conjecture seems somewhat less objectionable than an established sect of pseudo-scientific conjecture.

Those who suppose that a federal board of health would have no concern with individual rights are likely to find themselves undeceived. It is for the purpose of interfering with individual rights that the proposal has been made. We need no special knowledge of conditions to be aware that what may be called unorthodox methods of healing have made sad inroads into the orthodox. Homeopathy claims a vast number of adherents who are just as well educated and just as intelligent as those who adhere to the older school. Osteopathy, eclecticism, and half a dozen other methods of practice are certainly not losing ground. Beyond them is the vast and increasing army of those who may be classed under the general and vague name of mental healers. Those who are addicted to any of these forms of unorthodoxy need have no doubt as to the purposes of the federal health board. Those purposes are to make it difficult for them to follow their particular fads and fancies, to lead them, and if necessary to drive them, from medical unorthodoxy to medical orthodoxy.

Now the Argonaut holds no brief for any of the excesses and the superstitions connected with the care of the body in which this age is so rife. But it does feel concerned for the preservation of human liberty and for the rights of the individual to doctor himself in any way he pleases so long as he does not indubitably threaten the health of the community. He may take large doses or small ones, or no doses at all; he may be massaged, anointed with oil, or prayed over, just as the whim of the moment may dictate, and probably it makes no particle of difference which he does. But he has the right to choose, just as he chooses the color of his necktie or the character of his underclothing. It is not a matter in which any wise government will seek to interefere. This is precisely the liberty that the health board intends to take from him. Orthodox medicine, conscious of its losses, is trying to buttress itself by federal statute, to exalt allopathy to the status of a privileged caste, and to create an established school of medicine just as some other countries have allowed themselves to create an established school of religion. It is for the common sense of the community to rebuke that effort and to repel an unwarranted invasion upon elementary human rights.—San Francisco Argonaut.

A FREQUENT QUESTION ANSWERED.

Western Canada probably suffered less from weather conditions during the year of 1911 than did almost any other portion of the country. Seeding was most successful and the growing conditions up to July were never better. Crops of all kinds showed wonderful growth at that time and were universally good, but there was not the usually excellent ripening weather in August and the effects of this were felt. Many fields that late in July promised 40 and 50 bushels yield of wheat were reduced to 25 and 30 bushels, while some of course gave the full expectancy and others somewhat less. The quality was also lowered. In face of these conditions, it is found that during the months of September and October, the total amount of contract wheat marketed and inspected was about 20 million bushels, which realized a total of 18½ million dollars, the average price for this wheat being 97¾ cents; that below contract for the two months was a little over 15 million bushels, which at an average price of 89½ cents per bushel realized a little over eleven million dollars, or a grand total for all wheat of 35 million bushels, which realized a total of a little over thirty-one million dollars.

On the first of November, there was in the hands of the farmers of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta for sale and seed about 130 million bushels of wheat, from which fact some idea may be had of the value of the wheat crop of 1911.

A careful canvass made by the Winnipeg Free Press made of a number of men farming in a large way indicates that even with the extreme expense of harvesting the crop, which has been caused by the bad weather and difficulty in threshing, wheat has been produced and put on the market for less than 55 cts. a bushel. The average freight rate is not over 13 cts. per bushel. This would make the cost of production and freight 65 cts. and would leave the farmer an actual margin on his low-grade wheat of 17½ cts. and for his high-grade wheat of 19½ cts.; and though this is not as large a profit as the farmer has every right to expect, it is a profit not to be despised, and which should leave a very fair amount of money to his credit when all the expenses of the year have been paid, unless the value of low-grade wheat sinks very much below its present level.

Lady—How much for children's pictures?

ECZEMA DISFIGURED BABY

"Our little boy Gilbert was troubled with eczema when but a few weeks old. His little face was covered with sores even to back of his ears. The poor little fellow suffered very much. The sores began as pimples, his little face was disfigured very much. We hardly knew what he looked like. The face looked like raw meat. We tied little bags of cloth over his hands to prevent him from scratching. He was very restless at night, his little face itched.

"We consulted two doctors at Chicago, where we resided at that time. After trying all the medicine of the two doctors without any result, we read of the Cuticura Remedies, and at once bought Cuticura Soap and Ointment. Following the directions carefully and promptly we saw the result, and after four weeks, the dear child's face was as fine and clean as any little baby's face. Every one who saw Gilbert after using the Cuticura Remedies was surprised. He has a head of hair which is a pride for any boy of his age, three years. We can only recommend the Cuticura Remedies to everybody." (Signed) Mrs. H. Albrecht, Box 883, West Point, Neb., Oct. 26, 1910. Although Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold by druggists and dealers everywhere, a sample of each, with 32-page book, will be mailed free on application to "Cuticura," Dept. 14 L, Boston.

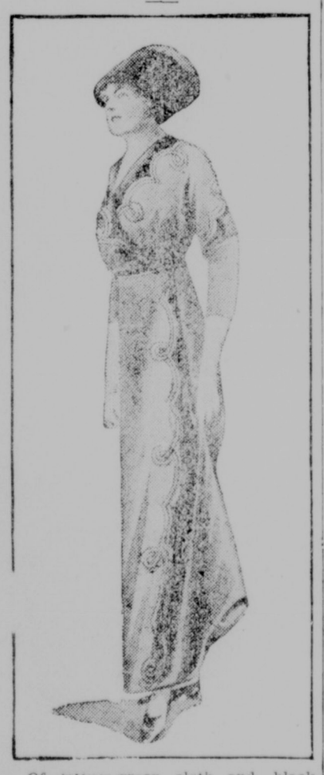
Fancy Feathers



EVERY season brings out many things new and strange in fancy feathers. As a rule these feather pieces are beautiful because the feathers from which they are made are beautiful, to start with, and because the designers of feather trimmings work with great enthusiasm. A successful piece means a great demand, which spells profit for the manufacturer. Then, the variety and beauty of the markings in natural feathers, and the wonderful changes which can be made in them by processes of bleaching, dyeing and piecing make possible an inexhaustible variety of design.

Makers of fancy feathers govern themselves, in a measure, by the hat shapes which prove to be popular. They follow the lead of fashion in the matter of color because they must. Great quantities of white, and black and white, pieces are designed and are salable every season. A well made fancy feather is a very satisfactory trimming. When hats must stand constant wear, there is nothing to be preferred before them. They stand wind and weather and many of them may even be successfully cleaned with soap and water.

The making of feather pieces is a great industry. All domestic fowls and many wild ones contribute plumage for this purpose. Feathers are so changed by clipping, bleaching, dyeing and by combination with other feathers that only the expert can tell what the original "raw" feathers came from.

JULIA BOTTOMLEY.

WINTER COSTUME

Proper Way to Fit Blouse.

Always begin at the shoulders in fitting a blouse. If the shoulders fit in the proper manner, you need have no fear about the rest of the bodice. Always cut the center front of a bodice on the straight of the material. If necessary, it may be taken in very slightly at the waist when being fitted. But if you slope it much the set of the blouse will be wrong, and this is true even when it is to fit a very stout figure.

Velvet Duster.

There is nothing better than a piece of velvet for removing dust from velvet. It is equally good for cleaning taffeta garments. If the velvet is made into a cushion like the ones which come with men's silk hats, it is a little handier to work with.

WHITE HAVING GREAT VOGUE

Striking Novelties Shown in This Most Approved of All Colors for the Winter.

Among the most striking novelties of the season are the gowns and tailored costumes of white corduroy, cloth or serge. While corduroy suits are made with little trimming other than buttons and clever manipulations of the material itself. Little panels in which the thick ribs run horizontally make surprisingly effective decorations. On the cloth costumes corduroy is often seen in collars, cuffs and buttons. Among the more unusual white cloth suits is one with bands of wide black silk braid running straight around the skirt and sleeves and adorning the large collar and revers. One of the handsomest of the white cloth gowns has a plain skirt, with a row of buttons of the same material down the left side. Although the lines of the skirt are of the straightest and it has the appearance in front of being almost extremely narrow, there is a single big pleat in the back that gives it considerable actual width. The waist of the gown is of a coarse hand-made lace, with a wide collar and cuffs of the cloth. There is a rather wide, shaped, stitched cloth belt, which is broken in front by the lace of the waist coming over it. A little satin vest and a stock, cascade and undersleeves of fine creamy lace complete the dress.

Tailored Suits.

The skirts of tailored costumes continue decidedly narrow, although sufficient fullness is allowed to give ample room for walking. The new jackets, with slightly cutaway fronts, extend just to the hips at the sides and a little longer in the back. The advent of longer jackets, cut half and three-quarter length, is rumored from abroad, but for the remainder of this year at least hip-length jackets are considered the correct length.

Silk velvet is used for facing the deep collars, wide revers and cuffs, in many instances forming simulated petticoat effects at the lower edge of the skirt. The regulation coat sleeve, trimmed with a three to five-inch turnback cuff, is the rule, the kimono sleeve being confined to the extremely dressy type of suit.—Harper's Bazar.

For Chapped Hands.

A remedy for chapped hands take from an old country doctor's note book calls for one ounce each of glycerine and aqua rosa, with six drops of carbolic acid.

The KITCHEN CABINET

LET'S not despise just common things,
For here's a truth there is no dodging.
The bird that soars on proudest wings
Comes down to earth for board and lodging. —Nixon Waterman.

THINGS WORTH KNOWING.

When a clock refuses to run it is often because it needs oiling, and an easy way to oil it is to saturate a piece of absorbent cotton and place it in the bottom of the clock. The oil will evaporate and oil the works.

Old bed spreads are useful for many things. A large part may be used for silence cloths on card tables, or if enough is good, one for a dining table. The smaller pieces may be made double and used as bath mats. The small pieces make fine wash cloths; so every bit may be used.

A small-sized baking powder can, with a few holes punched in the bottom, makes a fine food chopper, and can be used to chop potatoes while they are frying.

If a coffee or spice mill is needed for other grinding, it can be nicely cleaned by running a few dry crackers through it or a little rice.

If velvet bows get mussed on hat or gown, wrap the heated curling tongs with a wet cloth and steam them into shape again.

If sweaters and knitted garments are dried on coat hangers they will look much more shapely.

Save all fruit juices to use in frozen dishes or for pudding sauces.

Puffed rice makes much more delicious balls than popcorn, as there are never any hard kernels in the rice to cause discomfort when eating.

When steel knives are laid away, if wrapped in tissue paper they will keep bright.

THE clouds that cover the sunshine,
They cannot banish the sun.
And the earth shines out the brighter
When the weary rain is done.
We must stand in the deepest shadow
To see the clearest light;
And often through wrong's own darkness
Comes the very strength of light.

HINTS FOR THE HOUSEKEEPER.

This is the season of the year when we get our best nuts, and those who are living without meat find they prove a good substitute.

Olive oil, cream and butter are all valuable foods and should be used freely.

The plan of keeping a house purse downstairs near at hand will save many steps and much time.

Cookies and cakes in stone jars with pieces of orange or lemon peel will find them delicately flavored.

A child's broom will be found most useful in sweeping under heavy pieces of furniture or in small spaces where it is not easy to use a broom.

Keep two calendars at hand; they will be found most useful, one to tear off, the other to keep to refer back to past dates when necessary.

A dainty little ruching for the house dress is made of the footing of lace used a good deal a few years ago. Baste or plait on double to a narrow binding, and put into the necks of all the washable morning dresses. These ruchings launder well.

A very easy way to tint lace any desired color is to use oil paints, the kind which comes in small tubes used by artists. Thin it with gasoline and dip a small piece of lace to get the right shade.

To make handkerchiefs look like new that have been washed, iron when very damp, or add a very little starch to the rinse water.

Instead of sweeping the carpets so much with a broom, cover the broom with a bag, dampen slightly and rub it over the carpet in the direction of the pile. It will not be necessary to sweep it so often.

Before writing a letter, a great help is to jot down items which may be written about; in that way a good letter is written and when it is sealed and on its way one is not so apt to remember that the most important thing was left unsaid.

Getting His Bearings.

A man who had been making a night of it zigzagged up Broadway in the first dawn of a morning not long ago. The traveler seemed so uncertain as to his destination that a policeman standing at Thirtieth street and Broadway went over to inquire.

"Where do you live?" he asked.

"I'm f'm out o' town," replied the stranger.

"What hotel are you stopping at then?"

"If this is Cleveland it's the Hollenden; if I'm in N'York it's the Waldorf."—New York Sun.

JUDGED BY THEIR CLOTHES

Smart Cigar Store Clerk Ready With Apology That by No Means Mended Situation.

Herman Fellner tells this story on himself, according to the New York correspondent of the Cincinnati Times Star. He was in Washington on business recently and met three or four friends on the street. After a moment's chat he beckoned them to come with him. "I'm off the stuff," said he, "but I want to buy you each a cigar."

They happened to be in front of a combination cigar and news stand at the moment. Led by Mr. Fellner, they all trooped in. The clerk hurried to the cigar case to wait upon them. Before Mr. Fellner could indicate his wishes the clerk had slapped a box on the glass case. "Here y' are," said he. "Best dime smoker in town."

Mr. Fellner is sort of fussy about his smokes. He looked at the cigar then shoved the box away. "Have you no other price?" he asked.

The clerk shoved the box in the case. "Sure thing," said he. "My mistake and your treat."

Having pulled off this time-worn witticism, he addressed Mr. Fellner confidentially. "Your clothes sort of fooled me," said he. "You fellers are a pretty well-dressed lot, you know." Then he put another box on the counter. "Here," said he, "is the best nickel smoker in the village."

Mrs. Weeds—You can carve any figure, I suppose?

The Tombstone Man—Oh! yes, ma'am.

Baltimore French.

A Baltimore boniface tells of a waiter in that city who lately announced that he had taken up the study of the French language.

"Do you find it necessary here?" asked the patron to whom the man confided this bit of information.

"Not here, sir," explained the waiter; "but I've been offered a steady job in Paris at one of the hotels if I can learn French."

"But Paris is full of French waiters," said the patron. "I'm afraid you're being deceived."

"No, sir," said the man, with much earnestness and absolute simplicity. "The proposition's a straight one. The proprietor of the hotel says that the waiters he has can't understand French as we Baltimoreans speak it, and that's what he wants me for, you see."—Lippincott's.

Housework Drudgery

Housework is drudgery for the weak woman. She brushes, dusts and scrubs, or is on her feet all day attending to the many details of the household, her back aching, her temples throbbing, nerves quivering under the stress of pain, possibly dizzy feelings. Sometimes rest in bed is not refreshing, because the poor tired nerves do not permit of refreshing sleep. The real need of weak, nervous women is satisfied by Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription.

It Makes Weak Women Strong and Sick Women Well.

This "Prescription" removes the cause of women's weaknesses, heals inflammation and ulceration, and cures those weaknesses so peculiar to women. It tranquilizes the nerves, encourages the appetite and induces restful sleep.

Dr. Pierce is perfectly willing to let every one know what his "Favorite Prescription" contains, a complete list of ingredients on the bottle-wrapper. Do not let any unscrupulous druggist persuade you that his substitute of unknown composition is "just as good" in order that he may make a bigger profit. Just smile and shake your head!

Was Painfully Injured.

Holmes Browning, employed as helper in the Yellowly blacksmith shop on Water Street, was painfully injured Friday when a piece of steel three-sixteenths of an inch thick, which he was using as a rod to force burned powder from the barrel of a gun he was repairing, passed entirely through his hand from a point near his little finger to the first joint of his thumb. The wound was dressed by Dr. McComas.

A Serious Fire.

The tannery at Gormania, W. Va., owned and operated by the John G. Hoffman & Sons Co., of Wheeling, was partially destroyed by fire on Saturday, the loss being very heavy. The blaze was discovered in the "hair room" of the tannery and a bucket brigade was quickly organized. After a three hours fight under most disadvantageous circumstances, notably the zero weather, the flames were gotten under control, but not until the plant was seriously damaged.

DAVIS PATENT STEEL RANGES.

To the Public:

C. S. DAVIS
Patentee of Davis Steel Ranges.

This advertisement will tell you of the special features of the DAVIS STEEL RANGES and we trust you will take the time to look it through and to note the many improvements and advantages peculiar to its construction.

In the preparation of this circular which tells about Davis' Steel Ranges we have given what may prove to some a lengthy detailed description. We believe, however, that the housewife who is contemplating the purchase of the one thing which more than all others will make her daily tasks easy and pleasurable if rightly chosen, but a constant round of vexing troubles if a mistake is made, will be glad to learn all we can say about our Ranges. In giving the description we have endeavored to overlook nothing and have been rigidly honest. There is not one word of exaggeration from start to finish. The purpose is to make you know as much about the Range as we do, and this purpose would be defeated if we exaggerated. We have enough faith in your good judgment to omit the "bewares" and "caustions" and "don'ts" and feel perfectly safe in resting our case when you have learned all about our Ranges. In reading the description please note carefully the features which make for convenience, economy and durability, the best and most complete Ranges offered to the trade.

The Price is Just Right—Not so low that anything is slighted, not so high that you can afford to be without it. Made on honor and to give perfect satisfaction every day it is used. The handsomest Steel Range made, and yet it is not like many that requires one-half of a woman's time to keep it clean. The top is the only place where stove polish can be used; and requires no more work to keep it clean than a piece of varnished furniture. The heaviest Range on the market and the easiest to keep clean. Perfect satisfaction with it everywhere.

Construction—It is needless for us to call your attention to the general construction and appearance of the Ranges and that it takes up less floor space and has more room than any style of ranges, from the fact it is built up square, every inch of space is utilized, can be placed in any corner as all the working parts are operated from the front, making it unnecessary to have a left hand or a right hand fire-box and with the reservoir style, you have a longer extended closet shelf than is generally used, extending the full length of the range, adding very much to the convenience and room while operating the Range.

Salesmen—Concerns which still employ traveling demonstrators and special salesmen to go about the country and give exhibitions have to charge high prices to meet expenses, but why should you pay for having the qualities of a range demonstrated to you? Does a lot of factory-made talk and a little sample of cooking, produced under special conditions, help you any in selecting a range which will likely be used for different service entirely under such condition as exist in your own home? Don't let the enthusiasm of such special occasions overcome your calm judgment. Look around; investigate; compare, and learn how you may try it in your own home, in your own way, to your own satisfaction.

Twenty-Five Reasons Why You Should Buy Davis' Steel Ranges

1 Positive stop motion grates and bars without cogwheels; cannot get out of place.

2 All sizes and styles of Davis Ranges take same grates and liners.

3 Rocking grates with poker and lid lifter shaker making it easy to operate and can be used for wood or coal.

4 Extended lugs on end of grate bars that act as guards to prevent ciders from clogging or wedging between the tilted bars.

5 A grate rest with large openings next to oven, avoiding any accumulation of ashes.

6 Twenty-pound oven liners with large open air spaces behind so ashes cannot accumulate behind liners but will pass through grate rest slot to ash pit.

7 The grates are three in number, have rocker motion, cannot warp, twist or burn out if properly cared for.

8 Has poker shaker that requires very little strength to operate and allow the operator to stand straight while shaking out the ashes.

10 Double weight cast iron tops that will stand the heat and strain, wearing twice as long as light weight tops.

12 Incased reservoir heated by contact without damper, thus avoiding any accumulating of soot around reservoir that lifts out and is always clean.

13 The top and sides of the oven are made of one single piece of heavy steel making the oven dust and gas tight.

17 Cast back flues that will not burn out or rust through.

20 Takes up less floor space and has more room and conveniences than any other style of range.

21 Built up square; every inch of space is utilized; can be placed in any corner, as all working parts are operated from the front.

22 Lower closet under reservior for fire tools, flat irons, etc., or for kindlings.

24 Large and correctly proportioned fire box and flues insuring perfect combustion without waste of heat or fuel.

25 The flue bottom between the oven and the floor is made of two sheets of heavy steel with an interlining of asbestos board one-fourth inch thick, thus causing the oven to bake evenly and protecting the floor.

The Davis Range has been tested and tried by all classes of trade. Hundreds are now in use throughout different States. The improvements have been worked out by actual tests in order that we might offer to the trade a Range with the weak points eliminated.

We solicit your order if in need of a Range. Shipment made from stock or factory. Freight prepaid on factory shipments.

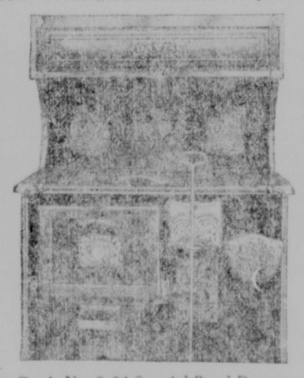
Nothing Like It Ever Offered



After years of experience in the Stove and Range business we take great pride in announcing that we have produced the most wonderful Steel Range that was ever offered to the trade. Its construction is entirely different from the old styles of Ranges. In planning and constructing the Davis Steel Ranges every improvement that would add to its durability and convenience for the housewife has been carefully guarded, and in its construction possibly more points are patented than is found in any half dozen ranges now offered to the trade. The fire box of any range is the part that always gives out first, and with this thought in view was planned in a way that the liners and grates are entirely different from those found in the general construction of ranges and should last for years.

Davis No. 8-64 Special Steel Range

The special features of grate rests, oven linings, rocking grates and poker shaker are found only on the Davis. It is the most durable Range ever offered to the trade at a reasonable price, and is in reach of all.

Strong Points that make Davis' Ranges Most Desirable: Encased reservoir heated by patent process; a grate rest with large openings next to oven, avoiding accumulation of ashes; extended lugs on end of grate bars as guards to prevent cinders clogging or wedging between tilted bars.

Any one contemplating buying a range, if they will take the time to investigate the Davis Steel Range cannot help but see themselves the many advantages and superior qualities in its construction. All we ask is a chance to show our ranges in comparison with others both as to price and quality.

Write for our booklet. It will tell you where it differs from all others.

Tilted Grate and open space between Oven and Liners

Overdraught—An overdraught to the firebox, is obtained through round holes that are made in front of the liners near the top forming what might be termed a hotblast firebox that requires less fuel, burns up the gasses, has a much better combustion and adds materially to the life of the firebox. Ventilated lids are placed over the firebox that makes it possible for one to see the fire burning and to cook on top instead of removing lids and blacking up your cooking utensils. Smoke will not escape through the ventilated lids, as there is a downward draught, and with the ventilated liners a draught on all four sides of the firebox: through lids on top, through liners on sides and through grates on under side.

Compare the Davis Range with any other range on the market and you will find the Davis has more improvements, best made, more durable, best constructed, more advantages, and the only hot blast firebox with ventilated lids and liners offered to the trade.

ALMOST UNANIMOUS FOR COL. THEODORE ROOSEVELT

Many Readers of The Republican Express Their Preference for Presidential Candidate.

Following the request published on page one of last week's Republican for the readers of this paper to express their preference for Presidential candidates, we have received replies from nearly two hundred readers which have been tabulated and the results published below.

While the conclusion was a foregone one in the minds of many who have made national affairs a study that Col. Roosevelt would lead in the vote, the number he received during the past week is a great surprise to his most ardent admirers, and is an indication of how the public mind is set Rooseveltward as the next standard bearer of the Republican party.

The vote received up to the time of going to press is as follsws:

Total number of votes cast	191
Wm. H. Taft	6
Col. Roosevelt	168
Robert M. LaFollette	6
Justice Hughes	11

Case Removed.

A motion has been made and granted in the case of Mrs. Louis Bush vs. the Mayor and Council of Oakland, to remove the damage suit now pending in the Circuit Court for this county to Washington county for trial. The suit is for damages for injuries sustained by Mrs. Bush when she fell on a rickety platform in Oakland more than a year ago when she fractured her ankle.

Rural Mail Carrier Hurt.

Lawrence Bittinger, carrier on the rural route, met with a painful accident on Friday while returning from his trip. His sleigh struck a stone which was hidden in a snow drift, breaking the shafts and throwing him out. The horse became frightened and began kicking, stricking Mr. Bittinger on the face, breaking his nose and inflicting several gashes which resulted in considerable loss of blood. He was assisted to a physician's office and had his wounds dressed. His place on the mail route is being temporarily filled by John H. Miller.—Grantsville Corr. Meyersdale Republican.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

Monthly Meeting of the City Council Monday Night.

The regular meeting of the City Council was held Monday night when routine business was transacted.

Council appointed the following officials to serve at the municipal election to be held next month: Clerks, John W. Maroney and Lee Mason; Judges, James W. White, Harper Bartlett and J. W. Whorton.

A committee composed of Councilmen Naylor and Stanton was appointed to investigate the purchase of a whistle by which to sound fire alarms—whether it should be operared by compressed air or attached to the high pressure natural gas main, and report with recommendations. Should the plan prove satisfactory a system of fire alarm stations in various portions of the town will be established with electrical connections with the whistle which will work automatically.

Council also authorized the payment of $5 to the owner of a team who first succeeds in getting either of the hose reels to the scene of a fire. This arrangement has worked satisfactorily in many towns where a paid department is not established and has been found to be a great incentive for quick action on the part of teamsters.

The reorganization of the fire department was discussed and Council authorized a meeting of the members and citizens to be held at the Council chamber this evening, to which all are most cordially invited

Proposed Church Improvement.

The U. B. congregation of Mountain Lake Park has under consideration the remodeling and enlarging of their church building, as follows: The pulpit and choir recess to be shut off from the main room by a partition, and the room thus made used for an infant class room. A wing to be built on the north side of the building, commencing at the northwest corner and extending north 20 feet, east 20 feet, then south 20 feet to the church, making a room 20 feet square, to be used for Sunday school purposes. The present tower is to be taken down and a tower built at the southeast corner of the addition to the church. The windows in the present to be taken out and modern church windows put in. New pews to take the place of the present seating. The cost of these improvements is estimated at $1,000. Chas. E. Martin, E. E. Kesner and Edw. Sembowers were appointed a committee to take charge of the work.

GARRETT JOURNAL LIBEL CASES WERE SETTLED

Agreement Reached Between Parties and Suits Have Been Dismissed.

The four suits for libel instituted in the Garrett County Circuit Court some months ago by the School Commissioners and the County Superintendent against Mr. James D. Hamill, editor of the Garrett Journal, and which were removed from this county to Allegany county where they were docketed for for trial yesterday, have been dismissed by order of the counsel for the plaintiffs, an amicable settlement having been reached by the attorneys for the plaintiffs and defendant.

The cases grew out of a certain publication which appeared in the Journal at the time when contention was rife in all sections of the county concerning the administration of school affairs and were instituted by County Superintenden Browning and Messrs. Charles A. Deffinbaugh, Peter H. Yost and C. E. Ellithorpe, members of the School Board, alleging damages aggregating $20,000.

While the terms of the settlement have not been made known, it has been generally understood that the agreement calls for a published retraction of the article which will appear in the Journal today.

The plaintiffs were represented by Messrs. W. R Offutt, of Oakland, and A. A. Doub, of Cumberland. Mr. Hamill was represented by Messrs. F. A. Thayer, E. H. Sincell and Gilmor S. Hamill, of Oakland, and ex-Judge Ferdinand Williams, of Cumberland.

Appointed on Forest Commission.

Last Thursday Governor Goldsborough appointed ex-State Senator W. McCulloh Brown and Mr. Robert Garrett, of Baltimore county, members of the State Forest Commission. The appointments were immediately confirmed by the Senate. No salary is connected with the office.

RAIROAD MAN INJURED

Fireman William Broderick, of Oakland, Painfully Hurt.

Mr. William Broderick, of Oakland, employed on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad as a fireman, fell from his engine in the Cumberland yard last Thursday and in falling was caught in some manner between the locomotive and tender and severely squeezed through his hips, besides receiving a painful scalp wound.

After being treated for his injuries by physicians in Cumberland he was brought to his mother's home in Oakland, where he is being cared for and is rapidly recovering.

"The Man on the Box."

Few comedies produced in recent years have provoked so much hearty laughter as the play "The Man on the Box," taken from Harold McGrath's popular novel of the same name, and theatre goers of this city undoubtedly will be well pleased to learn that this good play will be the attraction at The Maryland Theatre on Friday night, February 16th, 1912.

From start to finish its plot, its characters, and incidents are provocative of laughter. Comedy is always in high favor with theatre goers, and the full capacity of the theatre will surely be required for the performance.

The play will be presented here by a special company, headed by Mr. Walter Scott Weeks in the role of "Bob Worburton," and supported by Miss Marion Johnquest and a good cast. The play will be staged with special settings with no detall of the production slighted.

Seats on sale at Gonder's Pharmacy and the prices will be 35, 50, 75 cents and $1.

To Form West Virginia Synod.

The convention for the formation of a Lutheran synod in West Virginia will convene at Fairmont on April 16. The formation of the new synod was announced for an earlier date, but some of the churches were unable to have representatives present, and so the later time was selected.

The decision of the Wheeling churches to enter the synod made it possible. The Cumberland churches have not yet decided whether or not to enter, but if they do, the strength of the synod will be materially increased. As soon as the new territory is organized, missions will be established at a number of points through the state and the exposition of the church attempted.

One Thing I Do

By Rev. E. P. Reccord, Pastor of Church of Unity, Springfield, Mass.

TEXT—But one thing I do.—Philippians 3:13.

The life of St. Paul is a conspicuous example of the power of a fixed purpose. For years he was the most hated and feared of all the enemies of the infant church. And yet when converted to the new faith he became as ardent in its advocacy as he had been zealous in its persecution. The same concentration of effort and focusing of energy which gave us Saul the persecutor gave us also Paul the apostle. Take away this power of concentration and he might have held the same convictions, but they would have been powerless for either good or ill. A large part of the tragedy and pathos of the world comes from the existence of so many thoughtless, purposeless lives. Talented men and women fail to attain the goal to which they aspire through too great diffusion of effort and dissipation of energy. In the field of mechanics we have the man who is jack-of-all-trades and consequently good at none. In business we have the industrial vagabond who drifts from one position to another and never makes good in any one. In college or university life we have the student who comes almost to the end of his college career before he gains any adequate idea of why he is there and then looks back with regret over a long array of wasted opportunities.

The only remedy for the perversion of many a good and wholesome institution is the concentration of all one's powers and faculties upon what is vital and essential to the institution itself. As we open the doors of our public schools we need to remind ourselves and those to whom we intrust our children that a system of instruction which stores the mind with facts, but fails to impart strength of will and strenuousness of purpose is barren. And as we open the doors of our Sunday schools and churches we need to remember that a religious institution which makes the supreme end of its existence anything but the cultivation of a religious spirit and the application of that spirit to life is sterile.

It is often said that the church keeps itself too remote from human life, that it does not concern itself sufficiently with the practical details of every-day life. We are told that it must enlarge its function and diversify its activity. It should champion this philanthrophy and espouse that reform. Its ministers should become experts in scientific agriculture or in economics or sociology. The criticism may be just. It is possible that there has been too great a gulf between religion and life, between the church and other human institutions. It is well for the country minister to know something of scientific farming and for the city minister to know something of economics and sociology, but for either of them to regard this as the essence of his ministry and therefore as the supreme business of the church would be nothing short of a calamity. The church has no right to become so deeply interested in subordinate ends, and aims that it neglects the father's business—the redemption of human life and of human society through the cultivation and diffusion of a genuinely religious spirit and character.

The real test of the worth of any church members is his ability to put first things first and keep them there. And foremost among these first things is the institution of public worship. Church attendance is the first duty to be entered upon and the last to be given up, for it is dynamic to them all. With this duty fulfilled we shall be all the better prepared to serve in other departments of the associated life of the church. This community needs the service of a liberal Christian church. This church needs the services of liberal Christian men and women. These two needs must be met together or not at all. If we fail in our duty to the church, the church must fail in its duty to the community. As we meet together after the vacation period can we not say,' "This one thing I do; by the grace of God and with the strength that he has given I will do all in my power to make this church a more efficient factor in this community and in the world."

Led by the Eye That Never Sleeps.

"I will guide thee with mine eye." (Ps. 32:8.) When we are in the dark God can and will see for us. When led by a friend who can see, a blind man may walk as safely as any one. We have often seen one led about through crowded streets by his wife, and he always had a happy confident smile on his face, for he knew that every step taken was being directed by one who loved him, and who could plainly see they way. It would be that way with us if we would only trust more in the Eyes of the Lord for guidance, and not grope along alone in doubt and misgiving.

The Sabbath.

Sabbath desecration and false notions of personal liberty embarrass those who would maintain a regard for the American Sabbath.—Rev. George E. Davies, Presbyterian, St. Paul.

Temperance Notes

WORST KIND OF DRUNKARDS

Men Who Imagine They Must Have Liquor Before Performing Necessary Tasks Are Most Hopeless.

"I've got to have a drink before I can do any business," said one of the numerous body of "agents" to a writer in the Temperance. His speciality was taking orders for photographs, and as he was entirely on commission it was necessary for him to have all his wits about him. So he used to have a stiff drink before he went in to seek an order. He had got so used to this that he felt that he could not summon up confidence enough to succeed without it, although when off duty he was a temperate man.

"I have sometimes eight, sometimes ten, sometimes a dozen drinks in a day when I am working," he said, "but I often go through the whole day without one when I am not working." This peculiar phase of drinking is very common. Another man who is a "reader" (a new calling that has sprung up comparatively recently) is just the same. This man visits invalids and others, and reads to them. He is a cultured man, and possesses the attributes for his work—a good voice and an appreciation of what is likely to suit his patrons—and he does very well, from a financial point of view, at it. But he has to dose himself up before going on duty. "Reading to others, I mean constantly doing so, plays havoc with your nerves," he says, "so I often take a drink before going into the house. In some places where they are thoughtful they offer it to me, but in the majority they do not. I could not do my work without it." This man also is not an intemperate man when not engaged in his work as yet, but he acknowledges that it is growing on him. The other man is favored by being constantly in the fresh air, which he is not. "I shall have to give up the work or the drink," he said; "it is getting hold of me." He is making a good deal of money, and naturally does not want to cast away a valuable connection. "Why not try giving up the drink?" he was asked. "Utterly impossible," he said. "I should break down in a week." I know a man who writes for the magazines. Some of his work varies greatly in quality. "When I want to do really good work I get drunk," he said. He stated this quite openly. "It makes me thundering bad afterwards, as I don't possess a cast iron constitution, but it is necessary. After I wake in the next morning my brain is on fire, and my mind is as active as possible. Then I settle down and wire in." He looked on it as a business matter altogether, and failed to see that each of these outbursts meant another tax on the already weakening brain. Such men as these are the most hopeless of any class of drunkards.

HOSPITALS CUT OUT ALCOHOL

Nine Dublin Institutions Show Remarkable Decrease in Use of Stimulants—Hard on Traffic.

An interesting report of the Irish Association for the Prevention of Intemperance has just recently been issued, and states that a return has been made principally from the report of the board of superintendence of Dublin hospitals of the amount of stimulants used. The nine hospitals dealt with by the board expended in 1884 £1,053 6s 9d, with an average number of 742.85 beds, or 28s 4d per ber per annum; and in 1910 expended £218 15s 7d, with an average number of 989.08 beds, or 4s 5d per bed per annum. The honorary secretary for the National Hospital for Consumption, Dublin, wrote: "I beg to say that stimulants are not as a rule used in the treatment of patients at this hospital." The secretary of the National Maternity hospital also wrote: "During the year 1909 there were but two bottles of brandy consumed and two quart bottles of whisky." The average number of beds in this latter hospital was about thirty, giving, roughly, a consumption of one gill of spirits per bed per year, or four drops per patient. No harder blow has been given to alcohol than its gradual abandonment in case of sickness.

GREAT DAMAGE BY ALCOHOL

Visiting Physician to Brooklyn Prison Points Out Need of More Active Interest By Public.

The need of more active public interest in the prime-producing influence of alcohol is thus clearly brought out by Dr. Moses Keschner, visiting physician to the city prison of the borough of Brooklyn (New York Medical Journal):

"Millions are spent annually to eradicate infectious diseases; great stress is laid on the prevention and treatment of bubonic plague and pellagra; most sumptuous sanatoria are constructed to harbor persons afflicted with the "white plague;" yet the damage inflicted physically and economically by alcohol is far greater than inflicted by all the infectious diseases put together.

"Jails, workhouses and penitentiaries in this state cost millions to maintain, and these harbor criminals, 60 per cent. of whom owe their origin in crime to alcohol."

Things Queer and Curious

Beautiful Bridge in China

There are some extraordinarily graceful bridges in China, and among them one of the most beautiful is that which spans the Yangtse river at the town of Wan-Hsien. The place is above the great gorge district of the Yangtse, and the houses, owing to the steepness of the banks, are supported on tall piles.

PECULIAR WHITEWASH

When traveling through the rural districts of Uruguay, says the American consul at Montevideo, one's attention is attracted to the fine white color of the farm buildings, even during the wet season. To obtain this neat effect a whitewash is used which is made with the sliced leaves of the common cactus, macerated in water for 24 hours, producing a solution of creamy consistence. To this lime is added and well mixed. When applied to any surface, be it wood, brick, iron, or other material, a beautiful pearly white appearance is produced which will endure through storms and frosts for many years. It is suggested that in sections of the United States where the cactus is a nuisance the plant might be utilized in this manner.

TOMB OF HAROUN'S FAVORITE

Very little remains to mark the golden age of Bagdad, though one constantly comes across the yet more ancient bricks bearing the stamp of Nebuchadnezzar that have been brought from the ruins of Babylon and are used in modern buildings. We do not know even where the famous palace of Haroun-al-Rashid stood. From this epoch remain only the tomb of Zobeida, Haroun-al-Rashid's favorite wife, here pictured, and Khan Ortma, a handsome and extensive caravanseral.

SAME OLD STYLES

From the fresco paintings of women in Cretan palaces of the period about 2,000 B. C., it is learned that the women of that time pinched in their waists, had flounced or accordeon plaited skirts, wore an elaborate coiffure, shoes with high heels and hats which might have come from a Parisian hat shop, while one woman might be described as wearing a jupe culotte.

SKIN FOR SANDPAPER

An ancient mariner and fisherman says he well remembers when the dried skin of the dogfish was used for sandpaper, and good sharp cutting stuff it was, too. The old salt further says there are many sorts of imitation dried cod on the market and that the tail of a young dogfish is fine fried.

CHANGE OF EYE COLOR

The possibility of a man's eyes changing color as the result of mental shock or physical ill treatment was the subject of an interesting discussion by a number of surgeons in the eye ward of one of the great London hospitals. One of the surgeons stated: "It is common knowledge that great physical hardships may suddenly turn the hair white. The loss of color here follows on certain chemical changes, due to disturbances of nutrition, taking place in the tiny particles of coloring matter which give the hair its color. "All infants at birth have blue eyes. In some babies immediately after birth pigment granules begin to develop in the iris. Thus they become brown or black eyed. In others, however, no such pigment formation takes place and the eyes remain blue or gray throughout life. If this at present blue eyed convict is really the missing brown eyed banker a reasonable explanation of the discrepancy in the eye colorings would be that under the stress of physical and mental shock the coloring matter which he had in early life disappeared, leaving the eyes the original blue coloring present at birth."

TO KEEP WITCHES AWAY

Some curious superstitions are gathered round even so eminently a practical thing as beer. In Scotland it used to be the custom to throw a handful of salt and a little dry malt into the mash to keep the witches from it, and the cautious housewife in houses where they brewed their own beer used to throw a live coal into the vat to save the liquor from the frolicsome interference of fairies.

The addition of salt, by the way, to beer in the course of brewing was supposed to be for the unholy purpose of exciting thirst. It may possibly have been used to this end by the unscrupulous, but the real reason was legitimate. Salt moderates the fermentation and makes the liquor fine.

CHINA HAS NO TYPEWRITERS

Typewriters are now made for use in nearly a hundred different languages, and they are sold all over the world; but there is still one great nation which, for a very simple reason, has no typewriters that write its tongue. That nation is China.

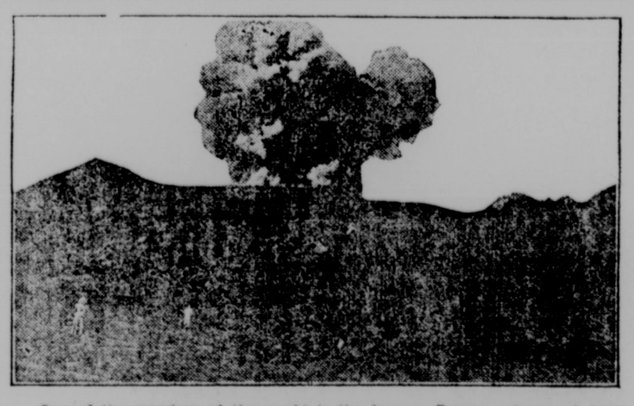
The English alphabet has 26 letters, the Russian 36. The typewriter produced for the Russian market is the largest made; but no typewriter could be made that would begin to be big enough for the Chinese language, which has no alphabet but is represented by sign characters, of which there are about 50,000. Of the great number of words found in the English language only a small proportion are used for the ordinary purposes of speech, and the same is true of the characters used in the Chinese language; but the number of Chinese characters commonly employed is still far greater than could be put on any typewriter. So this nation of 400,000,000 people has no typewriter in its own tongue.

But that doesn't mean that no typewriters are sold in China. More and more Chinese are learning other languages besides their own, and Chinese merchants and resident foreign merchants use typewriters, and they are used in legations and in consular offices and in banks and shipping offices and colleges, and by missionaries, by various people. Altogether there are sold in China a good many typewriters.

FIGHTING MALAPIA

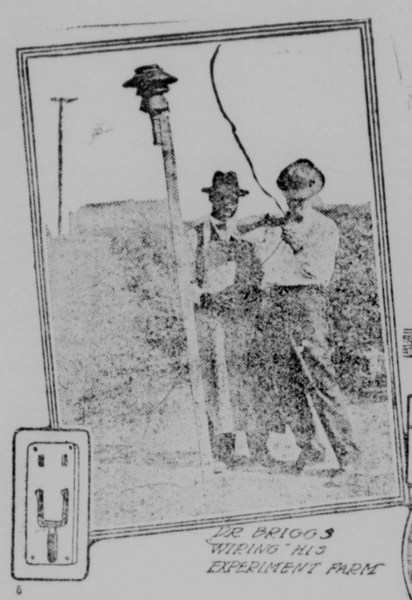
In Athens a sluggish stream, with its numerous wide and shallow pools, was cleaned out and deepened, thus making it flow faster, and every week the new made river bed was swept rid of mosquito eggs. All this began five years ago. The first year the malaria in the school children dropped to 60 per cent. and the year following it fell to 20 per cent., and the next year it was only three per cent., and from that it fell the following year to one per cent., and last year there was no more malaria.

RAT CATCHER OF PARIS



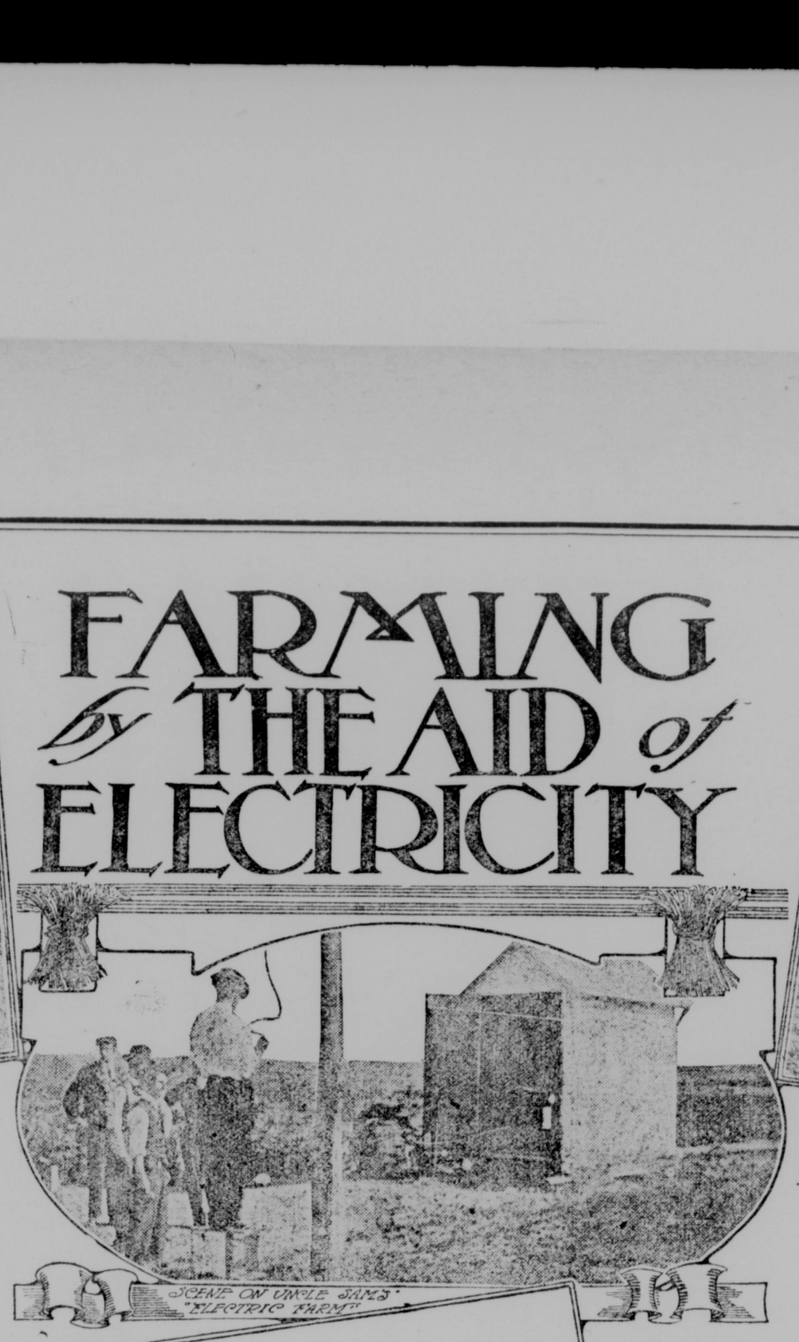
George Menard of Paris holds a unique position, being the official rat catcher of the great system of sewers. Carrying a light and a bag he traverses the sewers and seems to hypnotize the rats, which are captured alive and sold for the training of rat dogs and for rat fights.

JEWEL WEIGHS 243 POUNDS



Jewel experts throughout the world have been thrown into a state of excitement by the appearance of a beryl that weighs 243.1 pounds, and is 18.9 inches high, and from 15.75 inches to 16.5 inches in width. This is the largest beryl ever found, and is reported to have been sold by its finder for nearly $25,000. The beryl was picked up by a Turk in the state of Minas Geraes, Brazil. Its color is a greenish blue, and it is absolutely free from impurities.

Bromo Volcano and Sand Sea



One of the wonders of the world is the famous Bromo volcano of Java, with its remarkable sand sea. The natives fling into the flaming crater offerings of goats, fowls, fruits and money. In times past youths and maidens were thrown into the fiery abyss to appease the spirits of the mountain. The sand sea is ribbed by the action of the winds, just as the sands of the real sea are by the tides and waves.

SCENE ON UNCLE SAM'S "ELECTRIC FARM"

DR BRIGGS-UNCLE SAM'S EXPERT, TOYING WITH A CURRENT OF 100000 VOLTS

UNCLE SAM is making a try at using the magic current to help the growth of crops. In order to test this new idea the government has recently laid out what is believed to be the first "electric farm" in the United States. It isn't a very big farm, to be sure, having, to begin with, a total area of only an acre and a half. All the same, the progress of vegetation on this little plot will be watched with keen interest, for it may point the way to helping the farmers of the future in important respects and even may be the means of making some of them independent of climate.

Of course it is not sought to convey the impression that the present undertaking by the United States department of agriculture at its most important experiment farm is the first effort to make electricity useful on the farm. Public as well as private enterprise invaded that field long ago and thus we find today many farmers in various parts of the country developing electricity for home consumption by means of power plants right on the premises, the energy for generating being supplied by the gasoline engines which are becoming so common in the rural districts, or through the harnessing of water power which has been done successfully on so many farms. Moreover, the electricity thus generated is not used merely for illumination, etc., inside the farm buildings. Progressive farmers and dairymen have adapted the twentieth century power to many tasks that had formerly to be done by human hands—as, for example, milking and churning and feed cutting.

But Uncle Sam's new venture in electric farming pursues quite a different path. This latest function of the magic current is not to supplant manual labor, but to assist nature. To particularize, in popular form, it may be explained that the idea is to have electricity supplement sunlight in its influence upon growing crops. The artificial warmth and glow will be called into play as a proxy for the burning beams from the orb above on days when there is no sunlight and in the mornings and evenings of the short winter days when old Sol is working shorter hours than in mid-summer. Perhaps electricity cannot ever be expected to prove so great a stimulus to growing plants as is powerful sunlight, but preliminary experiments have proven that it will help some and the object of Uncle Sam's present undertaking is to determine just how much assistance electricity will render under the conditions of soil and climate, etc., which confront the average American farmer.

The reader might naturally suppose, if he hasn't been informed otherwise, that if Uncle Sam was going to employ electricity to counterfeit sunbeams he would do it by calling into use powerful electric lights, which seem to be about the next best thing to sunlight in brilliancy. Well, that was the way it was done by several of the leading scientists of Europe who have rather gotten ahead of us in such feats. They hung big arc lamps in greenhouses and they lengthened the growing day for plants and vegetables by flooding the hot houses with light for several hours after sundown each day. The result was that one prominent foreigner has produced splendid strawberries in a much shorter time than would have been possible had nature been allowed to take her own course, and our own Cornell university in New York state was equally successful in hurrying the growth of lettuce, radishes and other vegetables by this same method. But Uncle Sam is not going to follow blindly in this beaten path. He is taking a new tack.

The principle of Uncle Sam's new "electric farm"—if we may call one miniature wheat field a farm—is to employ the electric current itself and not the electric lamps to spur nature in her work. This is interesting in itself and the project will be of added value in its results from the fact that the growing under electricity is to go on out of doors instead of in the artificial atmosphere of a hot house. Moreover, in order to approximate average conditions the experts of Uncle Sam's bureau of plant industry have chosen as the scene of their experiment, not a prize farm, but a tract on the largest experiment farm of the United States department of agriculture located near Arlington, Virginia. This land was formerly a part of the historic estate of Robert E. Lee, the Confederate general, but it was neglected for many years after the war and it cannot be said to offer more than average opportunities for tilling, if they be that good.

The appearance of Uncle Sam's "electric farm" is well calculated to rouse the curiosity of any chance farmer riding along the road, even if he did not see the warning signs cautioning him that he must not get within four feet of the wires carrying a current of 100,000 volts—electricity powerful enough to do all sorts of damage if given the opportunity. What the farmer beholds is a plowed area dotted at intervals of a couple of rods with slender wooden poles about seven feet in height. At one corner of the field is the so-called "power house" of this farm, a small frame building from which leads a wire connecting with the wires of a near-by interurban trolley system. If the farmer looks close he will observe that the slender posts support a perfect network of wires. Stretching from post to post are main wires, supported by huge insulators of a pattern usually seen only in the vicinity of Niagara Falls and elsewhere where high-power current is generated or transmited. Crossing these principal wires at right angles—six to the span between each two poles—are finer wires, so that, taken as a whole, there is provided a sort of wire screen suspended about the height of a man above the furrows.

Were it a case of switching on electric light when it was desired to give impetus to crops in the ground it would be apparent to the casual onlooker when the activity was in progress, but with Uncle Sam's method of administering the electric treatment things are not so obvious, hence the warning signs that hang from the wires. Nevertheless, for all that, there are no lamps the electric current is so strong that at night, the wires give off a sort of glow that is visible to any person approaching them. In daylight only a scarcely audible sound indicates the "leakage" from the electricity-laden discharge wires.

The theory which the government scientists, under the direction of Dr. Lyman J. Briggs, are trying to demonstrate is that static electricity when applied to soil and air will stimulate the growth of plants in such environment. There is ample evidence of the soundness of the theory within reasonable limits. Indeed, the benefit that may be conferred by such electric discharges is illustrated by the flourishing development (until frostbitten) of plants in the Arctic regions where there is, of course, mighty little sunlight, but where the atmosphere is heavily charged with electricity. Moreover, preliminary experiments which were recently conducted in England along the same lines that Uncle Sam is pursuing indicated that there was an increase of 30 to 40 per cent in the yield of wheat that had been thus dosed with electricity, and the wheat likewise brought a better price per bushel after a test had evidenced that it was superior for bread baking.

The officials of the department of agriculture make it very clear that their present venture in electroculture—as the new activity is termed—is purely experimental and they make no prophecies as to just what they hope to discover. The interesting point is that they are determined to find out just how much electricity will do to aid the farmer. They have made the most elaborate plans, too, for measuring the influence exerted. To this end the experimental area has been apportioned in fourteen plots of uniform size and all have been planted in the same good grade of winter wheat. Seven of the beds lie under the network of wires and thus receive the benefit of the electric discharges, while side by side with each of these electrified beds is a "check portion" or plot of equal size where no electric shower falls. By conquering the yield from the two plots in each pair and by contrasting the production by the seven pairs of beds the officials will be enabled to gauge very accurately just what influence the electrical factor exerts on the harvest. It may be added that it is not the intention at any time to keep the electric current flowing over the wire-sheltered area continuously day and night. That would be likely to do more harm than good. Late afternoons and early mornings will be chosen for giving an electric boost to the growing wheat and in no instance, probably, will Dr. Briggs have his odd cultivator at work for more than one-third of the time in any given twenty-four hours.

Gathering and Using Waste Fertility

By R. B. RUSHING.

Today the subject of procuring a supply of manure is concerning the minds of a great many farmers. This has given me much worry at times and is only mastered by hard labor and study.

Perhaps, however, I have not secured my manure all in the same way as most gardeners do. True, all farmers and gardeners cannot secure a great amount of their manure as I have secured much of mine.

In the first place I have tried to make as much manure on my farm as possible, and also tried to save as near all of it as possible. Also I have made a practice of always having some green growth to turn under at different times and derived much benefit from it.

But much of my farm fertility has come from a 25 acre wood land, which I several years ago purchased from a neighbor. This land is rough and stony.

The timber is worth very little except to keep the land shaded and shed foliage to rot. The rock on the land is of a gravelly nature and when it rains seems to dissolve somewhat and when mixed with the rich dirt and my farm soil, seems to make an ideal soil.

Here in my country there is much land that is of this type and fit for nothing practically, or at least cannot be cultivated.

I bought this piece of land ten years ago and I have hauled a great number of loads of rich dirt and sand mixed every year and I still have, it seems, as much to haul as when I first bought it.

I gave $100 for the 25 acres at first and I have received that much back every year in fertility.

However, I do not try to cover my entire farm every year, but rather select a few acres and have some green crop to turn under and apply about 20 loads of this fertility per acre, with only a few loads of barn-yard manure, say about four or five. This is not done to the land every year, that is to the same land.

I select say about five acres each year to give a renovation, apply about 100 loads of this woods' dirt and about 15 or 20 loads of barn-yard manure, thoroughly incorporated with the soil and it produces good crops.

Some land of course will not need quite so much of this, but some of my land is of clay loam and in former years has not been very rich and thus it requires heavy applications to bring it up to a high producing state.

Not only in my country is it possible to have such supplies, but in many places such sources are available. The trouble is that these sources are overlooked.

I know a few farmers in my neighborhood who have bought a few cars of manure and had it shipped from Chicago, and on their farms there are waste places that they can get about all the fertility they need to mix with their soil.

Five years ago I bought one car myself and I must say that I have had far better results from the land that received the wood leaf mould and dirt than from the Chicago manure.

In fact, I have never used anything that gave better immediate results than does this. I have had to buy a little lime occasionally, but never had to buy nitrogen and I never expect to.

In using this in my cold frames, all the special treatment that it receives is to thoroughly work it into a good soil, or fairly good soil. As to my hot beds, I use the fire beds and apply the rich dirt for planting the seed.

While I am a great believer in buying the proper elements of plant food when it is necessary, yet I also believe in looking around and trying to find some source near home from which to supply needs and save money.

I think there should be just as great economy practiced in feeding the soil as in feeding the animals. The cost of production must be considered.

THE EVERGREENS

By R. B. BUCKHAM.

To tell something really new about the evergreens would be a difficult task indeed, since the reader has doubtless been familiar with their principal traits and characteristics since boyhood, and knows them all, root and branch. But a few facts relative to them may nevertheless prove convenient for reference, and interesting and suggestive.

First of all, then, they are distinctly desirable as shade and ornamental trees, though many fail to recognize their value as such. In time, however, they will surely come to receive the place as such which is due them.

No tree can add more to the landscape than one of these, and especially in the winter season, when so many others are leafless and forlorn. The wonder is that we do not see more of the evergreens in the streets of cities, and about fine country places.

Again, they are of prime value as timber. The price of soft wood lumber is steadily increasing, yearly. When this country was first discovered, and grants of land were given by the king, in most cases great care was taken to reserve the pine thereon to the crown. Its value was recognized then. Shall we fail to appreciate it, today?

The evergreens are all of them hardy, and easily grown, and adaptable to almost any climate and condition of soil and surroundings. You will find the spruce growing on the exposed and chilly upper slopes of mountains, and again equally well along the muddy banks of a river, or in the depths of wet and gloomy swampland, or out upon the sandy plain. Only give them a fair chance and the evergreens will look out for themselves. There is no portion of our nation in which they cannot be grown with success and to advantage. The present is always propitious with them. They care not whether times are good or bad, or what political faction is in the ascendency. They are ready to launch out with you on a venture in the lumber business at any time, and they make pretty good partners to tie up with, too.

The several varieties of the evergreens have their peculiarities, traits and habits, by means of which they can be selected to conform to one's individual circumstances. Thus, the hemlock and the larch seem to be able to endure almost any amount of moisture in the soil, whereas the pine is best constituted to thrive in the most barren sands, and to endure long continued droughts. The spruce is the most successful of them all in doing without sunshine, surviving dense shade, and making itself at home on northern mountain slopes, where the snow lingers far into the spring, and the sun makes out to shine but a little time each day.

Almost any condition of soil and situation can be met by these hardy growers, and they seldom fail to return a good profit to the man who is willing to loan them the use of his land.

If the large leaved trees retained their foliage throughout the year it is difficult to imagine what havoc wind and sleet and snow would not occasion among them; but the foliage of the evergreens is so shaped that though retained throughout the year, no damage results in the fiercest gales. What would be the destruction of other trees, but makes music among the evergreens. Long may their lyres be attuned throughout the hills and valleys of our country!

GETTING ON TO THE CITY MACHINE'S TACTICS.

That the State is not entirely oblivious to the game that the Democratic organization of Baltimore is trying to work at Annapolis is shown by the following extract from an article in the Wicomico News, of which Marion Brewington, a well known organization Democrat of Wicomico county, is one of the editors. Speaking of the effort to unseat five Republican members in the House of Delegates, the News says:

It's the methods of the old Plug Uglies, the sandbaggers of the dark alley days in Maryland politics; the return of the mask, dark lantern and jimmy class in the political arena of this State, and the whole scheme should be throttled at the very beginning and save the good name of Democracy in Maryland. It's a holdup, a steal, a blackjack game which should have no place in the politics of today. We sincerely hope that the three members from Wicomico county will be found on the side of decency and fair play on this question and will vote to dismiss the whole proposition.

If a few more Democrats in the State and a respectable number of Democrats in the General Assembly reach a better understanding of what the Democratic city organization stands for, it would be better for the party, better for the State and better for the city. Not only in connection with the contested seats in the House does the organization misrepresent the wishes of decent Democrats of Baltimore city but in many other directions, and they must look to the Democrats from the counties for protection.—Baltimore News.

VENERABLE COUPLE REUNITED IN DEATH

Jeremiah Glass Speedily Follows His Aged Wife to the Grave.

One of the saddest and most pathetic cases of the visitation of death occurred near Strawn, Pa., in Garrett county, Md., near the Somerset county line, when both Mr. and Mrs. Jeremiah Glass, an aged and God-fearing couple, were called away within two weeks of each other and were borne to the silent tomb, sincerely mourned not only by their family, but also by a large circle of friends.

It would be hard to find words to give a just tribute to this sincerely lamented couple, whose calm and peaceful lives were spent in doing all the good in their power for their family, their neighbors and their God. In every walk of life in which they were placed, they did their duties faithfully and well, and when the last call, the inevitable doom of all, came it found them ready and prepared to go.

Mrs. Elizabeth Glass, the venerable spouse, was the first to receive the final summons, her death taking place Sunday, January 14, 1912, her age being 65 years, 5 months and 6 days. She was a daughter of the late John and Susan Turney and was born August 8, 1846. She is survived by one sister, Mrs. Uriah Lichty, of Garrett county, Md., and a number of children whose names will appear further on in the obituary of the husband. The funeral took place Tuesday, January 16, at the Methodist Episcopal church at Addison, where both husband and wife always worshipped, the pastor, Rev. J. L. Lancaster, officiating. Interment in the Addison cemetery.

The husband, Jeremiah Glass, who although the first to be stricken with his last illness, was the last to pass away. He received a paralytic stroke the week before the wife was taken down. Their daughter, Mrs. John I. Davis, of Confluence, went to nurse him, but the wife passed away and the paralytic stroke was complicated by an attack of pneumonia, the disease from which the wife succumbed. He died Thursday, January 25, aged 74 years, 8 months and 2 days. He was a son of the late Jonathan and Phoebe Glass and was born May 23, 1837. He is survived by seven sisters, all of whom reside in the West with the exception of one, Mrs. James Hileman, of Addison. The children surviving are: Alfred Glass, a farmer residing near Brownsville, Fayette county; Milford Glass, a trusted employee of the C. C. C. & St. L. R. R., better known as the Big Four Railroad; D. B. Glass, a lumber operator employed by P. V. Nedrow, of Somerfield, in his mill in Preston county, W. Va.; Mrs. Alice Johnson, Uniontown; Mrs. John I. Davis, wife of the express messenger on the C. & O. branch of the B. & O. railroad, and Mrs. John Miller, of Garrett county, Md.

The funeral took place from the Methodist Episcopal church in Addison, Rev. J. L. Lancaster officiating. Interment in Addison cemetery by the side of his partner in many years of connubial bliss.

Of this venerable couple it might be well said: "In death they were not divided." Although they have passed away they are not forgotten; their good deeds live after them. They brought up their family in the way they should go and these are following in the footsteps of their parents.—Meyersdale Republican.

DOINGS AT ANNAPOLIS, THE SEAT OF GOVERNMENT

Delegate Weimer's Attachment of Wages Bill Introduced.

STATE HOUSE, ANNAPOLIS, Feb. 7.—Among the laws of general interest to all the counties of the State introduced during the past week has been the "Bi-Partisan School Board" bill, which was offered in the Senate by the Senator Bellis, of Anne Arundel county, just before adjournment last Thursday. This bill provides for the appointment of a State Board of Education composed of an equal number of Republicans and Democrats, who shall select the State Superintendent of Schools and his assistants; that the county school boards shall consist of two Republicans and two Democrats, appointed by the Governor, and those county Superintendents now holding office shall be displaced only for cause on charges being preferred and after hearing in said charges, thus applying civil service rules to the county school superintendents, who are now Democrats. This bill had been entrusted to Senator Lee, of Montgomery county, but after mature deliberation and consideration of the matter, declined to introduce it, and Senator Bellis was asked to do so. School Superintendent A. C. Willison, of Allegany county, as chairman of the legislative committee of the State Teachers' Association, has been active in the interest of this bill. There is considerable opposition to this measure in both the Senate and House, and it is thought the Governor will veto it even should it pass the General Assembly, which seems extremely doubtful.

Another bill of more than general interest introduced in the House provides for the creation of a State-wide Dog Commissioner, with an assistant commissioner in every county, and for the licensing of dogs throughout Maryland. The bill proposes a license of $2 a year for female and of $1 for every male dog harbored, license to be required for dogs four months old and over. The State Dog Commissioner will be appointed by the Governor and shall serve four years at an annual salary of $1,200, and shall have his main office in Baltimore City. The assistant commissioners for each county will be appointed by the Board's of County Commissioners with the consent of the State Commissioner. They will receive a fixed salary of $25 per month, and 10 cents for every license issued. The assistant dog commissioners, constables and game wardens are empowered to kill all unlicensed dogs, and for each dog so killed they shall receive $1. A fine of not less than $10 nor more than $25 for refusal or declination to take out a license for dogs under this act. The salaries and fees are to come out of the license receipts of the State. The bill is being supported by game preservation interests.

Delegate Osborn, of Howard county, has introduced a bill to amend the State Constitution so as to provided for the initiative and referendum on all local legislation as well as legislation of State-wide provisions.

A Board of Game Commissioners is provided for in a bill introduced in the House, the commission to be composed of three members to be appointed by the Governor and to serve for four years, without compensation. Another bill provides for a shooting license in every county in the State where a license is not now required, these licenses to be issued by the circuit courts and endorsed by the State Game Warden. Non-residents are to pay a license of $10 unless they own real estate to the amount of $500, whereas the resident hunter's license shall be $1 per year.

In the House on Monday night Delegate Weimer, of the Garrett county delegation, introduced a bill amending the attachment law for his section. The full text of the bill is as follows:

A bill, entitled "An Act to repeal Section 33 of Article 9. of the Code of Public General laws of the State of Maryland, title, 'Attachments,' subtitle, 'Attachment of Wages and Hire,' so far as said section applies to Garrett county and re-enacted the said section with amendments, said section as amended to apply to Garrett county only.

"Section 1—Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That Section 33 of Article 9, of the Code of Public General Laws, title, 'Attachments,' sub-title, 'Attachments of Wages or Hire,' is hereby so far and so far only as said section applies to Garrett county, and the same is hereby re-enacted so as to apply in its amended form to Garrett county, and to be known as Section 149A of Article Number 12 of the Code of Public Local Laws title, 'Garrett County,' sub-title, 'Exemption of Wages and Attachment,' said Section as re-enacted to be and read as follows:

"Section 149A—No attachment of the wages or hire of any laborer or employe in the hands of the employer, whether private individuals or bodies corporate, shall affect any salary or wages of the debtor which are not actually due at the date of the attachment; and seventy-five (75) per centum of such wages or hire due to any laborer or employee by any employer or corporation shall always be exempt from attachment by any process whatever, provided such exemptions shall not exceed one hundred dollars.

Sec. 2—And be it enacted, That this Act shall take effect from the date of its passage."

Senators Zihlman, of Allegany county, and Speicher, of Garrett, together with the Garrett delegation, have conferred concerning Senator Zihlman's bill providing for the establishing of a Bureau of Mines, and the appointment of a Chief of the Bureau and two Deputy Mine Inspectors. It has practically been decided that one of the deputy inspectors shall come from Garrett county, and the bill will be amended so as to provide that one of these officials to be appointed by the Governor, shall be a resident of Garrett county, conforming to the other stipulations in the bill. The Bureau of Mines, if established, will have jurisdiction over all the mines in Allegany and Garrett counties, and the selection of one of these deputy inspectors from Garrett is recognized as an equitable and proper suggestion and Senator Zihlman will make the necessary amendment to the Mine Bureau bill when it comes from the committee. Senator Zihlman had a hearing before the Senate Finance committee on this measure last Wednesday, and another hearing at which the Garrett county senator and delegates will appear with Senator Zihlman and the Allegany delegates will probably be arranged for an early day.

Delegate Greene, of Allegany, Monday night introduced his bill empowering the Town Commissioners of Westernport to condemn property and secure rights-of-way for the laying of water mains and completion of the water system for that town.

Delegate Wittig will this week introduce a bill asking for an appropriation of $25,000 for the establishing of a Miners' Hospital at Frostburg. This is a measure to institute a project that is of interest to miners in Garrett as well as in Allegany county.

Senator Zihlman, of Allegany, will be one of the speakers at the memorial exercises to be held in the Senate on Tuesday next, February 13th, in memory of the late State Senator McK. Griffith, of Calvert county, who died last May.

Governor Goldsborough on Wednesday of last week named former State Senator W. McCulloh Brown, of Garrett county, as a member of the State Board of Forestry.

Hon. W. McCulloh Brown, of Garrett county, formerly a member of the State Senate, was in Annapolis Tuesday and renewed many old acquaintances at the State House.

Mayor Preston, of Baltimore, delivered an address explanatory of the legislation now pending in the House and Senate specifically applicable to Baltimore city, on Tuesday afternoon, in the House chamber. J. J. R.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 5, 1912.—It will be well for the people of the country to study carefully the attitude of the Democratic party as it is now making up its tariff record. The so-called Steel bill or the revision of the Metal schedule which was recently passed proves conclusively that the Democratic party has no concern whatever for the labors and industries of this country. They have no concern either for the revenues of the country, their one pretext for passing such a measure is that it will reduce the price of certain articles to the consumer, but in this they are as much mistaken as they are in the calculation that lower duties and no duties will increase the revenue.

There should be fresh in the minds of all voters the recent restoration of free hides. There was no reason whatever for taking the duty entirely off from hides and lowering the duty on boots and shoes, except to give the consumer the benefit, and yet what benefit has any consumer had from free hides and lower duty on boots and shoes—not one cent. On the contrary the prices of boots and shoes are to go higher and the Government has lost considerable revenue by the transaction. It would be the same with the metal schedule should the bill which passed the House become a law in its present shape. There would be no advantage whatever to the consumer, there would be no gain but a loss, and worst of all the result would be that many industries now flourishing in this country would be transplanted abroad, there would be many idle mills and many unemployed workmen and a reduction of wages all along the line.

And right here it may be well to call attention to the sincerity or lack of sincerity shown by the Democrats in the House of Representatives. Last summer during the extra session this majority pretended great concern over the wool and woolen schedule. They pretended that it was their duty to revise this schedule in order that the people might have cheaper garments and cheaper blankets, and so they brought in the bill which finally reached the President and which was vetoed by him because the bill had not been drawn in accordance with any facts in the possession of the people as to whether it would be destructive or advantageous to American industry. The Tariff Board has since brought in a most exhaustive report on this industry, giving us an array of figures that cannot be questioned and a compilation that has won the praise of even the enemies of the Tariff Board. It would now seem that the Democratic majority which pretended such deep concern for the consumers of woolen products should give us a bill revising Schedule K, but this has been laid entirely aside for the indefinite future and with the statement that bills will follow the steel bill relating to sugar, cotton and other products.

There must be some reason for this action on the part of the present Democratic majority, and when it is fully analyzed it will be found that the reason is this: The report of the Tariff Board fully vindicated what Republicans have been saying for many years. It proved conclusively that the present rates are not as a whole too high, though it may be found that some adjustment would be warranted. It proved false the contention of the Democrats, that although wages are higher at home than abroad, that labor is more efficient. It showed that if there is any difference whatever, labor in the woolen mills abroad is more efficient than here and that our wages, which are two or three times as high as abroad, measure a difference that must be compensated for by sufficient duties. The Democrats therefore found themselves in a hole and instead of courageously meeting the situation they simply sidetracked it and tried to confuse the issue

It seems that there will be little prospect of any tariff legislation at this session because President Taft will not sign any bill reducing the duties in any schedule that is not in harmony with the report of the Tariff Board and that would tend to destroy any American industry or put out of employment American workmen or tend to reduce their wages to the foreign level.

The President has recently sent to Congress a message covering the recent investigations and recommendations of his so-called Economy and Efficiency Board but this message the Democratic majority has entirely ignored, as it has the report of the Tariff Board. In fact, the Democratic House of Representatives is proving itself again, as it has in the past, absolutely incapable of legislating in the interests of the people of the whole country. Their purpose is to betog every issue with one pretext or another and with the exception of the regular appropriation bills the whole session will be spent with a view to playing politics for whatever advantage can be gained in the election of next November. It will be well then for the voters of the country to study the situation in its every aspect and find out whether they prefer to put the entire control of the government in the hands of the Democratic party or again entrust it in every branch to the Republican party which has made this nation what it is and put it in the front rank of every nation on the face of the globe.

It is true that some Democrats are protesting against the program that is rapidly putting their party in a hole. Their confidence of a few months ago is rapidly fading away. Dissensions in their ranks are more and more numerous and more and more emphatic and long before election day rolls around next November the people will realize that the Democratic party, which for more than half a century has been a complete failure, is a failure today; that it is absolutely incapable of broad statesmenship, of just legislation or practical government as far as the nation itself is concerned or the interests of the people of this nation.

On the other hand the President and his advisers and the leaders of the Republican party are giving the people the best government and the best legislation in their power. Not for a long time has there been so much economy practiced or has the Government been run at so little expense or with so great efficiency as at present. And this is a distinct contrast to the action of the Democratic party in pretending to save money in one direction and in spending ten times as much in another direction. There are people who would wish that our millions provided for the purpose of war might be diverted in other channels but so long as the other nations of the earth are preparing themselves the patriotic people of this country, and that means a vast majority of all the people, will approve of Uncle Sam having the best possible navy and an army sufficient for any emergency that may arise and the Democratic party cannot ride into power on a program that cuts off the building of battleships and spends millions in useless investigations for the sake of giving publicity and notoriety to its members.

Mr. Daniel Shaffer, formerly of Oakland, who has been connected with the dining-car service of the B. & O. R. R. for several years with headquarters at Wheeling, has been transferred from that city to Washington, Indiana, and placed in charge of the railroad yards located there. He and his family have already moved to the latter named place.

Mr. G. Semmes Hamill is having plans prepared for a new brick dwelling he proposes to erect on the site of his recently burned home located on Alder street. The building will be brick, built on modern lines of construction and will be quite a handsome addition to the portion of town where it is to be located. While it is being built Mr. Hamill and his family will occupy the Presbyterian manse on Third street.

A freight wreck in which one car of an eastbound train was derailed occurred last Thursday afternoon at a point directly west of the Big Yough bridge, which blocked both tracks for an hour or more. William Canty, son of Mr. James Canty, of Oakland, a brakeman on the wrecked train, was slightly injured by falling from the top of a car. He went on to Cumberland with his train after the wreck had been cleared.

Mr. Charles S. Davis returned Monday morning from Baltimore where he had gone Thursday night to attend a meeting of the board of directors of the Mountain Lake Park Association held in that city Saturday, and which adjourned to meet in Oakland on Saturday of this week, at which time a stockholders meeting will also be held and matters pretaining to the program and entertainments as well as the general future welfare of the Park will be discussed.

Dr. Henry W. McComas, accompanied by County Commissioner D. M. Dixon, drove down to the home of Mr. Dixon's parents, two miles beyond Friendsville last Sunday, where Dr. McComas was called to see Mrs. Dixon, who has been in poor health for some time. The return was made to Oakland Sunday evening. The total distance traveled was a little more than fifty miles over roads that had been entirely obliterated by snow drifts which in some places measured ten to fifteen feet deep. This, with the wind blowing a gale and the clouds of snow in the air, made the trip an exceedingly disagreeable one.

Messrs. Dixon & Kelso have about completed the repairs and alterations to their store building located on Second street. The lower floor of the building has been thrown into one room. This was accomplished by the removal of the partition which ran through it the entire length. By its removal the floor space has been doubled and additional shelf room has been provided by the construction of a tier of shelves midway of the store. Large and very handsome display cases have been ordered by the firm and when these arrive and are placed in position the room will be one of the handsomest and best equipped business houses in the town.

A Daughter of the Desert.

A beautiful comedy drama in four acts will be presented at the Maryland Theatre, Oakland, Md., Saturday night, February 10, 1912, by a specially selected cast from the Oakland High School. The scenes of the play are located in Arizona at the time of the Indian raids in 1882, and while the title does not so signify, the play is full of the wild and woolly west and an abundance of excitement and thrilling climaxes. The comedy element largely prevails and this is supplied by Clarence and Lucy, two prominent characters, and Hopkins, who has a great fondness for custard pie, and these three will supply twenty good laughs to every minute. With all these is a trend of pathos and sadness, which mingled with the story in general makes the play one of the best written by Mr. Chas. Ulrich.

The cast has been carefully selected by Prof. C. E. Bender, the principal of the High School, who has also had the training, and we say without hesitation that this will be one of the best plays ever given by local talent in Oakland. During the concourse of the play and between the acts bright and amusing specialties will be introduced. The Oakland Orchestra will be on hand to render plenty of good music. The proceeds will go to the liquidation of the indebtedness for the piano, and as it is certainly for a most worthy cause the Oakland people should be only too glad to help them along. The following students compose the cast: Walter Dawson, Harry Weimer, Preston DeBerry, Glen Martin, Harry Turney, Procter Kildow, Wade Mason, Harold Harned, Frank Ross, Robert White, Frank Smouse, Louis Littman, Dottie Doman, Lena Ravencroft, Mary Harsch, Edwana Peddicord.

Seats now on sale at Gonder's Pharmacy. Prices 25, 35 and 50 cents.

Pastor Resigns.

Rev. C. P. Bastian, who has held the pastorate of the Lunheran church at Keyser for several years, in which time the membership has grown and the general church interest increased in a pleasing way, has tendered his resignation, effective March first. THE DEATH RECORD.

Corinth Postoffice Robbed.

The postoffice and store at Corinth, W. Va., was broken into and robbed. A small sum of money and some little articles were stolen. The McGreal-Benson blood hounds from Terra Alta took the trail right away and trailed the thief to a coal bank and from there to an old stable and there the trial was lost. It is supposed that whoever did the robbery had a horse in the stable and by that means got away. The store is owned by Felton Brothers. They seem to be singularly unfortunate in this respect as this is the third time this store has been robbed in the past year.

O. H. S. Notes.

A meeting of the O. H. S. Literary Society was held Jan. 26th. The following officers were elected: President, Preston DeBerry; vice president, Robert White; secretary, Mary Harsch; recording secretary, Dottie Doman; treasurer, Leah Sincell; chief usher, Harry Weimer. The different numbers showed careful work. The question for debate was: Resolved, That the city is the best location for a college. The students found, upon careful thought, that there was much to be said on both sides. Those on the negative brought out the advantages to be gained from the pure air, quiet life and lack of temptations in the surroundings, while the affirmative dwelt upon the benefits to be derived from public libraries, art galleries, theaters and the different classes of people. The affirmative won.

Another one of our rooms has been changed in appearance, the walls having been calcimined. This, too, will be paid for out of the proceeds from the high school entertainment given in the fall.

The play, "The Daughter of the Desert," which was to have been given Friday, Feb. 9th, in the Maryland Theater, has been postponed until Saturday, February 10th. Tickets are now on sale at Gonder's pharmacy at 25, 35 and 50 cents. Come one, come all. The proceeds go toward paying for the new piano in the high school.

Prof. C. Edward Bender delivered a lecture in Accident last Friday evening. Frank Smouse accompanied him.

Fred Peddicord is absent from school on account of having had one toe amputated. We hope he will soon be able to return to school.

Disease of Garrett County Honey Bees.

The United States Department of Agriculture calls attention to the fact that European foul brood has been found to exist in Garrett county. The Department of Agriculture has no means of knowing how long the disease has existed in the region, but desires to notify bee keepers of the trouble and to suggest that, if not already informed concerning the disease, they inform themselves at once. Very frequently colonies of bees are destroyed by disease and the loss is attributed by the bee keeper to some other cause. Farmers' Bulletin No. 442, The Treatment of Bee Diseases, gives a description of the brood diseases and methods of treatment. It will be sent free on request to the Secretary of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

Attention is also called to the fact that the brood diseases do not at all injure honey for human consumption, so there need be no fear on the part of purchasers of honey.

DEFEND ACTION OF MARYLAND BOUNDARY

Majority of Commission File Exception to Minority Member's Report.

In the Supreme Court at Washington Tuesday Julius K. Monroe and Samuel S. Gannett, who with W. McC. Brown, were selected by authority of the Supreme Court of the United States to survey the disputed boundary line between the states of Maryland and West Virginia, filed a supplemental report today in the Supreme Court of the United States, taking exception to the conclusions of Brown, who filed a minority report some time ago.

Brown, representing the state of Maryland, refused to agree to the report of the commission. In their report Tuesday the two commissioners say:

"The boundary line as laid out and marked in 1910 and 1911, in our judgment, conforms as nearly as it is possible to make it to the opinion and decree of this court, and as located least disturbs the titles of the citizens residing along it."

THE PEOPLE'S FORUM.

Shall the Game Birds of Garrett County, Like the Deer, Become Extinct in Order That a Few Who Traffic in Them Can Make a few Dollars.

To the Editor of The Republican:

Citizens, there is now a bill before the Maryland Legislature which, if passed, will virtually exterminate the game birds in Garrett county inside of two years.

This bill, among other things, provides that the birds can be shipped out of the county and state, and if it becomes a law will result in the large city game dealers sending representatives here during the open season (like they did several years ago) and paying such prices for the birds that within two years a pheasant or partridge will cease to exist in Garrett county.

Several years ago we had a law of this kind and the game was shipped out in such quantities that when the law was finally repealed and a law closing the season for two years was passed there were hardly any birds left to protect. A majority of the States of the Union have laws positively forbidding the purchase and sale of game of all kinds therein, and almost all of them, with the exception of one or two Southern states where game is exceptionally plentiful, have laws forbidding the game to be taken out of the State or county where killed. This law, if passed, will enable only the rich in our big cities to consume our game, and after a year or two there will be no game for either the rich or for the citizens of Garrett county

While we still have some little game left let us take what steps we can to protect it, and I earnestly urge you to write to our representatives in the Legislature, especially Senator Speicher, who introduced the bill, protesting against its passage.

Remember the lesson of the deer—once gone, gone forever.

A FRIEND OF THE GAMEBIRDS.

The proposed law to which our correspondent takes exception in the above communication, is printed below. It was introduced in the Senate by Senator Speicher on January 30th, and reads as follows:

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That section 1 of Chapter 6 of the Acts of 1908, entitled "An Act for the further protection of pheasants, partridges or quail, woodcock, wild turkey and rabbits in Garrett County," be and the same is hereby repealed and re-enacted so as to read as follows:

1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That no person, corporation or company shall at any time kill or expose for sale, transport, have in possession, any pheasant, partridge or quail, woodcock, wild turkey and rabbit, after the same has been killed, for any purpose, except for consumption or food, within the State of Maryland; nor kill, expose for sale or have in possession any of the above-named game, with the intention of sending or transporting or having the same sent or transported beyond the limits of said State; provided, that nothing herein shall prevent non-residents who have taken out license to hunt in said county from taking with them out of said county any of the above-named game which they may have killed in said county; any person violating the provisions of this section shall be fined not less than ten dollars nor more than twenty-five dollars.

2. And be it enacted, That any person who shall have any of the aforementioned birds or game in their possession in Garrett county except during the months in which the killing or catching of the same is allowed by law, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be fined not less than ten dollars nor more than twenty-five dollars for each bird or game animal that they may have in their possession.

PITIFUL SIGHT WITH ECZEMA

"A few days after birth we noticed an inflamed spot on our baby's hip which soon began spreading until baby was completely covered even in his eyes, ears and scalp. For eight weeks he was bandaged from head to foot. He could not have a stitch of clothing on. Our regular physician pronounced it chronic eczema. He is a very able physician and ranks with the best in this locality, nevertheless, the disease began spreading until baby was completely covered. He was losing flesh so rapidly that we became alarmed and decided to try Cuticura Soap and Ointment.

"Not until I commenced using Cuticura Soap and Ointment could we tell what he looked like, as we dared not wash him, and I had been putting one application after another on him. On removing the scale from his head the hair came off, and left him entirely bald, but since we have been using Cuticura Soap and Ointment he has as much hair as ever. Four weeks after we began to use the Cuticura Soap and Ointment he was entirely cured. I don't believe anyone could have eczema worse than our baby.

"Before we used the Cuticura Remedies we could hardly look at him, he was such a pitiful sight. He would fuss until I would treat him, they semed to relieve him so much. Cuticura Soap and Ointment stand by themselves and the result they quickly and surely bring is their own recommendation." (Signed) Mrs. T. B. Rosser, Mill Hall, Pa., Feb. 20, 1911.

Although Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold by druggists and dealers everywhere, a sample of each, with 32-page book, will be mailed free on application to "Cuticura," Dept. 29 K, Boston.

SYNOPSIS.

Elam Harnish, known all through Alaska as "Burning Daylight," celebrates his 30th birthday with a crowd of miners at the Circle City Tivoli. The dance leads to heavy gambling, in which over $100,000 is staked. Harnish loses his money and his mine but wins the mail contract. He starts on his mail trip with dogs and sledge, telling his friends that he will be in the big Yukon gold strike at the start. Burning Daylight makes a sensationally rapid run across country with the mail, appears at the Tivoli and is now ready to join his friends in a dash to the new gold fields. Deciding that gold will be found in the up-river district Harnish buys two tons of flour, which he declares will be worth its weight in gold, but when he arrives with his flour he finds the big flat desolate. A comrade discovers gold and Daylight reaps a rich harvest. He goes to Dawson, becomes the most prominent figure in the Klondike and defeats a combination of capitalists in a vast mining deal. He returns to civilization, and, amid the bewildering complications of high finance, Daylight finds that he has been led to invest his eleven millions in a manipulated scheme. He goes to New York, and confronting his disloyal partners with a revolver he threatens to kill them if his money is not returned. They are cowed, return their stealings and Harnish goes back to San Francisco, where he meets his fate in Dede Mason, a pretty stenographer.

CHAPTER XI.

Daylight was in the thick of his spectacular and intensely bitter fight with the Coastwise Steam Navigation Company, and the Hawaiian, Nicaraguan, and Pacific-Mexican Steamship Company. He stirred up a bigger muss than he had anticipated, and even he was astounded at the wide ramifications of the struggle and at the unexpected and incongruous interests that were drawn into it. Every newspaper in San Francisco turned upon him. It was true, one or two of them had first intimated that they were open to subsidization, but Daylight's judgment was that the situation did not warrant such expenditure. Up to this time the press had been amusingly tolerant and good-naturedly sensational about him, but now he was to learn what virulent scurrilousness an antagonized press was capable of. Every episode of his life was resurrected to serve as foundations for malicious fabrications. Daylight was frankly amazed at the new interpretation put upon all that he had accomplished and the deeds he had done. From an Alaskan hero he was metamorphosed into an Alaskan bully, liar, desperado, and all-around "bad man." The whole affair sank to the deeper deeps of rancor and savageness. The poor woman who had killed herself was dragged out of her grave and paraded on thousands of reams of paper as a martyr and a victim to Daylight's ferocious brutality.

He was like a big bear raiding a bee-hive, and, regardless of the stings, he obstinately persisted in pawing for the honey. He gritted his teeth and struck back. Beginning with a raid on two steamship companies, it developed into a pitched battle with a city, state and continental coast line. Allied with him, on a splendid salary, with princely pickings thrown in, was a lawyer, Larry Hegan, a young Irishman with a reputation to make, and whose peculiar genius had been unrecognized until Daylight had picked up with him. It was Hegan who guided Daylight through the intricacies of modern politics, labor organization, and commercial and corporation law. It was Hegan, prolific of resource and suggestion, who opened Daylight's eyes to undreamed-of possibilities in twentieth-century warfare; and it was Daylight, rejecting, accepting, and elaborating, who planned the campaigns and prosecuted them. With the Pacific coast, from Puget Sound to Panama, buzzing and humming, and with San Francisco furiously about his ears, the two big steamship companies had all the appearance of winning. It looked as if Burning Daylight was being beaten slowly to his knees. And then he struck—at the steamship companies, at San Francisco, at the whole Pacific coast.

A Sudden Envy of This Young Fellow Came Over Daylight.

It was not much of a blow at first. A Christian Endeavor convention was being held in San Francisco, a row was started by Express Drivers' Union No. 927 over the handling of a small heap of baggage at Ferry Building. A few heads were broken, a score of arrests made, and the baggage was delivered. No one would have guessed that behind this petty wrangle was the fine Irish hand of Hegan, made potent by the Klondike gold of Burning Daylight. It was an insignificant affair at best—or so it seemed. But the Teamsters' Union took up the quarrel, backed by the whole Water Front Federation. Step by step, the strike became involved. A refusal of cooks and waiters to serve scab teamsters or teamsters' employers brought out the cooks and waiters. The butchers and meat cutters refused to handle meat destined for unfair restaurants. The combined Employers' Associations put up a solid front and found facing them the 40,000 organized laborers of San Francisco. The restaurant bakers and the bakery wagon drivers struck, followed by the milkers, milk drivers and chicken pickers. The building trades asserted its position in unambiguous terms, and all San Francisco was in turmoil.

But still, it was only San Francisco. Hegan's intrigues were masterly, and Daylight's campaign steadily developed. The powerful fighting organization known as the Pacific Slope Seaman's Union refused to work vessels the cargoes of which were to be handled by scab longshoremen and freight handlers. The union presented its ultimatum, and then called a strike. This had been Daylight's objective all the time. Every incoming coastwise vessel was boarded by the union officials and its crew sent ashore. And with the seamen went the firemen, the engineers and the sea cooks and waiters. Daily the number of idle steamers increased. It was impossible to get scab crews, for the men of the Seamen's Union were fighters trained in the hard school of the sea, and when they went out it meant blood and death to scabs. This phase of the strike spread up and down the entire Pacific coast, until all the ports were filled with idle ships, and sea transportation was at a standstill. The days and weeks dragged out, and the strike held. The Coastwise Steam Navigation Company and the Hawaiian, Nicaraguan, and Pacific-Mexican Steamship Company were tied up completely. The expenses of combating the strike were tremendous, and they were earning nothing, while daily the situation went from bad to worse, until "peace at any price" became the cry. And still there was no peace, until Daylight and his allies played out their hand, raked in the winnings, and allowed a goodly portion of a continent to resume business.

Daylight's coming to civilization had not improved him. True, he wore better clothes, had learned slightly better manners, and spoke better English. But he had hardened, and at the expense of his old-time, whole-souled geniality. Even his human affiliations were descending. Playing a lone hand, contemptuous of most of the men with whom he played, lacking in sympathy or understanding of them, and certainly independent of them, he found little in common with those to be encountered, say at the Alta-Pacific. In point of fact, when the battle with the steamship companies was at its height and his raid was inflicting incalculable damage on all business interests, he had been asked to resign from the Alta-Pacific. The idea had been rather to his liking, and he had found new quarters in clubs like the Riverside, organized and practically maintained by the city bosses.

One week-end, feeling heavy and depressed and tired of the city and its ways, he obeyed the impulse of a whim that was later to play an important part in his life. The desire to get out of the city for a whiff of country air and for a change of scene was the cause. Yet, to himself, he made the excuse of going to Glen Ellen for the purpose of inspecting a brickyard which Holdsworthy had sold him. He spent the night in the little country hotel, and on Sunday morning, astride a saddle horse rented from the Glen Ellen butcher, rode out of the village. The brickyard was close at hand on the flat beside the Sonoma Creek.

Resolving to have his fun first, and to look over the brickyard afterward, he rode up the hill, prospecting for a way cross country to get to the knolls. He left the country road at the first gate he came to and cantered through a hayfield. The grain was waist-high on either side the wagon-road, and he sniffed the warm aroma of it with delighted nostrils. At the base of the knolls he encountered a tumble-down stake-and-rider fence.

He tethered the horse and wandered on foot among the knolls. Their tops were crowned with century-old spruce trees, and their sides clothed with oaks and madronos and native holly. But to the perfect redwoods belonged the small but deep canyon that threaded its way among the knolls. Here he found no passage out for his horse, and leading the animal, he forced his way up the hillside. On the crest he came through an amazing thicket of velvet-trunked young madronos, and emerged on an open hillside that led down into a tiny valley. The sunshine was at first dazzling in its brightness, and he paused and rested, for he was panting from the exertion. Not of old had he known shortness of breath such as this, and muscles that so easily tired at a stiff climb. A tiny stream ran down the tiny valley through a tiny meadow that was carpeted knee-high with grass and blue and white nemophila.

Crossing the stream, Daylight followed a faint cattle trail over a low, rocky hill and through a wine-wooded forest of manzanita, and emerged upon another tiny valley, down which filtered another spring-fed, meadow-bordered streamlet.

"It sure beats country places and bungalows at Menlo Park," he communed aloud; "and if ever I get the hankering for country life, it's me for this every time."

An old wood-road led him to a clearing, where a dozen acres of grapes grew on wine-red soil. A cow-path, more trees and thickets, and he dropped down a hillside to the southeast exposure. Here, poised above a big forested canyon, and looking out upon Sonoma Valley, was a small farm house. With its barn and outhouses it snuggled into a nook in the hillside, which protected it from the west and north. It was the erosion from this hillside, he judged, that had formed the little level stretch of vegetable garden. The soil was fat and black, and there was water in plenty, for he saw several faucets running wide open. Forgotten was the brickyard. Nobody was at home, but Daylight dismounted and ranged the vegetable garden, eating strawberries and green peas, inspecting the old adobe barn and rusty plow and harrow, and rolling and smoking cigarettes while he watched the antics of several broods of young chicks and the mother hens.

Nothing could satisfy his holiday spirit now but the ascent of Sonoma Mountain. And here on the crest, three hours afterward, he emerged, tired and sweaty, garments torn and face and hands scratched, but with sparkling eyes and an unwonted zestfulness of expression. He felt the illicit pleasure of a schoolboy playing truant. The big gaming table of San Francisco seemed very far away. But there was more than illicit pleasure in his mood. It was as though he were going through a sort of cleansing bath. No room here for all the sordidness, meanness and viciousness that filled the dirty pool of city existence. He was loath to depart, and it was not for an hour that he was able to tear himself away and take the descent of the mountain. Working out a new route just for the fun of it, late afternoon was upon him when he arrived back at the wooded knolls.

Daylight cast about for a trail, and found one leading down the side opposite to his ascent. Circling the base of the knoll, he picked up with his horse and rode on to the farmhouse. Smoke was rising from the chimney, and he was quickly in conversation with a nervous, slender young man, who, he learned, was only a tenant on the ranch. How large was it? A matter of one hundred and eighty acres, though it seemed much larger. This was because it was so irregularly shaped. Yes, it included the clay-pit and all the knolls, and its boundary that ran along the big canyon was over a mile long. Oh, yes, he and his wife managed to scratch a living without working too hard. They didn't have to pay much rent. Hillard, the owner, depended on the income from the clay-pit. Hillard was well off and had big ranches and vineyards down on the flat of the valley. The brickyard paid ten cents a cubic yard for the clay. As for the rest of the ranch, the land was good in patches, where it was cleared, like the vegetable garden and the vineyard, but the rest of it was too much up-and-down.

"You're not a farmer," Daylight said.

The young man laughed and shook his head.

"No; I'm a telegraph operator. But the wife and I decided to take a two-years' vacation, and . . . here we are. But the time's about up. I'm going back into the office this fall after I get the grapes off."

As Daylight listened, there came to him a sudden envy of this young fellow living right in the midst of all this which Daylight had traveled through the last few hours.

"What in thunder are you going back to the telegraph office for?" he demanded.

The young man smiled with a certain wistfulness.

"Because we can't get ahead here. . . ." (he hesitated an instant), "and because there are added expenses coming. The rent, small as it is, counts; and besides, I'm not strong enough to effectually farm the place. If I owned it, or if I were a real husky like you, I'd ask nothing better. Nor would the wife." Again the wistful smile hovered on his face. "You see, we're country born, and after bucking with cities for a few years, we kind of feel we like the country best. We've planned to get ahead, though, and then some day we'll buy a patch of land and stay with it."

Furs in Millinery

FURS in millinery have never been so well received, as during the present winter. It seems that the vogue for gold and silver laces and nets, and their introduction with cloth of gold and silver into gowns, has made fur the best of all trimming touches and milliners have used this beautiful combination in many rich and becoming hats.

All furs have been used, but skunk, marten and fox are great favorites for trimming. They are used in bands and borders rather than in entire hats. The shorts furs like sealskin, beaver, ermine and broadtail, make up entire hats, and mink is a favorite used in either way.

One of the handsomest hats is a sealskin over a small bell-shaped foundation. Its only trimming is a prim little cravat bow and ends of ermine poised at the front. A hat of gold satin in the French sailor shape is trimmed into two rows of gold lace—the "tarnished brass" color describing the color accurately. The lace was edged with narrow border of sable and a paradise feather like the sable fur in color, but shaping to gold, furnished the trimming.

Black velvet shape trimmed with the heavy laces in white are handsome with skunk borders or bands. Soft caps of gold net lined with silk to match are finished with a broad band of marten about the face. Fancy ostrich or paradise feathers make the best trimming for these caps of velvet, with pointed crowns, and brims of cloth-of-gold, are finished with a band of marten and loops of the gold lace that is fulled about the face. Most of these combinations are equally good with silver lace and with it a greater variety in color of velvet may be used.

These rich hats, are particularly good from one standpoint. They may be worn with almost any gown or costume. Although the initial expense of a good fur hat is considerable the fur lasts for many seasons, in fact almost indefinitely and may be used again and again.

In millinery many cheap furs are used that are about as effective as more costly ones, but have not the same durability. They are called by the names of sealskins which they are made to imitate, and answer the purpose for one or two seasons, very well. Marten and skunk are very desirable and fox also will stand the sort of wear it gets in millinery very well.

Just now there is a fad for hat muff and neckpiece made of velvet or satin and bordered with fur. The pieces match, and many an old set of furs is being cut up—the good parts pieced into bands and used to decorate such sets. Sometimes a bag is included in the pretty outfit. Altogether the result is very pleasing.

MAKEUP OF THE COIFFURE

Original Effects Sought After by the Smartest Women Who Set the Fashions of Paris.

This year there is little absolute novelty in the matter of hair arrangement to chronicle, yet the changes, though subtle, are none the less potent—a frequent experience as is demonstrated when one puts on an old hat, carefully cherished, even when no distinct change in fashion has taken place.

The most important aspect of the coiffure nowadays is the silhouette it produces, a fact in union with the whole spirit of dress. And this is the first point to be carefully noticed and attained. A low, full outline is the one most generally sought after, and attained quite easily by the aid of many clever frames and adjustments provided. A decidedly Eastern effect is one of the most noticeable features in the new dressings which should not be overlooked by the woman who would be in the van of fashion. In the evening this has its opportunity, and Paris already speaks authoritatively of "Le Grand Mogul."

Then in the arrangement of the long hair a decided vogue may be prophesied for wide, soft plaits and twists, frequently made of well-waved hair, which breaks the formality and throws other lines into those employed by the treatment of plaiting or twisting. A chic arrangement takes the form virtually of a chignon—for want of a better word—covered with a very wide, soft plait of waved hair, the effect being of broken lines intertwined, which give different shades and pretty lights, while it is not till close examination that the plait itself is distinguished Cornered.

Lord Guilford tells a story of a young lady's resources at a bazaar. Business was in full swing when a young man strolled around the various stalls, with no intention of purchasing anything. As he passed a large, beautifully decorated stall the young lady seller detained him. "Won't you buy a cigarette holder, sir?" she asked. "No, thank you, I don't smoke," was the curt reply. "Or a pen wiper worked with my own hands?" "I don't write." "Then do have this nice box of chocolates." "I don't eat sweets." The young lady's patience was exhausted. "Sir," she said grimly, "will you buy this box of soap?"

The young man paid up.

Felt He Had Known the Worst.

Pat O'Shaunessy had been told by the doctor that he could live but a few hours, and his wife and assembled relatives and friends asked him whether there was one last wish he would like to have gratified? "There is," said Pat, "I'd like to hear the village band play once again." Accordingly the village band gathered. When at last it had played, "Say Au Revoir But Not Good-by," and had taken its own departure, Mrs. O'Shaunessy, kneeling at her husband's bedside, asked: "Can ye die aisy now, Pat." "Yis," replied Pat. "I can die aisy now. Hell has nothing worse than that."

Woman's Way.

"A number of men who get to the front are mere accidents."

"Yes," responded Senator Sorghum; "I sometimes think that what our government most needs is some reliable form of accident insurance."

IN MATCHTOWN.

Fortunately no Faith Was Required, For She Had None.

"I had no faith whatever, but on the advice of a hale, hearty old gentleman who spoke from experience, I began to use Grape-Nuts about 2 years ago," writes an Ohio woman, who says she is 40, is known to be fair, and admits that she is growing plump on the new diet.

"I shall not try to tell you how I suffered for years from a deranged stomach that rejected almost all sorts of food, and digested what little was forced upon it only at the cost of great distress and pain.

"I was treated by many different doctors and they gave me many different medicines, and I even spent several years in exile from my home, thinking change of scene might do me good. You may judge of the gravity of my condition when I tell you I was sometimes compelled to use morphine for weeks at a time.

"For two years I have eaten Grape-Nuts food at least twice a day and I can now say that I have perfect health. I have taken no medicine in that time—Grape-Nuts has done it all. I can eat absolutely anything I wish, without stomach distress.

"I am a business woman and can walk my 2 or 3 miles a day and feel better for doing so. I have to use brains in my work, and it is remarkable how quick, alert and tireless my mental powers have become." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

"There's a reason," and it is explained in the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

HAVE YOU SUSPECTED YOUR KIDNEYS?

There are two ways to tell whether you have weak kidneys.

The first is through the pains in the back and other outward signs. The second is by examination of the kidney secretions.

That is why physicians make such a careful examination when you apply for insurance, and if there is any sign of kidney trouble you are surely rejected.

Kidney disease is so dangerous that it is a bad mistake to overlook or neglect it, and if pain in the back, recurring headaches, or a fretful, nervous, tired condition makes you suspect some kidney trouble, take the trouble to watch the kidney secretions. Look for any of the following signs:

More or less than three and one half pints passed daily.
Too dark or too pale a color.
Passages too frequent, profuse, or much reduced, or scalding and painful.
Sandy, gritty or cloudy settlings.
Fat or oily-looking layer which gathers on the surface when allowed to stand, or a jelly-like thickening.
Staining of the linen or bad odor.

Temporary changes may occur for a time from things eaten, but if the changed appearance continues, your kidneys are out of order and need help. Neglect may prove serious.

Doan's Kidney Pills correct and regulate the kidney secretions, stimulate and heal sick kidneys, and thereby drive away backache, rheumatic pain, nervousness, dizziness, bloating and other results of kidney disease.

The following case is typical of the cures effected by Doan's Kidney Pills. Grateful testimony is the best evidence.

There are Two Ways to Find Out Whether the Kidneys are Sick or Weak

"Oh, what a pain!"

IN BED FIVE MONTHS.

Cured After Doctors Gave Up Hope.

J. L. Richardson, Red Key, Indiana, says: "A wrong diagnosis of my case caused me six months of terrible pain. When I had been in bed helpless for three months I was a mere bag of bones. The trouble began with pain in the back, and after a few weeks of it my nerves gave way completely and my eyes got bad. I had frequent dizzy spells, felt tired always, and never seemed to get enough sleep. I almost went crazy. The action of the kidneys kept getting worse, and the urine harder to pass. Twenty-four hours would go by without a passage. The doctors began to take the water from me with a catheter. They did this once a day for fifty days. On Christmas Day, five years ago, my doctor told me that my time was about up. I lived through the day and night, contrary to expectations, and the next day a friend gave me a box of Doan's Kidney Pills. I used it and was encouraged to continue. When I had taken five boxes I got out of bed. I kept on until entirely well, and from that day to this—five years—I have never had a twinge in my back."

Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Has Car to Display Anti-Tuberculosis Exhibit.

The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad has enlisted in the nation-wide crusade for the extermination of tuberculosis, having fitted up an anti-tuberculosis car at its Mount Clare shops at Baltimore for the Maryland Association for the Prevention and Relief of Tuberculosis which will visit the towns of Maryland in an educational campaign looking to the eradication of the white plague. The car is designed to display anti-tuberculosis exhibits and lectures will be delivered on the prevention of the disease by local physicians at the cities and towns to be visited in the state. The car may later tour other states which B. & O. lines reach.

The ravages of the white plague have spread with such alarming rapidity in the United States during the last twenty years, and with such fatal results, that every known means has been resorted to by medical science in coping with it. The work of the Maryland Society, in undertaking an educational campaign which will reach every section of the state, gives promise of being the most effectual move of kind undertaken up to this time. The Red Cross Society has accomplished wonderful results in stamping out tuberculosis, especially in the larger centers of population, and the plan of the Maryland Society is to supplement that work by disseminating such information through the country districts as will tend to put people on the defensive against the devastating disease.

The car which the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad has fitted up to further such ends is enameled in white, both inside and outside, and is thoroughly sanitary in design. The purpose is to bring the history of tuberculosis, its cause and effect, to the attention of the people of the state in such a way as to be comprehensive to all classes.

The car was opened to inspection February 2nd at the Mount Clare shops and the mechanics and other employes of the railroad visited it. The car will also visit the Riverside and Locust Point terminals of the railroad, where large numbers of railroad men are employed. On Saturday, February 17th, the car will be formally opened and inspected by Governor Goldsborough, Mayor Preston and other state officials as well as municipal authorities and Baltimore and Ohio officers. During the Health Congress to be held in Baltimore the week of February 19th to 24th, the car will remain at Mount Royal Station for the inspection of delegates to the Congress.

A large and powerful graphophone which carries the sound of the human voice more than a mile is a part of the equipment of the car, the purpose being to deliver "canned" lectures to farmers who find it impossible to hear the lectures of their local physicians during the visit of the car to their local railway station. An electric lighting plant is also installed in the car for heating and lighting purposes.

Self-Confessed Burglars Brought to Oakland.

Sheriff Maffett, who went to Brunswick last Wednesday night to bring to Oakland the two men arrested at the former place on suspicion of being implicated in the robbery of the Offutt store on Saturday night previous, arrived with the men last Thursday afternoon, one of them being Charles Smith, a colored man well known in Oakland where he lived for a year or more previous to last fall when he left and went to New Jersey. The other man, also colored, is a stranger. Smith, so it is alleged by the Brunswick officials, walked into the Mayor's office at that place Wednesday afternoon and gave himself up, confessing that he in company with the other negro and a white man, had planned to rob the store, coming all the way from New Jersey to do the job. The white man, seeing that he would be arrested, made a break from his partners in crime and escaped. Smith stated to the officer who made the arrest that after robbing the store the trio went to Grafton and from there doubled back to Brunswick, from which point they shipped the plunder to New Jersey.

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

Ice shipping is still on with a full day force, but indications now point to a thaw.

The meeting in the M. E. church closed Sunday night. The weather was very much against a large attendance. Two were added to the church and the membership was very greatly revived.

We would be pleased to have our young friend, Prof. F. E. Rathbun, appointed examiner of our public schools.

Mr. B. F. Crane will likely be our magistrate.

Judge Cuppett was visiting at Terra Alta this week.

Many people in the Park think their assessment too high.

Dr. C. E. Shelton is expected here Saturday.

Mrs. E. L. Winchell will visit friends and relatives at Woodsfied, Ohio, next week.

BITTINGER.

The Ground-Hog saw his shadow last week, or at least could have done so if he was foolish enough to venture forth.

On last Monday morning the mercury registered 10 degrees below zero, in this village.

On account of the storm, deep snow and low temperature last Sunday there was no session of Sunday school and no church service in this place.

Lewis Orendorf delivered several loads of hay to his customers in this neighborhood and at Jennings last week.

There was a wedding in the Slavish settlement, near this place, last week, and Miller's booze wagon, from Accident, brought over a load of "stuff" to spoil the beauty of the occasion.

On account of the inclement weather, Rev. C. H. Shull did not fill his appointment at Meadow Mountain and Fort Hill last Sunday.

Messrs. A. J. Oester and C. E. Ellithorp with their wives were entertained at the Lutheran parsonage, by Rev. and Mrs. Shull on Friday evening of last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Columbus Broadwater, of New Germany, were in this village on business one day last week.

Clarence Brenneman spent last Saturday and Sunday with friends at Springs, Pa., returning to this place on Monday afternoon.

ASHER GLADE.

The weather has been very stormy but the temperature moderate.

Miss Edith Frazee died at her home near Hazelton, W. Va., Feb. 3rd, after several weeks illness from typhoid fever.

Mr. Ben. Bruner, of Keeler Glade, is mining coal for Mr. Jesse Laraway.

Wm. H. Thomas has been hauling lumber to Friendsville the past week.

Mrs. Annie Umbel, who has been visiting relatives in Pittsburgh, Pa., has returned home.

Colds and lagrippe are prevalent in almost every home in this section.

Mrs. Wm. H. Thomas and Mrs. Wm. L. Thomas and little daughter were visiting at Mr. Hiram Fike's one day last week.

Mr. Hiram Fike hauled a load of ties to Somerfied, Pa., for Mr. L. H. Fike one day last week. CARTER.

Mr. J. F. Frantz, who has been numbered among the sick, is able to be about again.

Miss Nora Specht and Herbert Friend were Oakland callers Monday.

Sadie Wilburn was the guest of Mrs. James Walter Friday night.

Miss Edith Smith and Oscar Harris, of Swanton, were guests of Myrtle George Thursday and Friday.

THE INVESTIGATIONS OF FOREIGN MISSIONS

Pastor Russell, Gen. W. P. Hall and Others Reach Singapore.

In His Public Address Pastor Russell Declares, In the Words of St. Paul, "Of a Truth I Perceive That God Is No Respecter of Persons"—Various Beliefs Dissected.

PASTOR RUSSELL

Singapore, January 28.—Pastor Russell's text for today was, "Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons, but in every nation he that feareth Him and worketh righteousness is accepted of Him." (Acts x, 34, 35.) A brief report of his excellent address follows:—

Never before have I seen so cosmopolitan a city as Singapore. The swarms of Chinese, Malays, Hindoos, Javanese, Siamese, Singhalese, Burmese, Afghans, Madrassi, Tamils and many other nationalities are here interspersed by representatives of practically every nation in the world. The sight of these commingled peoples, only a few of whom know of, worship, or in any wise acknowledge "the Only True God, and Jesus Christ whom He hath sent," stirs my heart, and my head as well.

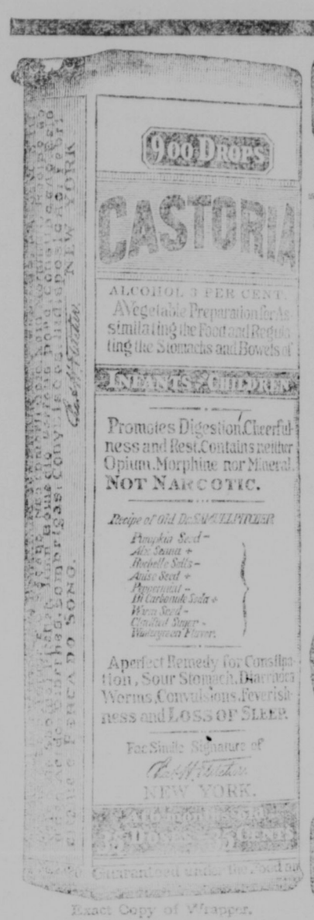
We recognize the clear statements of the Apostle that "Without faith it is impossible to please God (Hebrews xi, 6); and "How shall they believe in Him of whom they have not heard?" (Romans x, 14) and also the commission: "This Gospel of the Kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness."

Tried and Found Wanting.

A considerable class of very good people by their creeds tell us that if God had foreordained the heathen to salvation He would have seen to it that the Gospel was preached to them; and that their not hearing the Gospel signifies that God "passed them by" as "non-elect;" that the "elect" are to be found only amongst those who have been favored of God and who accept that favor and are "sanctified."

Another class of people by their creeds, which no longer truly represent them, tell us that they believe as above, only that they add another condition, namely, that "the elect," in order to be of "the elect," must be brought to a knowledge of water baptism—complete immersion—and must obey this teaching.

Another theory held denies that there is "election," and denies that any quantity of water is necessary, although it does recommend a little. This theory declares God's love for the heathen, but says that He made faith in Jesus' sacrificial death a condition of salvation and that the responsibility for the heathen's not knowing, and consequently their going to eternal torment, rests with Christians themselves. They say that God did His part in providing the Savior, and that the carrying of this knowledge is wholly dependent upon Christians. One would think that with this view few Christians would be able to sleep a single night.

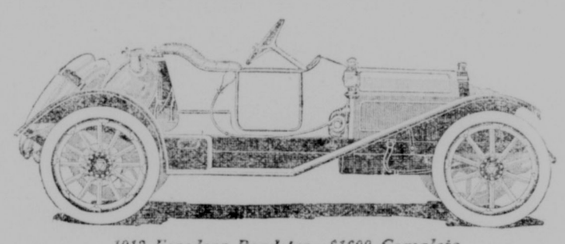


Some dear people, holding the views last mentioned, have started a "Men and Religion Forward Movement." They propose to use about two million dollars in starting the movement and thereby to collect a fund of thirty million dollars (six million pounds). Dear people! How I love them for their zeal, even though it be as the Apostle said, "not according to knowledge." (Romans x, 2.) If they could stand in Singapore's streets and journey with us a little the eyes of their understanding would be opened. They would begin to figure out that the sum they expect to spend in converting the world would be little over half a penny per soul! The United States Government statistics show that a century ago the numbers of heathen were six hundred millions and that today the number is double.

A Better Hope Found.

Some, repudiating the creeds of the past as no longer tenable, fault the Bible with being the basis for those creeds and abandon it with the creeds.

Let us, on the contrary, declare that the difficulty with the creeds of the past has been that they divided up the Word of God amongst them, and that each creed has a certain amount of gold as well as a large accumulation of dross. It would be too serious an undertaking for finites to put all the creeds into a crucible and separate the gold from the dross. Let us take the easier, the simpler method to which all Christian people should be willing to accede, namely: to wholly cast aside our creeds and go back to the Word of God—to the Bible—to the utterances of Jesus, the Apostles and Prophets.



St. Paul's declaration is that the Word of God is sufficient that the man of God may be fully furnished. (II Timothy iii, 17.) His further suggestion is that we "rightly divide the Word of Truth," and that "It is able to make us wise unto salvation." Let us follow this course and allow God's Word to be its own interpreter—allow one passage to throw light upon another; and thus let us reject none of the Divine testimony, but, bringing the whole together, find therein the Wisdom of God, the Justice of God, the Love of God, the Power of God unto salvation, to every one that believeth.

ROOSEVELT ANSWER TO GOVERNORS SOON

To Reply Over His Signature In A Day Or Two To Call To Run.

New York, Feb. 12.—The Times, in a special dispatch from Oyster Bay, says:

"Colonel Roosevelt will not act hastily in replying to the letter drafted as a result of the conference of eight Western Governors and other progressives held on Saturday at Chicago, and which was at once dispatched to him. It is understood that he regards it as no ordinary thing, and that it is a matter which will require serious consideration.

"The fact that the letter was signed by eight Governors, among them Governor Vesey of South Dakota, who heretofore had not openly proclaimed his partiality for Roosevelt, it is said, has forced the Colonel to give much thought to the document. Colonel Roosevelt declined to discuss the Chicago conference.

"Friends predict that at least six more Governors will soon come out in the open for him, and they are waiting impatiently for his reply to the Chicago letter. They say that the action taken at the conference has greatly pleased the Colonel. His reply, it is expected, will not come indirectly, but over his own signature, perhaps within the next few days.

"Governor Johnson of California, who was one of the backers of Senator La Follette, also is expected to come out for Roosevelt soon. He is now in New York, and, it is said, waiting until he can have an interview with Senator La Follette and convey to him the information that the Republicans on the coast believe that Colonel Roosevelt should receive the nomination.

"Gov. Robert P. Bass of New Hampshire, who attended the Chicago conference, will see Colonel Roosevelt on his way home and bring him full details of the conference. In all probability he will call upon the Colonel in New York on Tuesday."

LUTHERANS TO HAVE NEW CHURCH

Grantsville Congregatsns Making An Effort to Comply with Deceased Lady's Will.

By the terms of the last will and testament of the late Mrs. Sarah A. Broadwater, of Grantsville, which was filed in the Orphans' Court of Garrett county a week or more ago, the Lutherans of her native town will benefit to the extent of the sum of $1500, should they comply with the terms of the instrument, and a determined effort to do so has already begun.

The bequest wherein the Lutherans of Grantsville will derive the benefit is conditioned upon the erection of a new church in the town within two years from the death of Mrs. Broadwater, the building to cost not less than $3500, of which sum the will of the lady provides $1500. The sum of $1000 was placed in trust for Miss Susan Stofer, with whom Mrs. Broadwater resided, and the balance of the estate, amounting to several thousand dollars, was bequeathed to the Susquehana University, a Lutheran institution, located at Selins Grove, Pa.

In case the Lutherans at Grantsville fail to comply with the provisions of the will the $1500 will revert to the University at the end of two years.

An effort has already been started by the members of the church at Grantsville to secure the amount to be raised. According to the Meyersdale Republican "an oyster supper was held at the home of S. C. Loechel, in the Casselman valley, about four miles from Grantsville, on Monday night, for the benefit of the Lutheran church at Grantsville, being given by the members of that congregation. Too much can not be said in praise of Mr. and Mrs. Loechel, who, while members of the Salisbury charge, cheerfully gave their home and their time in behalf of their sister church, eating their luncheon from a corner of the kitchen range in order that the supper tables need not be disturbed, taking down a bed to convert another room into a supper room, and experiencing many other inconveniences as cheerfully as though having their house turned upside down were an every day occurrence. The Grantsville men in the congregation who had sleds gave them in behalf of the guests, so that no expense was entailed other than the price of the oysters. Mr. Loechel sent his team to Salisbury for part of the crowd from that place. Everybody was willing to help. Grandmother Bonig kept a dozen or more little people over night that their parents might be present at the supper, and contributions came in from every side.

"The sleighing was splendid, the night beautiful although a little cold. Mrs. L. P. Young, the pastor's wife, and a number of members from the Salisbury charge lent their support, together with a jolly crowd of young people from that place. Editor W. S. Livengood, from Meyersdale, and his good wife graced the occasion with their presence Grantsville, regardless of denomination turned out en masse. Mr. Park, a salesman in H. C. Bonig's crowd, admitted that he had never met so many nice people at one time before. There were no mishaps, except the overturning of one sled load of young people, but little things like that do not count when working for the church.

"The supper was a complete success, both as a social gathering and financial venture. One hundred and twenty-three meal tickets were sold at 50 cents ench. Everything was donated, except the oysters, and almost enough extra cash was taken in to pay for the oysters, making the profit of the evening nearly sixty dollars, all of which goes toward the building fund of the new Lutheran church at Grantsville."

Will Have Charge of Markleysburg Normal.

Prof. J. C. Beahm, principal of the Bittinger public school, has been appointed by the school authorities of Markleysburg, Pa., principal of the normal school at that place which will open on Monday, April 22nd, and continue for a term of eight weeks. In addition to the common school branches Prof. Beahm will instruct in higher mathematics, philosophy, Latin, vocal music and voice culture.

JANUARY COLDEST MONTH EVER EXPERIENCED

Lowest Mark Was Forty Degrees Below Zero—Temperature Below Zero Ten Days.

During the month there were ten days when the temperature was at or below zero, the lowest mark being forty degrees below on Saturday, the 13th, at a little after 7 o'clock in the morning as registered by a Government thermometer at the green houses of the H. Weber & Sons Company, a mile east of Oakland. Other cold days when the mercury showed at or below zero were the 5th, 6th, 8th, 14th, 16th, 22nd, 23rd and 25th. There were twenty days when the minimum was 20 or lower and only fifteen days when the maximum was 28 or more. There was one day, the 13th, when the maximum was only 2 above. During the month the warmest mark was only forty above.

Snow prevailed nearly the entire month, sleighing being excellent after the roads had been broken, in which condition they still remain with several inches of ice beneath from eight inches to six or eight feet of snow which drifted into protected places along nearly every road in the county. People got accustomed to the old fashioned winter and when Mr. Ground Hog showed himself on the 2nd of February and without a doubt saw his shadow, the people had no misgivings but stood ready for his Hogship to do his worst if necessary and cheered him back to his burrow to sleep out another six weeks, during which time we, in all probability, will enjoy more of the "beautiful" snow and have no dearth of ice for mint juleps next summer.

The attration at the Maryland Theatre on Friday, Feb'y 16th, for one night, will be "The Man on the Box," the Harold McGrath comedy success. The play is considered to be one of the best comedies ever staged.

SYNOPSIS.

Elam Harnish, known all through Alaska as "Burning Daylight," celebrates his 30th birthday with a crowd of miners at the Circle City Tivoli. The dance leads to heavy gambling, in which over $100,000 is staked. Harnish loses his money and his mine but wins the mail contract. He starts on his mail trip with dogs and sledge, telling his friends that he will be in the big Yukon gold strike at the start. Burning Daylight makes a sensationally rapid run across country with the mail, appears at the Tivoli and is now ready to join his friends in a dash to the new gold fields. Deciding that gold will be found in the up-river district Harnish buys two tons of flour, which he declares will be worth its weight in gold, but when he arrives with his flour he finds the big flat desolate. A comrade discovers gold and Daylight reaps a rich harvest. He goes to Dawson, becomes the most prominent figure in the Klondike and defeats a combination of capitalists in a vast mining deal. He returns to civilization, and, amid the bewildering complications of high finance, Daylight finds that he has been led to invest his eleven millions in a manipulated scheme. He goes to New York, and confronting his disloyal partners with a revolver, he threatens to kill them if his money is not returned. They are cowed, return their stealings and Harnish goes back to San Francisco where he meets his fate in Dede Mason, a pretty stenographer. He makes large investments and gets into the political ring. For a rest he goes to the country.

CHAPTER XI.—Continued.

Daylight could not persuade himself to keep to the traveled roads that day, and another cut across country to Glen Ellen brought him upon a canyon that so blocked his way that he was glad to follow a friendly cowpath. This led him to a small frame cabin. The doors and windows were open, and a cat was nursing a litter of kittens in the doorway, but no one seemed at home. He descended the trail that evidently crossed the canyon. Part way down, he met an old man coming up through the sunset. In his hand he carried a pail of foamy milk. He wore no hat, and in his face, framed with snow-white hair and beard, was the ruddy glow and content of the passing summer day. Daylight thought that he had never seen so contented looking a being.

"How old are you, daddy?" he queried.

"Eighty-four," was the reply. "Yes, sirree, eighty-four, and spryer than most."

"You must a' taken good care of yourself," Daylight suggested.

"I don't know about that. I ain't loafed none. I walked across the plains with an ox team and fit Injuns in '51, and I was a family man with seven youngsters. I reckon I was as old then as you are now, or pretty nigh on to it."

"Don't you find it lonely here?"

The old man shifted the pail of milk and reflected.

"That all depends," he said oracularly. "I ain't never been lonely except when the old wife died. Some fellers are lonely in a crowd, and I'm one of them. That's the only time I'm lonely, is when I go to 'Frisco. But I don't go no more, thank you 'most to death. This is good enough for me. I've been right here in this valley since '54—one of the first settlers after the Spaniards."

The old man chuckled, and Daylight rode on, singularly at peace with himself and all the world. It seemed that the old contentment of trail and camp he had known on the Yukon had come back to him. He could not shake from his eyes the picture of the old pioneer coming up the trail through the sunset light. He was certainly going some for eighty-four. The thought of following his example entered Daylight's mind, but the big game of San Francisco vetoed the idea.

CHAPTER XII.

Instead of returning to the city on Monday, Daylight rented the butcher's horse for another day and crossed the bed of the valley to its eastern hills. As on the previous day, just for the joy of it, he followed cattle-trails at haphazard and worked his way up toward the summits. Coming out upon a wagon road that led upward, he followed it for several miles, emerging in a small, mountain-encircled valley, where half a dozen poor ranchers farmed the wine-grapes on the steep slopes. Beyond, the road pitched upward. Dense chaparral covered the exposed hillsides, but in the creases of the canyons huge spruce trees grew, and wild oats and flowers.

Late in the afternoon he broke through, and followed a well-defined trail down a dry canyon. The dry canyon gave place to one with a slender ribbon of running water. The trail ran into a wood-road, and the wood-road emerged across a small flat upon a slightly traveled country road. There were no farms in this immediate section, and no houses. The soil was meager, the bed-rock either close to the surface or constituting the surface itself. Manzanita and scrub-oak, however, flourished and walled the road on either side with a jungle growth. And out a runway through this growth a man suddenly scuttled in a way that reminded Daylight of a rabbit.

He was a little man, in patched overalls; bareheaded, with a cotton shirt open at the throat and down the chest. The sun was ruddy-brown in his face, and by it his sandy hair was bleached on the ends to peroxide blonde. He signed to Daylight to halt, and held up a letter.

"If you're going to town, I'd be obliged if you mail this," he said.

"I sure will." Daylight put it into his coat pocket. "Do you live hereabouts, stranger?"

But the little man did not answer. He was gazing at Daylight in a surprised and steadfast fashion.

"I know you," the little man announced. "You're Elam Harnish—Burning Daylight, the papers call you. Am I right?"

Daylight nodded.

"Well, I'm glad I wrote that letter this afternoon," the little man went on, "or else I'd have missed seeing you. I've seen your photo in the papers many a time, and I've a good memory for faces. I recognized you at once. My name's Ferguson."

"Do you live hereabouts?" Daylight repeated his query.

"Oh, yes. I've got a little shack back here in the bush a hundred yards and a pretty spring, and a few fruit trees and berry bushes. Come in and take a look. And that spring is a dandy. You never tasted water like it. Come in and try it."

Walking and leading his horse, Daylight followed the quick-stepping, eager little man through the green tunnel and emerged abruptly upon the clearing, if clearing it might be called, where wild nature and man's earth-scratching were inextricably blended. It was a tiny nook in the hills, protected by the steep walls of a canyon mouth. Here were several large oaks, evidencing a richer soil. The erosion of ages from the hillside had slowly formed this deposit of fat earth. Under the oaks, almost buried in them, stood a rough, unpainted cabin, the wide veranda of which, with chairs and hammocks, advertised an out-of-doors bedchamber. Daylight's keen eyes took in everything. The clearing was irregular, following the patches of the best soil, and every fruit tree and berry bush, and even each vegetable plant, had the water personally conducted to it. The tiny irrigation channels were everywhere, and along some of them the water was running.

"What do you think of it, eh?"

"Hand-reared and manicured, every blessed tree," Daylight laughed, but the joy and satisfaction that shone in his eyes contented the little man.

"Why, d'ye know, I know every one of those trees as if they were sons of mine. I planted them, nursed them, fed them, and brought them up. Come on and peep at the spring."

"It's sure a hummer," was Daylight's verdict, after due inspection and sampling, as they turned back for the house.

The interior was a surprise. The cooking being done in the small, lean-to kitchen, the whole cabin formed a large living-room. A great table in the middle was comfortably littered with books and magazines. All the available wall space, from wall to ceiling, was occupied by filled bookshelves. It seemed to Daylight that he had never seen so many books assembled in one place. Skins of wildcat, 'coon and deer lay about on the pine-board floor.

Daylight found himself charmed and made curious by the little man. Why was he hiding away here in the chaparral, he and his books? So it was, when between them they had washed and wiped the dishes and put them away, and had settled down to a comfortable smoke, that Daylight put his question.

"Look here, Ferguson. Every since we got together, I've been casting about to find out what's wrong with you, to locate a screw loose somewhere, but I'll be danged if I've succeeded. What are you doing here, anyway?"

Ferguson frankly showed his pleasure at the questions.

"First of all," he began, "the doctors wound up by losing all hope for me. Gave me a few months at best, and that, after a course in sanitariums and a trip to Europe and another to Hawaii. They tried electricity and forced feeding and fasting. I was a graduate of about everything in the curriculum. They kept me poor with their bills, while I went from bad to worse. The trouble with me was twofold; first I was a born weakling; and next, I was living unnaturally—too much work, and responsibility and strain. I was managing editor of the Times-Tribune in San Francisco, and I wasn't strong enough for the strain. Of course my body went back on me, and my mind, too, for that matter. It had to be bolstered up with whisky, which wasn't good for it any more than was the living in clubs and hotels good for my stomach and the rest of me. So I quit, quit everything, absolutely, and came to live in the Valley of the Moon—that's the Indian name, you know, for Sonoma Valley. I lived in the lean-to the first year; then I built the cabin and sent for my books. I never knew what happiness was before, nor health. Look at me now and dare to tell me that I look forty-seven."

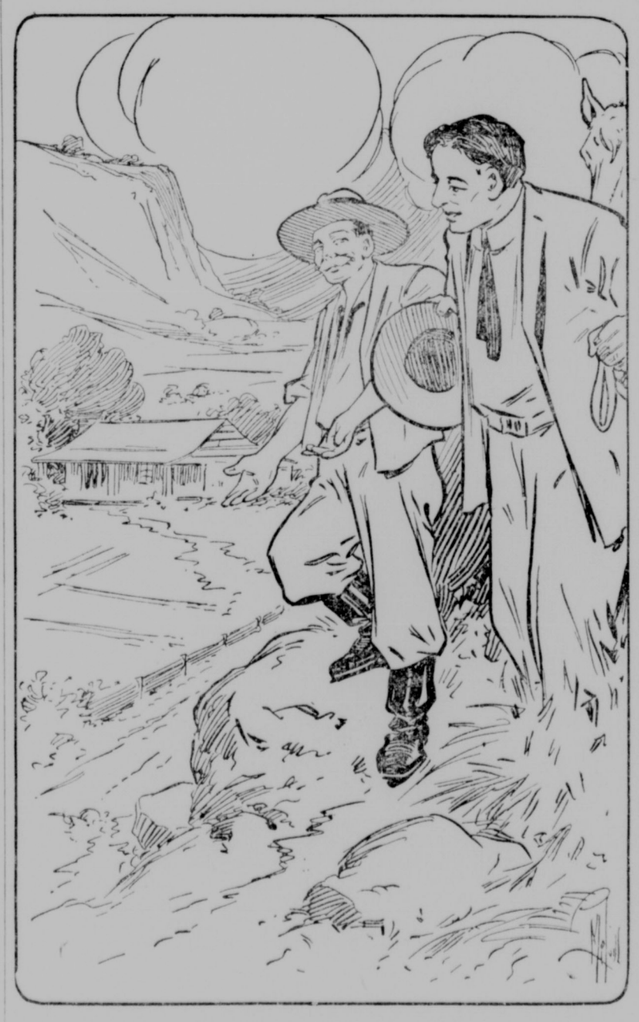
"Yet the day I came here I looked nearer sixty, and that was fifteen years ago."

They talked along, and Daylight looked at the world from new angles. Here was a man, neither bitter nor cynical, who laughed at the city-dwellers and called them lunatics; a man who did not care for money, and in whom the lust for power had long since died.

It was not until ten o'clock that Daylight parted from Ferguson. As he rode along through the starlight, the idea came to him of buying the ranch on the other side of the valley. There was no thought in his mind of ever intending to live on it. His game was in San Francisco. But he liked the ranch, and as soon as he got back to the office he would open up negotiations with Hillard.



Here Was a Man Who Laughed at City Dwellers and Called Them Lunatics.

The time passed, and he played on at the game. San Francisco's attitude toward Daylight had undergone a change. While he, with his slashing buccaneer methods, was a distinct menace to the more orthodox financial gamblers, he was nevertheless so grave a menace that they were glad enough to let him alone. He had already taught them the excellence of letting a sleeping dog lie.

Dede Mason was still in the office. He had made no more overtures, discussed no more books. He had no active interest in her, and she was to him a pleasant memory of what had never happened, a joy, which, by his essential nature, he was barred from ever knowing. Yet, while his interest had gone to sleep and his energy was consumed in the endless battles he waged, he knew every trick of the light on her hair, every quick definite mannerism of movement, every line of her figure as expounded by her tailor-made gowns. Several times, six months or so apart, he had increased her salary, until now she was receiving ninety dollars a month. Beyond this he dared not go, though he got around it by making the work easier. This he had accomplished after her return from a vacation, by retaining her substitute as an assistant. Also, he had changed his office suite, so that now the two girls had a room by themselves. The more he saw of her, and the more he thought he knew of her, the more unapproachable did she seem to him. But since he had no intention of approaching her, this was anything but an unsatisfactory fact. He was glad he had her in his office, and hoped she'd stay, and that was about all.

Daylight did not improve with the passing years. The life was not good for him. He was growing stout and soft, and there was unwonted flabbiness in his muscles. The more he drank cocktails, the more he was compelled to drink in order to get the desired result, the inhibitions that eased him down from the concert pitch of his operations. And with this went wine, too, at meals, and the long drinks after dinner of Scotch and soda at the Riverside. Then, too, his body suffered from lack of exercise; and, from lack of decent human associations, his moral fibers were weakening. Never a man to hide anything, some of his escapades became public, such as speeding, and of joy-rides in his big red motor car down to San Jose with companions distinctly sporty—incidents that were narrated as good fun and comically in the newspapers.

Destruction of Rats.

An East Africa publication contains a description of a method of destroying rats, followed in Java, in which carbon bisulphate in employed. In carrying out the method a small quantity, usually about half a teaspoonful of the carbon bisulphide is poured into the rat hole and after waiting a few moments to let the liquid evaporate, the mixture of air and vapor is lighted, a small explosion resulting and filling the hole with poisonous gas, killing the rats instantly. Such a process practiced openly might be objectionable under some circumstances because of danger from fire resulting from the explosion and a field for invention appears to offer itself to provide some form of fire-proof gun or explosion chamber suitably formed to be inserted in the mouth of the rat hole and adapted to enclose the explosion and discharge the resulting noxious gas into the hole.—Scientific American.

INVESTIGATION SHOWS MONEY OBTAINED BY PRODUCING PORK

West Virginia Expert Gives Result of Experiment With Two Brood Sows With Twelve Pigs—Animals Conservatively Valued at $65 When They Were Eight Weeks Old.

First Prize Small Yorkshires.

(By A. J. LEGG, West Virginia.)

A few years ago I was talking to a farmer and business man who said that he always thought that it cost nearly 20 cents per pound to produce pork.

At that time he had not had much experience with hogs and I could not give him any definite figures on the subject, but it put me to investigating.

I put a 31-pound grade pig in a pen, fed him and mixed ground feed such as the farm produced mixed with water.

When the pig was five months old he was slaughtered and weighed 103 pounds.

The pig had eaten 384 pounds of feed at $1.00 per hundred pounds. If the pig is valued at $2.00 at the time the feeding began it would make the pork cost $0.056 per pound.

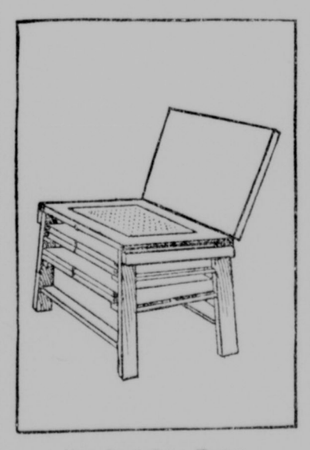
Last spring I weighed and kept an account of the feed required for two brood sows with twelve pigs.

The feeding began about a week before the pigs were farrowed and continued until the pigs were eight weeks old.

At the end of the period I found that the pigs averaged thirty pounds each and that I had fed them the following ration with the retail value that prevailed here at the time:

635 lbs. wheat middlings, $1.70 per 100	$ 9.10
One and a quarter bushels of corn, $1.00 bushel	1.25
102 lbs. mixed feed, $2.00 per 100	2.04
50 lbs. corn meal, $2.00 per 100.	1.00
2½ bu. potatoes, 40c per bu...	1.00
Total	$14.00

If we divide $14.39 by twelve, the number of pigs, we find that the feed bill cost practically $1.20 each for the pigs.



A fair estimate of the labor caring for the sows and pigs and feed for the sows during the gestation period would likely add $1.00 per head to the cost of the pigs which would put the cost up to $2.20 each.

They would have sold readily at from three to four dollars each right from the farm. I sold nine of them for breeding stock for $52.50 and have on hand one of the best ones for a brood sow and two of the smaller ones for killing. In all the pigs are conservatively valued at $65 at eight weeks old.

APPARATUS FOR TESTING SEED

Iowa Man Designs Cabinet for Trying Out of Many Varieties of Corn in One Cabinet.

An apparatus for testing seed corn has been designed by an Iowa man and provides for the trying out of many varieties of corn in the one cabinet. A stand carries a series of trays, each tray made in two parts, hinged together at one side. The upper part is a lid, but the lower part has a shallow rectangular depression in it. In this depression are rows of little holes and over them is placed an absorbent sheet cut to fit the rectangle. This sheet has perforations above the holes in the bottom of the tray. The seeds are placed in the holes and the absorbent sheet laid on top. Water can then be applied through the perforations and the absorbent quality of the top sheet will retain the moisture. Means are provided for identifying each individual seed so that the tester can tell which varieties do the best.

New Seed Corn Tester.

Study Experimental Forestry.

In order to give students practical work in forestry the forestry department of the College of Agriculture, Columbus, O., is preparing to plant two acres of land on the university farm to forest trees. Seeds of from 12 to 18 kinds of trees will be planted in rows for experimental purposes. This includes catalpa, ash, locust, walnut, hickory, butternut, sycamore, maple, boxelder, oak, osage orange, blackberry, linden, allanthus and others. The five acres of forest tree nursery near the university arboretum will also be planted to trees for experimental purposes. About 30 bushels of seed have been gathered this fall by Prof. C. H. Goetz and his classes in forestry. The department has also received between 300 and 400 conifer seedlings from the forest service of New Mexico, and is expecting more from other states.

TRAP NEST IS A MONEY MAKER

Keeps Records of Hens and Helps Eliminate "Star Boarders"—Conserves Valuable Breeders.

The conversion of a flock that barely pays for the feed it eats into one which will lift the mortgage from the home farm is largely a matter of elimination of the "star boarder," and the conservation of the 200-egg-a-year hens. Those who have made special study of this subject are firm believers in the trap nest. To discover the best egg producers one must use the trap nest, or some method of keeping a record of eggs laid by individual hens. The trap nest is about the best thing that has been discovered in the poultry business.

There will be but slow improvement in breeding without an egg record for each hen in the flock. The objection to the trap nest is that it requires too much labor for the farmer. That is true in the majority of cases. Not many farmers can give the necessary time. It is here that the state or experiment station should and can be a great aid. There should be a breeding station or several in every state, where the farmers and poultry raisers could secure at a fair price cockerels of good egg-laying pedigree to mate with their flocks. It would not take so very long to furnish those farmers who had improvement of their flocks in view with a male bird whose ancestry for two generations had an egg record of 150 eggs a year or more.

It is the Len of vigor that lays; without constitutional vitality she will not lay. That is undoubtedly true. A hen may have egg-laying capacity, but without vigor she will not produce eggs. On the other hand, the hen may have vigor without egg-laying capacity. She may have constitutional vitality and lay less than 20 eggs a year. The point is that by selecting vigor alone will not make rapid progress in breeding up a strain of heavy layers. Although vigor is one of the main things, we must select both vigor and egg capacity. The trap nest enables us to do this. The hen that lays 200 eggs a year has good vitality, so that a good egg record is an indication of high vitality. It is possible that the 200-egg hen will not produce chicks of good vigor. It is also possible that her eggs may not be fertile. This is also possible in the poor layer. It is also possible that heavy laying may injure her breeding qualities. That is a debatable point, but the fact remains that the hen that lays 150 eggs or more a year has good vitality, and it is such hens that one must depend upon to increase egg production and make poultry keeping more profitable.

A high egg record indicates constitutional vitality and stamina. The trap nest, therefore, selects for vigor as well as egg-laying capacity. If each state would take hold of this in a practical way, without doubt in a few years it would add millions of dollars to the profits of poultry keepers, and at the same time help solve the nation's food supply.

REACHED LIMIT OF TORTURE

Real Reason Why Burglar Gave Evening Papers Chance to Use Effective Headline.

A burglar broke into a New York mansion early the other morning and found himself after wandering about the place in the music room. Hearing footsteps approaching, he took refuge behind a screen. From eight to nine the eldest daughter had a singing lesson. From nine to ten the second daughter took a piano lesson. From 10 to 11 the eldest son got his instruction on the violin. From 11 to 12 the younger boy got a lesson on the flute and piccolo. Then, at 12:15, the family got together and practiced music on all their instruments. They were fixing up for a concert. At 12:45 the porch-climber staggered from behind the screen. "For heavens' sake, send for the police!" he shrieked. "Torture me no longer!" And in the evening paper there was the headline: "Nervy Children Capture Desperate Burglar."

"Is it?" replied the editor of the Chicago Record-Herald, as he hastily glanced at the opening lines. "Have you ever been alone with nature?"

"I have, and, oh, it is glorious—glorious!"

"Here's a dime. Get on a trolley car and ride as far as you can. Go back to nature and spend another hour or two alone with her. You say you plucked the hazel blossoms by the stream. If you are able to find any place where you can do that let me know. I want to watch you while you do it."

Egyptian Costume

IN NUN'S VEILING.

For this costume, nun's veiling in a soft shade of gray is used; a front fastening is simulated, but the actual fastening is at back. The vest of tucked spotted net fills in the opening of front, then the joint is covered by a strap of silk carried down a little to the left; buttons and cord loops form a finish; five small tucks are made on the shoulders. The wristbands are also tucked.

Materials required: 1½ yards 40 inches wide, 6 buttons, ⅝ yard net 18 inches wide.

Simple Frocks for Girls.

Embroidery plays an important role in some of the chic little evening frocks, but it is most often in self-color and has no touch of gorgeousness such as is shown in many of the embroideries for older folk. A little crystal or gold or silver is admissible, but nothing striking or elaborate.

A delightful little frock of the palest of pink tulle was made up over a pink silk foundation. The tulle was sprinkled with crystal dewdrops. The only trimming was ruches of tulle trimming the lace fichu and bands of lace trimming which edges the ruffle on the skirt. At the right side of the frock at the waist line there was a large black bow edged with a plaited frill.

Vogue of Polka Dots.

Unless the fancy is killed by the passing of the present season, we are going back to polka dots of all kinds and descriptions for next year. Just now one sees disks and dots sprinkling and powdering everything from velvet to cotton. But the big dots that are almost full moons are the most favored of the minute.

NEW FROCKS FROM WORTH'S

This Great Maker Caters to the Taste of the Grande Dame, Not to the Actress.

Among designers of costumes Worth stands apart. He caters to crowned heads and the grande dames and not to the stage.

At a display of his gowns recently few changes in style were noticed. Waists are worn rather high, skirts are still straight and most of the bodices are collarless.

Two pale blue dinner gowns were marvels of beauty. Each had a narrow pointed train and white lace trimmed the bodices. One had a folded fichu of the lace, which was most effective.

Several afternoon gowns were especially lovely. One of these had a narrow straight skirt, made to touch, and with a high waist line. The bodice was of black silk veiled with chiffon and had a deep band of gold embroidery across the front. It was cut rather low at the neck and had sleeves which came slightly below the elbow.

Another frock was of moleskin chiffon velvet, made in virtually the same style. It had a band of colored embroidery instead of the gold.

A third, of iron-gray velvet, was trimmed with folds of soft silk and embroidered with silver.

Sets of furs were on display suiting the costumes to perfection. Regal sets of sable and ermine, worth a king's ransom, were worn by the models.

Scarfs are extremely wide and shawl-like, and muffs larger than ever.

To Renovate Velvet.

A velvet dress may be renovated by hanging it up in a bathroom filled with steam from the hot water faucet. Stop up the doors and windows so that the steam will not escape, and spread out the garment over a dress hanger suspended from the ceiling so that the steam can reach it on all sides, and the velvet will not be pressed against anything. Let it dry in the same position. It should not be touched in any way until it is absolutely dry. The steam should be turned off and the windows opened when it is ready for drying.

Gown Fastenings.

A noticeable feature of the fall and winter dresses has been the center-front fastening or the trimming applied in a manner to indicate this closing. Street dresses have double rows of buttons from the yoke line to the skirt bottom, and evening dresses have crystal buttons or simulated ones made of beads and rhinestones down the center of the waist and tunic.

IN LESS STRENUOUS TIMES

Explanation of the Differences Between Domestic Standards Now and Those of Long Ago.

In the Woman's Home Companion there is an interesting presentation of the difference that exists between the domestic standard of young married women of today and those of the past generation. How did the women of the middle class of a generation or two ago manage when they could not keep help? Following is the answer quoted from a Companion editorial:

"They lived according to their means; they did not set up impossible standards, and they knew much less about the science of bringing up children. They had no special style to keep up; gave the children a weekly bath; kept the table set between meals; did not serve their meals in courses, but put all the food on the table at once; confined their social affairs to evening calls and parties, and church suppers, at which they wore the same black silk dress for at least two seasons; in short, every woman did only what she could, and her friends made it easier for her by doing likewise."

IN AGONY WITH ITCHING

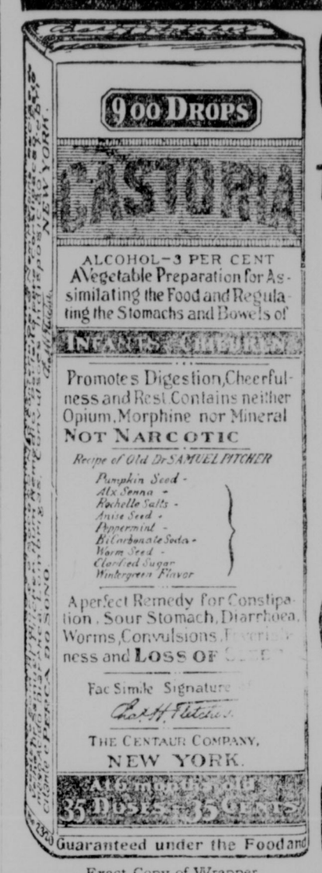
"About four years ago I broke out with sores on my arms like boils. After two months they were all over my body, some coming, and some going away. In about six months the boils quit, but my arms, neck and body broke out with an itching, burning rash. It would burn and itch, and come out in pimples like grains of wheat. I was in a terrible condition; I could not sleep or rest. Parts of my flesh were raw, and I could scarcely bear my clothes on. I could not lie in bed in any position and rest. In about a year the sores extended down to my feet. Then I suffered agony with the burning, itching sores. I could hardly walk and for a long time I could not put on socks.

"All this time I was trying everything I could hear of, and had the skill of three doctors. They said it was eczema. I got no benefit from all this. I was nearly worn out, and had given up in despair of ever being cured when I was advised by a friend to try Cuticura Remedies. I purchased Cuticura Soap, Ointment, and Resolvent, and used exactly as directed. I used the Cuticura Remedies constantly for four months, and nothing else, and was perfectly cured. It is now a year, and I have not had the least bit since. I am ready to praise the Cuticura Remedies at any time. (Signed) E. L. Cate, Exile, Ky., Nov. 10, 1910.

Although Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold by druggists and dealers everywhere, a sample of each, with 32-page book, will be mailed free on application to "Cuticura," Dept. L, Boston.

Where the Fruit Grows.

Michael Casey, a politician in San Francisco, who has been in office and on the city payroll for many years, was addressing a meeting of his fellow-citizens. It was a labor meeting.



"You men must know," spouted Casey, "that you are the great body politic in this city. You are the roots and trunks of our great municipal tree, while we who represent you in office are merely the branches on that magnificent tree."

"True for you, Mike," piped a man in the back of the hall, "but did ye ever notice all the fruit grows on the branches?"—Saturday Evening Post.

Women's Secrets

There is one man in the United States who has perhaps heard more women's secrets than any other man or woman in the country. These secrets are not secrets of guilt or shame, but the secrets of suffering, and they have been confided to Dr. R. V. Pierce in the hope and expectation of advice and help. That few of these women have been disappointed in their expectations is proved by the fact that ninety-eight per cent. of all women treated by Dr. Pierce have been absolutely and altogether cured. Such a record would be remarkable if the cases treated were numbered by hundreds only. But when that record applies to the treatment of more than half-a-million women, in a practice of over 40 years, it is phenomenal, and entitles Dr. Pierce to the gratitude accorded him by women, as the first of specialists in the treatment of women's diseases.

Every sick woman may consult Dr. Pierce by letter, absolutely without charge. All replies are mailed, sealed in perfectly plain envelopes, without any printing or advertising whatever, upon them. Write without fear as without fee, to World's Dispensary Medical Association, Dr. R. V. Pierce, Prest., Buffalo, N. Y.

KNOW that "impossible" has no place in the brave man's dictionary.

IF you would abolish avarice you must aboilsh the parent of it, luxury.

HIGH cheek bones always indicate great force of character in some direction.

THE great question is not, where will the world put you? but, where will you put the world?

THE majesty of a man stands revealed what he does to those who are wholly at his mercy.

LIFE upon the whole is far more pleasureable than painful; otherwise we would not feel pain so impatiently when it comes.

THERE is a caution which may defeat itself; there are many crises in our ives when safety lies in courage.

NOT A LEG TO STAND ON.

At the hearing before the Committee on Elections Thursday the five Democratic contestants for seats in the House of Delegates presented their case. Not a scintilla of evidence of fraud was presented. They want to open the boxes just to see inside of them.

It cannot be seriously contended that the House would seat the contestants because of what might develop on account of the Brune ballots. That would be too contemptible. The average gambler will stand for an honest throw of the dice, or if he gets caught with his trick will take his medicine.

The law that compelled the throwing out of the Brune ballots was adopted by Democrats for the very purpose of confusing the Republican voters. Caught in their own trap, they should be ashamed to squeal.

MR LAWTON'S SCHOOL BILL

In our Annapolis correspondence this week will be found the text of Mr. Lawton's bill providing for a nine-months' school throughout the county.

The bill expressly provides that in order to maintain the schools for that length of time the average attendance must be kept up in each individual school. Should the attendance fall below the average the school closes and the unexpended money remains in the hands of the School Commissioners to be expended the following year.

With the enactment of this bill into law the county will receive her full apportionment of the state school tax and the odium attached to the county by other sections of the State when our representatives asked for a special appropriation of $4,000 from the State treasury to apply to the school fund will be removed.

LINCOLN, THE LIBERATOR.

With his character wrought out in the workshop of primitive and rigorous conditions of early life, unbeset by the dominating conventions and superficial tributes of highly organized society, with the ambitions in his breast as primal as the instincts of his being, rugged in its mould and sincere in all his attributes, Abraham Lincoln was called by nature to justify her graces of freedom, by society to teach it respect of manhood, irrespective of what might accrue to society from its honoring of a common humanity. The liberation of the serf is always attended by the liberation of the master. The truth that made men free in the dispensation of Lincoln was the truth that makes men free in the ordinations of God. One man may find a nugget of gold or a priceless jewel as well as another, but in any case he must be where these are to be discovered and know them when he sees them. Lincoln had this faculty of seeing the priceless things in human life, because he knew them by primitive contract and valued them by familiar association. The mere lapidary work of burnishing them in constitutions and statutes might fall to others. It was given to him to declare the immutable things of God and man. The prophet need not be a lawmaker, but he must be a law provider.

The emancipation proclaimed by Abraham Lincoln had been worked out in the economy of American society and the latent influences making for freedom were at their flood when he declared that to which all men, when shorn of prejudices and passions, must subscribe, the economical and the moral worth of freedom over slavery. The statement of the fact in effective forms fell to the man whose entire personal history made him adverse to inflicting upon a fellow-man any wrong he would not willingly suffer himself. While others rode the surges of discussion as to the expediency of the liberation of the servile portion of the population, Abraham Lincoln went back to the basic justice of the case and acted accordingly. It matters not in the least if consent to an immutable principle of right shall open the very vials of social destruction and immerse the age in a sea of evils, the immutable right must be declared and justice must be established and manhood must be respected. In the end the things that are convulsed will become orderly, and in the newer relations will be found the forces of the finer equities set to work by the genius and conservation, the wisdom and the work of men who dare to see the truth and to stand for its authority.

All nature was travailing because of the bondage that afflicted the country before Lincoln spoke. The South, with scarcely a thing in the way of manufactures, beyond wheelright shops was out for the liberation of the natural wealth stored in its soil and for the teeming industry of the mill and factory to sing the song of prosperity, such as no amount of plantation labor could confer upon it. The might and strength of federal institutions were invoking Lincoln to declare the truth of their supremacy and he did it. The field of manhood was not up to the average of the social possibilities of the age and Lincoln brooked the issues of fate and set forth the word of emancipation for the times in terms of a race. When all appraisements have been made of the direct benefits conferred by Lincoln upon the section of the population in whose behalf he spoke, the story of the ultimate good will but begin to be told. The waxing of Lincoln must go on from age to age as the lines of influence he set going shall ramify and shall pervade society, and the principles for which he stood shall blossom into the full beauty of human altruism

The spiritual conferment of Lincoln upon the American people is beyond all estimation. The dull and sluggard movements of a shackled period gave place to the stimulated prosperity of an age fraught with the very finest aspirations and effects. It was the truth of God that Lincoln set in the framing of his times, and although God spoke in the thunder and lightning and the tempest of strife, yet it was the still amall voice of the spirit, after all. For the words of Lincoln were as balm of Gilead to a distressed nation, and through those words life and hope and peace came to the hearts of men. Brotherhood took on a fuller content and the divine paternity of God assumed more majestic yet loving proportions. Error hid itself and fear fled before him and the righteous people set up their altars upon the high places of hope and freedom to worship the God of everlasting grace. Simple prophet of the people, rugged apostle of truth, in the noblest line of the saints and martyrs of all ages—Abraham Lincoln has left a name that is above all other names in American history, in that he did the noblest deed for humankind and burnished the stars with the blood of his lowly sacrifice.—Baltimore American.

Married.

LEWIS—BRODERICK.—Mr. S. B. Lewis, special representative of the W. F. Frederick Piano Company, of Cumberland, and Miss Margaret E. Broderick, of Oakland, were married Thursday afternoon at the parochial residence, St. Peter's Catholic church, by Rev. James E. Connell. The bride is a daughter of Mrs. Mary Broderick, of Oakland, and is an accomplished young woman. She has been pianist in the Oakland orchestra and the organist at St. Peter's church. She was also in charge of the millinery department of the Offutt store. Mr. and Mrs. Lewis are occupying one of the Macfarland apartments at Cumberland. Mr. Lewis is an aggressive young man of much worth who has made numerous friends since his residence in Cumberland.

"Protect Game" is Order of Warden.

If you are a true sportsman, the warning sent out by the State Game Warden will in no manner interest you other than that you desire that the laws of the State be observed. It is said that gunners are shooting game while snow is on the ground in plain violation of the law.

The State Game Warden has notified his deputies over the State to be extremely vigilant at this time and cause the arrest of any person or persons found violating the provisions of the law.

The reckless gunner who goes here and there over the hills and shoots everything that comes in sight, is the one whom the law is after. The sportsman and the farmer are the ones who desire that the law shall be obeyed, and it is said that if the practice in this section is not stopped, arrests will follow, as the department of Game and Fish Protection of the State has issued plain instructions to the wardens to enforce the provisions of the law.

DOINGS AT ANNAPOLIS, THE SEAT OF GOVERNMENT

The Jacob Mosser Church Fund Measure Introduced.

STATE HOUSE, ANNAPOLIS, MD., Feb. 14.—Senator Speicher and Delegates Lawton and Long, of Garrett county, spent the Legislative recess at their homes. Delegate Long has been suffering with a severe cold the past two weeks and had not been home for some time. Delegate Weimer spent the time of the "vacation" in Annapolis and Washington.

Senator Zihlman, of Allegany county, on Tuesday afternoon delivered a most eloquent speech during the memorial exercises upon the death of the late Senator Louis McK. Griffith, of Calvert county. A number of other appropriate addresses were delivered on this occasion, but Senator Zihlman paid one of the most eloquent and affecting tributes ever heard in the State House upon the death of a former legislator. The Senate chamber and galleries were crowded, and many congratulations and merited compliments were showered upon him when he took his seat. His address will be spread upon the Senate Journal.

Delegate Charles B. Wagner, of the Washington county delegation, a few days ago distributed a small paste board box to each member and employe of both House and Senate, and also the newspaper men. The boxes contained two large, plump red apples from Mr. Wagner's "Good Luck" orchard near Hagerstown. It was a most pleasant and happy thought, and Delegate Wagner has been receiving the thanks of the recipients ever since.

Senator Speicher has introduced a bill sanctioning the bequest of nearly $7,000 to the "Trustees of the Jacob Mosser Church Fund in Garrett county." The bill in full is as follows:

A Bill, entitled, An Act to sanction the bequest of $6,971.07 to "The Trustees of the Jacob Mosser Church Fund in Garrett County," a corporation organized under the General Corporation Laws of Maryland, in accordance with the directions contained in the Last Will and Testament of Jacob Mosser, late of Garrett county, State of Maryland, said Will and Testament recorded in Liber B, Folio 175, in the office of the Register of Wills of Garrett County.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That the sanction and consent of the General Assembly of Maryland, be, and the same are hereby given and declared to the bequest of Jacob Mosser, deceased, late of Garrett County, of $6,971.07 to the Trustees of the Jacob Mosser Church Fund of Garrett County, a corporation, incorporated under the General Corporation Law of Maryland, and the principal thereof to be held by the said corporation and to be invested and reinvested in interest-bearing bonds or first mortgages on improved real-estate, and the interest therefrom to be used according to said corporation's direction under such rules, regulations and by-laws as it may enact for the purpose of improving and keeping in repair the church edifice, "The Bear Creek Congregation of the German Baptist Brethren Church" near Accident, Garrett County, Maryland, and for the purpose of meeting and providing for other ordinary expenses connected with the management or government of said church.

Section 2. And be it further enacted, That this Act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

Amongst other legislation of interest to the miners of Allegany and Garrett counties will be a bill shortly to be introduced by Delegate Wittig to make the Mine Inspector an elective in instead of an appointixe office. This bill was introduced by Mr. Wittig two years ago, but it was charged that it was an attempt on the part of a Republican to take away an appointive office from the hands of a Democratic Governor. As the Governor is now a Republican this charge cannot be made against Delegate Wittig's motive. The bill will probably be introduced this week.

Delegate Lawton has introduced a bill providing for the levying and collecting of a special school tax to make up the deficiency now found in the State apportionments, to enable the schools of Garrett county to remain open for full nine months. The full text of the bill is as follows:

A Bill, entitled, An Act to authorizing the County Commissioners of Garrett county to levy annually a sum of money for the support of the Public Schools of said county,

Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That the County Commissioners of Garrett county, be, and they are hereby authorized and empowered, directed and required to levy and collect such a tax upon the assessable property of such county as the Board of County School Commissioners shall designate to make good the deficiency of the State School tax and free school book fund as apportioned to said Garrett county; provided, that the said tax shall not exceed thirty cents on the hundred dollars, unless the County Commissioners shall approve and sanction an additional tax. Taxes so levied and collected shall be paid quarterly, on the day fixed for payment of the State school tax to the several counties (but the proceeds from special taxes may be paid oftener upon the order of the Board of County School Commissioners) in order that the schools of said county may be kept open for a term of not less than nine months in any one year, where a sufficient average attendance of pupils can be secured; and said tax shall be levied and collected as other taxes are levied and collected.

Section 2. And be it enacted, That the County Commissioners of Garrett county are hereby authorized, empowered, directed and required to levy and collect upon the assessable property of said county, a sum not less than five cents on the the hundred dollars for the the erection and repairs of school houses, and which said sum so levied and collected shall be paid to the County School Commissioners to be used by them for no other purpose.

Section 3. And be it enacted, That this Act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

The bill was referred to the Garrett county delegation.

Delegate Metzger of Allegany, has introduced a bill amending the anti-spitting law throughout the State. The bill authorizes and empowers any conductor, brakeman or motorman on any passenger car on railroads and electric railways in the State, to immediately arrest anyone who expectorates in a passenger car on the floor, or walls, or in the vestibule of any passenger car, and to take the offender before the nearest Justice of the Peace at the next most convenient stop, and gives the said Justice of the Peace jurisdiction in such cases. A fine, and imprisonment in default, are provided for in the bill. It was referred to the committee on Judiciary.

Delegate Huster, of Allegany county, will introduce this week a bill regulating companies organized to sell stock, etc., providing for State supervision and to protect the public against wildcat and get-rich-quick schemes. All legitimate corporations, banks, investment companies, trust companies, etc., are exempted from the provisions of this new measure.

The fight for and against the State-wide Local Option Bill will begin in earnest this week. The House committee on Temperance has designated Thursday and Friday of this week, February 15th and 16th, at which time the friends and supporters of the bill are asked to come before the committee and be heard on the merits of the bill. Following this, two days, yet to be designated, will also be set aside for the opponents of the Local Option Bill, and they will be invited to appear before the committee. The committee will hold open meetings in the House chamber and the addresses and proceeding will be public.

It is expected that the Allegany county delegation will this week hold another conference upon the Road bill for that county which has been agreed upon and submitted to them for introduction by the County Commissioners and Road Directors. The bill provides for the expenditures of more than $100,000 on the roads of the county within the next five years, and the delegates want to be sure that the taxpayers of Allegany county will acquiesce in this large expenditure before asking the Legislature to pass the bill.

Advocates of Woman's Suffrage held another public mass meeting in the interest of their bill, now pending in the Legislature, on Tuesday afternoon, Feb. 13. A number of noted speakers were in attendance and presented their arguments in an eloquent and forceful manner. Woman's suffrage has many loyal supporters among the members of the Legislature.

Senator Mathias, of Frederick county, has been appointed by Gov. Goldsborough, delegate to represent Maryland, at the "Convention to consider the danger presented by the prevalence and spread of a fungus disease of the wild chestnut tree, known as the 'Chestnut Bark Disease,' and the methods to be pursued in accomplishing its possible control," which will be held in Harrisburg, Pa., on February 20th. Much as Senator Mathias would like to attend, and in full appreciation of the importance of this convention as well as the honor and compliment conferred upon him, that gentleman will not be able to attend, owing to numerous engagements previously made and which will not permit of postponement.

Gov. and Mrs. Goldsborough's reception to the members of the General Assembly Wednesday night was a very pleasant and enjoyable social event. It was largely attended, and being the first of the social functions during the session, it was a very brilliant affair. Mrs. Goldsborough is a very elegant entertainer and her hospitality was most charming on this occasion.

Delegate Greene's bill authorizing the Town Commissioners of Westernport to condemn property for rights-of-way in perfecting their water system, and which was referred to the Allegany Delegation after having been referred to the Ways and Means Committee, was reported favorably by the delegation on Monday night and has been ordered engrossed for the third reading and final passage.

Delegate Wittig, of Allegany, Tuesday introduced a bill impowering the Road Directors of Allegany county to regulate the width of metallic tires and the weight of vehicles to be used on public roads in the county. The Road Directors shall publish their regulations for one month, after which an offender can be fined not more than $50 nor less than $10; and for subsequent offenses the fine shall be not more than $100 nor less than $25. The purpose of the bill is to protect the roads now being constructed at great expense throughout the county.

Senator Zihlman, of Allegany county, will introduce a bill providing for the collection of county taxes about six months earlier than previously, and providing for the change in the tax collecting laws.

Tuesday afternoon was Woman Suffrage Day in the State House. The House of Delegates, galleries and standing room were occupied by interested auditors. A number of ladies prominent in the movement made addresses, as also did Hon. John B. Hanna, Chairman of the Republican State Central Committe, who urged the passage of the bill, and also expressed his opposition to the property qualification to female voters. A telegram from Congressman David J. Lewis, of the Sixth Maryland District, urging the favorable report by the committee and expressing the hope that the General Assembly will pass the bill, was read at the beginning of the meeting.

Senator Speicher and the Garrett county delegation are having several bills engrossed for introduction during this week or early next. J. J. R.

Joseph McNamee, of Martinsburg, Decapitated at that Place Friday Night.

Last Friday night or early Saturday morning, Joseph McNamee, of Martinsburg, West Va., was killed by a freight train at Altamont. The body was discovered by Baltimore and Ohio trainmen shortly after the accident happened and two torches were placed by the side of the body, the railroad officials having notified the employes not to remove the body but to have the county authorities take charge of it and bear the expense of the funeral. The commissioners also refused and not until after the elapse of several hours did the railroad people consent to bury the remains, which was done at the Oakland cemetery.

The deceased was aged fifty-five years and at one time was a brakeman employed by the B. & O. He leaves surviving him five children, all of whom are grown. The funeral was attended by his son who said that the father had been a tramp for upward of fifteen years.

STEAM PIPE BURST

At Crellin Mill and Painfully Scalded Mr. Allen Butler.

Just as the steam was being turned into the massive engine from the battery of boilers at the mill of the Kendal Lumber Company at Crellin Monday morning the pipe burst at a seam and the escaping steam with a pressure of over a hundred pounds and a roar that was heard for miles around, struck Mr. Allen Butler, fireman at the mill, and painfully scalded him, literally cooking portions of his head and face. Dr. Henry McComas was hastily summoned and rendered the proper surgical aid which aleviated the sufferings of the injured man, who is now resting quite comfortably at his home in Crellin.

As a result of the accident to the steam line the mill was put out of commission until noon on Monday, at which time repairs were completed and work was resumed.

Messrs. James Frazee and Playford Friend, both of near Friendsville, were two of our early Monday morning callers. Both gentlemen ordered The Republican sent to their respective addresses for the ensuing year. They are much interested in Garrett county events and to keep in touch they have selected the best medium. And now is the best time to subscribe.

On Friday night, February 16th, the attraction at the Maryland Theatre will be the Harold McGrath comedy, "The Man on the Box." Ever since it's first production with Henry E Dixey in the leading role, this play has been a strong favorite with the theatre goers. It combines crisp, clean comedy with good drama, is a consistent, well written play, and can be seen again and again, each time with keen enjoyment.

Mrs. John Helbig, one of the best known and most highly esteemed ladies of Oakland, suffered a stroke of paralysis last Friday morning and has been in quite a serious condition ever since. The lady was in the yard surrounding her home when she was stricken and was carried into the house by neighbors and friends who summoned a physician. An examination revealed the fact that Mrs. Helbig's left side was affected. Mrs. Helbig is quite aged.

DECISION FOR DEFENDANT

Roofing Company Loses Suit Against Mr. Fred. G. Fox, of Friendsville.

In Justice West's court Monday, a law case was tried and the verdict of the Court rendered favorable to the defendant, Mr. Fred G. Fox, of Friendsville, against whom an action to recover $76.36 was brought by the Dickleman Manufacturing Company, of Forest, Ohio, manufacturers of pressed steel roofing.

The roofing was purchased by Mr. Fox and used to cover the Blooming Rose church. About the time the work was completed one of the men engaged in putting it on discovered that in pressing the steel the dies had perforated nearly every sheet, making it unfit for use. A demand for payment was made upon Mr. Fox and he refused, hence the suit. A large number of witnesses, among them being Messrs. Newton Savage, James Frazee, Jefferson Burch, Melvin G. Friend, Sherman Friend, C. W. Friend, Playford Friend and Mr. Fox, were here and gave their testimony which proved conclusively that the material was inferior.

THE PEOPLE'S FORUM.

Why Not Allow Farmers, Upon Whose Lands the Birds Are Grown, Have a Say?

To the Editor of The Republican:

I am in favor of Senator Speicher's law whereby it will be lawful to ship pheasants and other game out of the county, but I also am favorable to a provision in the law making the hunting season shorter than it now is—say for two weeks during the month of November.

The farmers, upon whose lands the birds are grown, I am sure are with me in asking for a repeal of the present law.

I am also an advocate of a law making it a heavy penalty for the killing of birds out of season.

Sunday School Classes on Sleighride.

As a reward for the best average class attendance at the sessions of St. Paul's M. E. church during the past year Mr. and Mrs. Fred. A. Thayer gave the scholars of Mrs. Thayer's class and Prof. C. E. Bender's class a sleighride Tuesday evening. About twenty young boys and girls were guests of Mr. and Mrs. Thayer and they enjoyed every moment of the outing.

O. H. S. Notes.

"The Daughter of the Desert" was presented to an appreciative audience in the Maryland Theatre, Saturday evening. The members of the caste took the parts assigned them so well that nothing but praise can be accorded any of them. They had worked faithfully and success crowned their efforts.

It would be impossible to say who did the best for all well.

The audience fell in love with Ruth, Lucy, Mrs. Ogden, White Bird, Morton, Clarence and Mr. Hopkins as they portrayed life on an Arizona ranch, during an Indian outbreak, with their little love scenes intermingled. A spirit of hatred was felt toward Silvera, showing that he took to perfection the part of the villian. Jim Parker, while a professional gambler, was at heart a genuinely honest man, trying to do justice to each one. Bill Jones was a most imposing looking sheriff, and his droll speeches caused many hearty laughs. And the cowboys—well, a more jolly, wholesouled lot of fellows would be hard to find.

The teachers and pupils of the high school thank the people of Oakland for the encouragement and help they have given, both by their presence and by the many words of praise that have since been heard.

Gross receipts of the play, $78.80; theatre and lights, $15.80; printing, $4.50; incidentals, $ .40; net proceeds, $58.35.

Prof. Bender devoted much time and thought to the training of the boys and girls, but feels repaid for all he did.

Some pictures have been purchased and placed in the school rooms. All are interested in making the rooms as attractive as possible.

New window shades have been placed in the Freshman room.

Dustless crayon has been purchased by the school for use in the rooms.

Miss Doris Paris, of Keyser, visited the school Tuesday.

Mr. J. J. Bender, of Grantsville, made a short call Tuesday and noted the improvements made in the building.

The next meeting of the O. H. S. Literary Society will be Friday, Feb. 16th, at 1.45 p. m. We should be very glad to welcome any patrons or friends of the school. The program is as follows:

Some members of the school are showing decided poetical ability, as the following attests:

'm thinking tonight of my old Irish home,
So far away over the sea;
I'm thinking of one who has bright red hair,
And her name is Katie McGee

Her eyes are like stars in a bright cloudless sky,
Her voice is as sweet as sweet potatoes;
She lives in a little log house by the sea,
And her Pa raises corn and tomatoes.

Her teeth are like pearls, and her lips like a red rose,
Her feet are little and white;
There's no use talking about my sweet maid,
She is my heart's delight.

Reconciliation to God

By Rev. James M. Gray, D. D., Dean of Moody Bible Institute, Chicago

TEXT.—And you, that were sometime alienated and enemies in your mind by wicked works, yet now hath he reconciled. In the body of His flesh through death, to present you holy and unblameable and unproveable in His sight: If ye continue in the faith grounded and settled, and be not moved away from the hope of the gospel, which ye have heard. —Colossians 1: 21-23.

The apostle Paul is here speaking of Jesus Christ as the one in whom all the fullness of the Godhead dwells and by whom it pleased the father to reconcile all things unto himself. By "all things," however, he does not mean all things universally or absolutely, for that would include not only the souls of the condemned, but the demons in hell and even satan himself. But he means all the things which it has pleased the father from the beginning thus to reconcile. The definite article in the Greek suggests this as the thought, which is made clear by the other teachings of the Bible on the same subject. Among those things which it pleased the father to reconcile to himself are the believers on Jesus Christ, and it is of their reconciliation especially that Paul here speaks.

1. First he shows our need of reconciliation, by telling us that we were "sometime alienated and enemies in our mind by wicked works." "Sometime" covers the whole period of our lives from physical birth to our new birth by the holy spirit. All that time the natural man is alienated from God. And not only alienated, but hostile to God, an enemy, as the text says.

What Are Wicked Works?

This enmity need not show itself necessarily in giving way to the lower and baser appetites of the body. There are cultivated men and women who are able to control these appetites, but who are at the same time enemies to God in their mind—i. e., in their modes of thought and feeling, which are contrary to his revealed will. And this enmity must in the very nature of the case, show itself in "wicked works."

II. Second, he shows the source of our reconciliation, which is God himself. "Yet now hath he reconciled us." The very one from whom we were alienated and against whom we were enemies is the one who reconciles us.

"He who might the vantage best have took Found out the remedy."

This is grace, especially when we understand that it does not mean primarily that we became reconciled to God, but that God became reconciled to us. This he did by taking that sin out of the way which was the barrier to his reconciliation.

III. This leads Paul to speak in the third place of the means of our reconciliation which was the work of Christ for us on the cross as our substitute Saviour. "In the body of his flesh through death." Why say "the body of his flesh?" Why not say "his body" without adding "flesh?" Because there was a heretical sect in that day which denied the materiality of Christ's body. They believed in a spiritual, but not a material, mediatorship.

But Christ had a real body and real flesh and real blood which he offered in propitiation for our sin, he passed through real suffering and died a real death. Such is the teaching of this verse.

IV. And this brings us to the fourth point, which is the result of our reconciliation, presented "holy and without blemish and uncharged in God's sight." This is true immediately of every believer the moment he accepts Christ by faith as his Saviour. Oh, if everybody in this sin-cursed and sin-wearied world only knew and believed that! If they would only pause in the rush of things and listen to it for a single moment!

The Battle of Concord Bridge.

At the battle of Concord bridge, at the beginning of the revolution, when John Buttrick gave the command to fire it was to British subjects he gave it, but it was obeyed by American citizens. In other words, in that instant their condition became changed, though the experience of that change was a thing of growth. So the instant a man takes Christ as his Saviour, he stands before God free from the guilt of sin, without blemish and without charge. And this is grace!

The final point in the lesson is the proof of our reconciliation, which is that we "continue in the faith, rooted and grounded and not moved away from the hope of the gospel." Paul is speaking not to the false teacher who went out of the church, but to the true believer who stayed in. Those who are true to the "faith delivered once for all to the saints" have the witness in themselves that they are reconciled to God

ALCOHOL USE IS CONDEMNED

Placed in Category With Smallpox Virus and Tuberculosis Bacilli by Most Medical Experts.

Alcohol was placed in a category with smallpox virus and tuberculosis bacilli by most of the medical experts who addressed the meeting of the American Association for the Study and Cure of Inebriety and Alcoholism, held at Washington, D. C. It was denied a place in therapeutics, except side by side with poisons. Alcohol as a base for popular beverages of the future is doomed, according to many of the speakers, and has a use only as a fuel for power producing. All the breweries and distilleries now in the country will not be adequate for the production of the alcohol needed when engines for its economical and effective use are perfected said one speaker.

In regard to alcoholism, the physicians were united in declaring it a disease, though they differed widely in prescribing a remedy, the cures indorsed ranging from the workhouse to the present hospital treatment. Dr. Henry O. Marcy, former president of the American Medical association, declared that the anti-alcohol movement in the south was due to a realization of the social and economic perils of liquor drinking by the laboring classes, especially the negroes.

The American Society for the Study of Alcohol and Other Narcotics was organized in 1870, and was the first medical association in the world to take up the study of alcohol and the diseases following its use, from a scientific point of view.

The recent session was held in response to an invitation from leading men at the Capital city, to present to the profession and public some scientific and authoritative conclusions concerning the alcohol problem, based on laboratory and clinical research, irrespective of all present theories and measures for its control.

Over thirty papers on different phases of the subject were read by some of the most eminent men in the profession, showing that the alcoholic problem has a medical and scientific importance of equal magnitude to any other health and hygienic topic.

LIQUOR EVIL IN LIVERPOOL

Efforts Being Made for Suppression of Drunkenness in English City—Women Are Affected.

The Liverpool justices have been criticised since they began, a few years ago, to make efforts toward the reduction of drunkenness in the city. A correspondent of the New York Sun writes: Their latest condition, laid down before granting the annual licenses, will cause another storm. The conditions mainly apply to the serving of women. They are as follows:

1. It is necessary that the strictest vigilance should be exercised in serving women at all.
2. That any woman of known bad character or of drunken habits or whose appearance is not respectable should be refused altogether.
3. That when women are served they shall only be served once and shall not be allowed to treat each other to drinks.
4. That women shall not be allowed to remain an undue length of time upon premises.
5. Licensees shall refuse to supply a messenger known to be sent by any person who has been refused drink on the premises.

In all new transfer agreements a clause is to be inserted the effect of which will be to secure a uniform minimum charge of 5 cents a pint for ale, beer and stout consumed on the premises. Four cents is to be the price for outdoor trade. Before the campaign against drunkenness was started the competition between the different public house keepers was very keen. Mild ale was sold at many bars at 2 cents a pint. For several years the institution known as the "long pull" was in vogue. This "long pull" meant a drop over, and before it was put down by the justices meant an average pint and half for the price of a pint.

Along Practical Lines.

The place for reform is the drinking place, make it better. Make it respectable, as it is in Sweden. In many of the cities there the objections to the saloon have disappeared because the drinking places have been regulated. There are no screens. Drunken men are not permitted to buy liquor. Children, of course, are not permitted to buy. Soft drinks and food are sold in connection with the place and they are pushed to the front. But most of all, the company in charge of the business is only permitted to make a certain percentage of profit. All over that goes to the city. If our American reformers would work along practical lines of progress such as these, they would accomplish something that would live.

Drink Is Pressing Enemy.

"The most pressing enemy is drink. It kills more than all our newest weapons of warfare, and not only destroys the body but the mind and soul as well."—Lord Wolseley.

LAW'S INJUSTICE MADE PLAIN

Farmer's Grievance Was That Story Once Accepted Should Not Remain Good.

A story is being told at the expense of an old English farmer who was recently called upon to explain why he had failed to take out a license for a favorite fox terrier dog. "'E's nobbut a puppy," the defendant remarked, in response to a question as to the animal's age. "Yes, yes! So you say. But how old is he?" "Oh, weel, I couldn' tell to a bit," was the reply. "I never was much good at remembering dates, but 'e's nobbut a puppy." On the other hand, it was maintained that the animal in question was a very, very old-fashioned puppy, and the magistrate inflicted the usual fine. Shortly afterward the farmer was met by a friend who wanted to know how he had fared at the police court. "Nobbut middlin'," was the reply. "Did they fine you?" "Yes," responded the victim; "an' 'ang me if I can understand it! Last year an' the year afore that I told the same tale about the same dog, an' it wor allus good enough afore! Who's been tamperin' wi' the law sin' last year?"

Why He Couldn't Sit Down.

Harry, aged six, is an orphan; but an indulgent grandmother and kind maiden aunt have taken care of him. The first pair of knickerbockers were secured recently, and it was a proud moment for the boy when his aunt put them on him on Sunday morning and he was permitted to go to church with his grandmother. Naturally maiden aunts know very little about the arrangement of knickerbockers, and there was a suspicious fullness in front and an equally mystifying tightness in the back to be observed, as the little chap trudged happily along. In church Harry sat down, but did not appear comfortable and stood up. "Harry, sit down," whispered his grandmother. He obediently climbed back on the seat, but soon slipped off again. "Harry, you must sit down." "Grandma, I can't. My pants is choking me." She looked more closely than her dim sight had before permitted, and discovered the new little knickerbockers were on hind side before. Harry stood up during the remainder of the service.

A Hold-Up

An Oppressive Trust.

Before the Coffee Roasters' Association, in session at Chicago on Thursday, Thomas J. Webb, of Chicago, charged that there is in existence a coffee combine which is "the most monstrous imposition in the history of human commerce."

There is very slight exaggeration about this statement. It comes very close to being literally true. There is a coffee combine in Brazil, from which country comes the bulk of the coffee used in the United States, which is backed by the government of Brazil and financed by it, which compels American consumers, as Mr. Webb said, "to pay famine prices for coffee when no famine exists."

The worst thing about this is that the consumers of the United States have been compelled to put up the money through which this combine, to further cinch them, has been made effective. There were formerly revenue duties imposed upon all coffee entering the United States. Those taxes were denounced as an imposition upon the people; as taxing the poor man's breakfast table, and the like. The taxes were removed. Immediately thereafter Brazil imposed an export duty upon coffee up to the full amount of the former customs taxes in this country. The revenue which formerly went into the treasury of the United States was diverted to the treasury of Brazil. The poor man's breakfast coffee continued to cost him the same old price.

But this was only the commencement. The "valorization" plan was evolved in Brazil. Through this plan the government, using the revenues derived from the export duties for the purposes, takes all of the surplus crop in a season of large yields and holds it off the market, thus keeping the supply down to the demands of the market and permitting the planters to receive a much higher price than they would otherwise have done.

The United States consumes more Brazilian coffee than does the rest of the world. We are the best customers of Brazil, and Brazil buys little from us. Now Brazil is promoting, financing and maintaining a trust designed, and working effectively for the purpose, to compel American consumers to pay an exorbitant price for the coffee they use. What is the remedy?—Seattle Post-Intelligencer—Nov. 19, 1911.

Standard statistics of the coffee trade show a falling off in sales during the last two years of over two hundred million pounds. Authenticated reports from the Postum factories in this city show a tremendous increase in the sale of Postum in a like period of time.

While the sales of Postum invariably show marked increase year over year, the extraordinary demand for that well-known breakfast beverage during 1911 is very likely due to a public awakening to the oppression of the coffee trust.

Such an awakening naturally disposes the multitude who suffer from the ill effects of coffee drinking to be more receptive to knowledge of harm which so often comes as a result of the use of the drug-beverage, coffee.—Battle Creek Evening News—Dec. 19, 1911.

Economy to one's purse is not the main reason for using Postum.

It is absolutely free from any harmful substance, such as "caffeine" (the drug in coffee), to which so much of the nervousness, biliousness and indigestion of today are due. Thousands of former coffee drinkers now use Postum because they know from experience the harm that coffee drinking causes.

When Cupid Meets Mars

By Edward B. Clark

COPYRIGHT BY W. A. PATTERSON

T army headquarters in the capital it is always possible to pick up stories of the service, and let it be said that they are not always stories of war. Cupid was armed, even though his weapon was only a bow, and Mars takes kindly to Cupid.

Two of these army tales made a listener take the liberty of asking the right to reproduce, and so here they are given with some slight change of name, but with no change of circumstances.

First Lieutenant Robert Emmett Kavanaugh was pacing up and down his narrow quarters in Fort Grady, Michigan, holding a telegram in his hand. He had read it twenty times, but at every second turn in his nervous walk he read it again. The telegram was dated Chicago, and this is what it said: "Leave Thursday for Florida. Uncle Frank ill. Stay indefinite. Norah Desmond."

Lieutenant Bob Kavanaugh and Norah Desmond were engaged. They were to be married as soon as a few accommodating superior officers would consent to be killed off or die in their beds and thereby give Bob a chance to write captain instead of lieutenant before his name on official papers. The young officer had fixed the limit of his waiting at about a year.

"Norah's going to Florida," he muttered to himself. "I haven't seen her for three weeks and won't see her for six months to come. Uncle Frank is one of the kind who never dies and never gets well, and Norah'll stay down there until the old man is willing to let her go. She's more of a stickler for duty than Old Muggs, the commanding officer, and that's saying a lot. He won't give me a leave. I've had too many. Great Winfield Scott, but I would like to see Norah before she goes." And Lieutenant Robert Emmett Kavanaugh sighed.

Kavanaugh couldn't keep anything to himself, and in five minutes he was telling his woes to Captain Percy Lanyard of the artillery corps. "Brace up, Kavanaugh," said Lanyard; "Muggs is going to send a general prisoner through Chicago to Fort Sherman to stand trial. He was going to send a sergeant in charge. It isn't a very pleasant duty, but if you'll volunteer, I think Muggs will send you, and you can stop off on your way back from Sherman—it is only a few miles from Chicago—and see your blue-eyed Norah before she gets on the Florida 'limited.'"

Twelve hours from that time Bob Kavanaugh was sitting in the smoking car of a Chicago bound train, with a big Colt revolver strapped around him and an enlisted man, with a downcast look, sitting alongside of him. Bob Kavanaugh had a soft heart. The soldier at his side had seen eight years of service and had never been in trouble before. He had assaulted the "top" sergeant, a serious offense in the army, as may go without saying.

"Cheer up, Spencer," said the lieutenant; "you've been a good soldier, as I know, and I don't think it will go very hard with you—six months at the most—and then you'll be restored to duty."

"I hit him, all right, lieutenant," answered Private James Spencer, "and he deserved it if ever a man did, but you can't do such things in the army, no matter what the 'top' says to you, and so I am good for two years and a 'bobtail' discharge. It's tough. I never saw the inside of the 'mill' before in my eight years' service, except when I was on guard."

Part of a freight train went into a ditch ahead of the Fort Grady passenger train. Kavanaugh and his prisoner were delayed five hours. The lieutenant fumed and said things under his breath. Finally the way was cleared and the train ran on to Chicago. It was Thursday and in four hours Norah's train would leave for Florida. It was utterly impossible for the officer to get his prisoner to Fort Sherman and to return in time to say good-by to his fiancee.

Kavanaugh and his charged stepped from the train into the Chicago depot. Bob's heart was sore. "I must see her," he said to himself. "I can't stand it for six months." At that instant he saw at the depot cigar stand, making a purchase, Jack Bacon, a Chicago club man and an intimate friend. Kavanaugh hurried his charge over toward the young fellow. "Jack, old man, glad to see you. You have an hour or two to spare, I know you have. Don't say no," and with that the lieutenant grabbed his friend by the arm, motioned his prisoner to walk ahead, and the three went on a half trot into the office of a hotel across the street. Kavanaugh threw a $2 bill before the clerk and ordered a room. He hurried the astounded Bacon and the prisoner into the apartment on the second floor.

"Jack," said Kavanaugh, in a low tone, as you love me, watch this man. I must see Norah Desmond. She's off to Florida. Take this gun and don't fail me," and with that First Lieutenant Robert Emmett Kavanaugh shoved a revolver into Jack Bacon's hand, bolted through the door, out of the hotel and on to a trolley car. In twenty minutes he was with Norah Desmond, who was in the midst of the last hours of preparation for her Florida trip.

In twenty minutes more the doorbell of the flat rang violently. The maid opened it and in rushed Jack Bacon, flushed and fairly beside himself. "Bob," he yelled, "your prisoner skipped. He kicked open a door into the next room and jumped onto a low roof and then into the alley. I took a shot at him, but missed, and when I got down he was clean gone."

Bob Kavanaugh sank into a chair, his face pale. "Norah," he said, "this means court-martial and dismissal for me unless I can catch the fellow. It's a clean case of neglect of duty, awful neglect of duty, and old Muggs doesn't love me any too well, anyway. It's all up, dear, if I don't get him, and if I am kicked out of the army I don't know what I'll do. I can't even dig a ditch, though I'd try willingly enough for you. But this won't catch him. I'm off, but I'll be at the train to say good-by," and Kavanaugh was out of the door and down the stairs four steps at a time.

Over on Halsted street in a room above a store a pretty, pale girl sat talking to a soldier in uniform. "It's all up, Polly," he was saying, "I hit the 'top' sergeant. He deserved it, but I was put in arrest and was to be tried, and it meant two years. I just cut away from a 'cit' whom the officer who had me in tow left me in care of. The officer went to see his girl. I guess he's in love or he wouldn't have done such a fool trick. Well, I'm in love, too, Polly dear, but I've got to get out of this as soon as I can get other togs on."

"Oh, this is awful, Jim," said the girl, "and you'll be a deserter, too."

"I won't get any more for that than I'd get for the other. I don't like the idea any better than you do. I guess the officer will get it harder than I will. It's neglect of duty with him and that'll kick him out of the service. I'm sorry for him, for he isn't half a bad sort." Then suddenly changing the subject the soldier said, "How's your mother?"

"Better, Jim, but she'd have died if it hadn't been for Miss Norah Desmond. She's an angel. I had to stop work to nurse mother, and the money gave out and I got sick, and Miss Norah gave us a nurse and a doctor and did lots else. I think she saved my life, too."

"Norah Desmond, Polly? That's the name of the girl the lieutenant I cut from is to marry. He'll be disgraced and the girl will suffer. She saved you and your mother, did she, Polly? Get on your things, quick. She leaves for Florida. I know the train. The lieutenant 'll be there, I know that. Hurry, girl."

Lieutenant Robert Emmett Kavanaugh was kissing Norah Desmond good-by. His face was pale and anxious. "I'm afraid it's all up with me, Norah," he was saying, "but keep up a good heart."

Just then from behind him came a voice loud and with something of a ring of humor in it. "Sir, all are present and accounted for." Kavanaugh turned like a flash. There stood Private Spencer saluting with his right hand, while his left was holding that of a very pretty girl.

"Spencer, you're a brick," said Kavanaugh, and nothing but army training kept him from slapping his inferior on the back. "I'll use every official friend I have to get you out of your scrape."

A year later in pleasant quarters at Fort Grady sat Captain Kavanaugh and his wife. "Norah," he said, "First Sergeant James Spencer has applied for a furlough to go to Chicago to get married. Shall I approve the application?"

"Bob, if you don't," said Norah, with her eyes dancing, "I'll get a divorce."

The story of Robert Emmett Kavanaugh and Norah Desmond was told by an "ancient" just about ready to take his place on the retired list. The second story of West Point life came from the lips of a stripling soldier who perhaps had recent and keen memories of the matter in hand.

"Do your duty though the heavens fall," said the commandant of cadets to the battalion of stripling soldiers. The commandant had a curious way of mixing his aphorisms, but he meant well.

Obedience and devotion to duty are the keynotes of the scale of life's harmony at West Point.

Billy Lang was a first classman. Billy was a private. He probably would have been a cadet officer if he hadn't been caught the previous winter taking a trip to Cold Spring over the frozen surface of the Hudson.

It was in Billy's "yearling camp" that he met Frances Curtis.

Billy Lang was the oldest man in his class and consequently was called "dad." He was just under the age limit when he entered and would be within a month of 26 when he graduated. Now Billy was in love with Frances Curtis.

He was sitting with her now under the trees near the camp guard tents. Billy was on guard, though off post for the time being.

"You see, Miss Curtis," he said, "the second class being on furlough and the 'plebes' not being military enough yet to do duty, we first classmen have to walk post to help the 'yearlings' out. When the plebes are turned in to the battalion we will do guard duty only as officers."

"It must be hard work, this walking up and down all night long, Mr. Lang," said Frances, "but then it's duty and I always did admire a soldier's devotion to his duty."

"Yes, duty is everything. I was always a great stickler for it," answered Billy. "One should always do his duty up to the handle, no matter what direction it takes nor whom the doing of it hits."

"I think you are right, Mr. Lang. There's a certain nobility about it that appeals to one."

Billy Lang was hugely pleased to find that on the subject of duty Frances Curtis' ideas coincided with his own. He changed the subject, however, abruptly. "I see that Mr. Jackson is here," he said, looking at Frances in a half-curious way.

"Yes," answered the girl, a touch of color coming into her cheeks, "he came up on the Powell yesterday and is to stay here until tomorrow."

Frederick Jackson was a civilian admirer of Miss Curtis.

"I'm sorry I'm on guard today, Miss Curtis," said Billy, "for there is a hop tonight in the mess hall, and I can't be there. I shall think of you waltzing while I am walking my dreary post."

"What number are you, Mr. Lang?"

"Number four," answered Billy. "It's just back of the commandant's tent and runs parallel to the road leading along the bluff to the hotel. I go on post at taps and walk until midnight. I'll be there just at the time the hop is over."

"Hurry up and turn out, first relief," yelled the corporal of the guard, and Billy Lang said a hasty good-by and dug out at double time for the gun rack outside the first guard tent.

"It's duty," he sighed to himself, "a hard duty, but still duty even if it does take you away from the girl you love."

It was eleven o'clock at night. Taps had sounded an hour earlier. Billy Lang was pacing up and down number four between the trunks of the great elms, which, with the sentinels, guarded the camp. It was the blackest kind of a night. Up on Crow's Nest mountain and to the northward toward the Catskills Hudson's crew was playing tenpins. It is a long bowling alley which Old Rip's friends use when they begin their favorite game. The thunder came nearer and the lightning played overhead. This is a time when the sentinel, with his steel bayonet pointing skyward, feels more nervously apprehensive than when in the face of a human enemy. Patter, patter, patter, the rain began to fall on the leaves of the elms. The sentinels on number four knew that in a minute the gates would be open and then deluge.

The flickering oil lamp at the south end of the post sent a feeble gleam out into the darkness. Forty yards down the roadway Billy Lang saw someone approaching. "Who comes there?" rang out the challenge.

"Friends," came the answer in a man's voice.

A flash of lightning lit up the roadway and Billy Lang saw Frederick Jackson and Frances Curtis held motionless by his challenge. At that instant came the deluge. Umbrellaless and unprotected in any way stood the young couple, straining their eyes toward a place where they knew was a young fellow with a bayonet-tipped rifle.

Billy Lang knew that he could strain a point and let the two pass. Any cadet in the corps would have done it on recognition as certain as his. But Billy was a stickler for duty. He knew his orders. "Halt, friends," he said, and then raising his voice, he yelled, "Corporal of the guard No. 4."

How the rain did come down. Frances Curtis' light ball dress was a rag. She was chilled through and she stood holding the arm of her escort and shivering from her light slippers to the bedraggled rose that crowned her hair. Frederick Jackson was in as bad a plight, though he didn't allow himself to shiver.

"It's my duty," said Billy Lang to himself, "and Frances is a stickler for duty; she'll like me all the better for it."

The corporal came at last. He allowed the shivering couple to pass on to the hotel. He saw the plight they were in, and if he hadn't been a 'yearling' corporal and Billy Lang a first classman he would have told No. 4 that he was an ass for not using a little common sense and allowing the storm-stricken pair to pass.

Frederick Jackson left for New York the next morning. When he was relieved from guard Billy Lang called at the hotel. Miss Curtis could not be seen that day. She was slightly indisposed. The next afternoon Billy Lang received a note. It was in Frances Curtis' handwriting. It read like this: "A telegram from New York tells mother that Mr. Jackson is dangerously ill with pneumonia as a result of exposure in the storm. He has no relatives nearer than England. I am a great stickler for duty and so mother and I are just leaving for New York to nurse Mr. Jackson. You will doubtless applaud my course, for you are one of duty's own disciples."

Frances Curtis did not return to West Point that summer. It was late in the fall when the postman one day handed Billy Lang an envelope postmarked New York. It contained wedding cards in which the names of Curtis and Jackson were prominent.

A yearling corporal stuck his head in the door. "Tomorrow, Lang," he said, "you are on special duty."

"D—n duty," said Billy.

And the officer of the day who was passing "skinned" him for profanity.

One more case of typhoid fever has developed, little Miss Edith Miller having been taken ill with it, and judging from the temperature which is 104, the case is a serious one. Opal and Clifton Clark seem to be on the mend.

The festival held for the Methedist church was quite a success, which was largely due to the energy of Mrs. Wm. Tibbetts, Mrs. John Wolfe, Mrs. Blanch Warnick and last, but not least, Misses Eva Warnick and Laura Tibbetts, who went from house to house and solicited the good things.

The funeral of Mr. Hanson Buckhannon was preached Sunday afternoon, Feb. 4th, in the M. E. church by the pastor. A large crowd attended, showing the high esteem the community had for him and at the same time deep sympathy for the family. The deceased leaves a widow and six children, Renick, the eldest son, who is in the army and is stationed at Fort Slocum, N. Y.; Mrs. Mary Watkins, of Wheeling; Miss June, of Piedmont, and Daisy, Lola and Dayton at home. One sister is living near Buckhannon, this state.

A few complimentary words to the church at Kitzmiller—The writer on last Sunday night made his first visit to the new M. E. church there. The temperature was zero and the streets were icy, but on entering the church the writer was met by the pastor, Rev. Weidler, and escorted to the platform to face an audience of not less than two hundred and fifty people. In a few minutes the choir, led by Prof. Groves, began to sing and at once I saw a reason for the presence of the splendid audience and was told the second reason was that the pastor was the ablest preacher the town has ever had. The music is a surprise to all visitors and is not excelled except in our best city churches. Yet this only shows what a good leader with energy could accomplish for many of our churches if all worked in harmony. The average church over the country is deficient in music and this greatly hinders the success of the church. May this splendid choir long continue its good work.

TWO SLIGHT FIRES WAS OAKLAND'S PORTION THIS WEEK

A Hoodoo Must be at Work and Making Extra Time.

Oakland's proportion of fires during the past three or four weeks has been largely in excess of the number due her which leads one to think a hoodoo must be diligently at work and making extra time.

With the two fires of February 22nd still fresh in the minds of the people an alarm early Monday morning brought out the reels and ladders in record time but the blaze which had started on the third floor of the Lauer building, from a cause unexplained and mysterious, was quenched by the application of a bucket of water.

Last night about ten o'clock the Whetsell bake shop, located on First street, and occupied by Holmes Browning as sleeping quarters, was set on fire when a gas stove became disconnected, followed by an explosition of gas and in a very few moments the building was a mass of fire. The department, however, was soon on hand and had two lines of hose playing on the blaze, which was quickly subdued. The loss is about $100.

MARYLAND'S NEW FISH COMMISSIONER.

MR. W. A. SMITH.

The above is a pretty good representation of Maryland's Fish Commissioner for the Western Shore, it being an engraving made from a photograph of Mr. W. A. Smith, of Hoyes, who was very recently appointed by Governor Goldsborough..

Mr. Smith was born in Hardy county, W. Va., but came to Garrett county with his parents when he was an infant of a few months. Since 1865 he has resided in Hoyes where he has been engaged since young manhood in the mercantile business. He is also postmaster at Hoyes, having held the position for many years. He is a thoroughgoing, enterprising business man and the administration of the office to which he has been appointed by Governor Goldsborough will not suffer as a consequence.

The Cow and the Moon.

Musical extravaganzas, kladiescopic pictures, rapid change of scenery, gorgeous costumes and plenty of them, riotous fun and color, music and mirth seems to be what the theatre goers want. Chas. A. Sellon who has launched several musical extravaganzas, seems to have guaged the public fancy, and this season is presenting a brand new entertainment of this sort and will be seen at the Maryland Theatre on Wednesday night, March 13th. It has the title of "The Cow and the Moon," most peculiar but at once interesting. It deals with earth being and immortals from the Moon, and Molly, the vaulting cow who nimbly leaps over the Moon is sure to be great fun for the kiddies as well as the older folk. Ed. Gilmore will be seen and as Happy will be surrounded by a cast of forty or more, together with a large and capable chorus.

Seats will be placed on sale at Gonders Pharmacy on March 6th, 1912.

For Sale at a Bargain—A square Steiff piano; in good condition; will be sold at a bargain. Apply to Mrs. D. H. Loar, Oakland, Md.

SALE OF MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK TENTATIVELY MADE

In the meantime, at the request of Mr. S. A. Moore, representing the buying interests, no statement will be published at this time concerning the terms of sale or the plans of the buyers.

Going to Consult Lancaster Doctors.

U. D. Yoder, the "Apple King" of near Grantsville, Md., and wife passed through Meyersdale Tuesday enroute to Lancaster, Pa., to consult medical specialist. Mr. Yoder has been ailing for some time from some intestinal trouble in the nature of a tumorous growth. Mrs. Yoder is also not well, and the present journey was undertaken in hope that both might be restored to health, which their many friends earnestly hope may be the case.—Meyersdale Republican.

Man's Appeal to Himself

By Rev. J. H. Ralston, Secretary Correspondence Department, Moody Bible Institute, Chicago

TEXT.—My soul, wait thou only upon God: for my expectation is from Him.—Ps. 62: 5.

These were the words of a man of affairs, one who had attained the highest position within reach, and that not by heredity or chance, but by the force of his qualities; yet withal a man very human, a man who knew the depths of sin as well as the heights of intimate communion with God — and this man called on his soul to wait upon God.

The psalmist recognized within himself something to which many are very indifferent—a soul that related him to God, and differentiated him from the brute creation. Whether that which he recognized was in itself immortal or only contained the possibility of immortality need not interest us now, but it was another self, an alter ego, what some might call the subliminal self, and which has in those who have lived a life of purposeful sin, been stifled, and yet cries out constantly for recognition, and nourishment, and ultimate perfection.

It is not the imbecile who thinks of his soul, but it is the man who recognizes his true humanity, if you please; as in this case, oftentimes the man of affairs, of parts, of high ambitions. And this man is frequently quite out of patience with those who profess to be physicians of the soul and yet prescribe little or nothing that benefits the soul.

Great statesmen, financiers, railroad magnates, inventors, artists, manufacturers, etc., when they go to church, want soul food, something to which the soul responds. A leading lawyer recently said with reference to the message that should be given from the pulpit: "It should come from God, and should relate to the inner life, it should be food for the soul."

The call was not to something indefinite: "Wait thou only upon God." Here is the recognition of the correlative to the soul, the spiritual God. This recognition was not of an abstract idea, but of a personality—it gave no opportunity for quibbling and doubting. There was no suggestion in any little "if." This man of affairs and great parts was not the only historical character who has thus thought and acted. Some men may be like Job and ask where they may find God, but many others have had direct and constant intercourse with the spiritual God, they have seen him who is invisible.

Can this not be said of our three martyr presidents? Of Gladstone, of Bismarck, of William of Germany, of Justice Harlan? And as we glance back over the past do we not have Chinese Gordon, Stonewall Jackson, Oliver Cromwell, Gustavus Adolphus, Savonarola, Paul, David, Moses, Abraham and a host of others? Granting that these men waited on God, for so they all professed, their achievements are not an enigma.

What is it to wait on God? Is it not keeping silence before him? "Let all the earth keep silence before him." And such silence before God is an essential element of prayer. One has recently said that prayer is not the claiming a hearing, it is giving a hearing; it is not speaking to God, it is listening to God. It is true that

"Whatever is best for me, my God will bring to me,
If I do only wait, and trust, and pray,
Whate'er seems dark to me, shall end in light for me;
'Tis but the gloaming, which fore-runs the day."

This waiting before God, too, suggests a readiness to respond to the call of God as the old retainers would respond to the call of their liege lords. And was there ever a period of the history of the race when the likelihood of a call was as great? The world is open to men spirit-filled to go to the thousand million human beings who as yet do not know the true God.

Another suggestion is that of tarrying. How impatient we are! A man must make his first millions in ten years of business. Ten more millions must be made in the next five years. Who now toils for the slow increase on an investment, except the man who lacks the speed of action of today's trading? And this is largely true of christian work—we will not work to the limit and be patient as long as the fruits do not fall into our laps in great quantities. And how impatient we are in trial! We will not wait until God gets through his process of realizing for us our best, until the purifying fire has burned away our dross. And this waiting on God would not be honoring to him unless our waiting was with confident expectation. The soul of David would never have received a blessing if he had waited before God indulging a perhaps.

Temperance

DRINK HABIT IS ON DECLINE

Old Type of Hail-Fellow, Well Met, Whose First Thought Was "Take a Drink," Rapidly Passing.

The most lasting advance that is being made in temperance comes from the economic side, the recognition by employers, and especially those handling public service corporations, that they cannot afford to employ men who drink liquor. The Northwestern Elevated railroad of Chicago, for example, recently posted the following notice:

"No employe is allowed to use liquor in any form when on duty and no employe will be allowed to work when there is any indication that he has used liquor in any form before coming to work, and the smell of liquor about him will be sufficient. Employes who are noted as having used liquor when on or off duty, or who are found to frequent saloons when off duty, will be deemed habitual users of liquor and are subject to dismissal from the service. Employes who go into saloons when on duty in any capacity will be discharged."

This sets forth the policy that is in force on every railroad entering Chicago—and everywhere else, for that matter—while thousands of manufacturing establishments and stores take the same position in effect, either through printed rules or the well-understood attitude of the firm or corporation.

What is true of Chicago applies generally throughout the business world. The old type of hail-fellow well met commercial traveler, whose first thought was to "take a drink," is rapidly passing. There are a few of them left capable of attracting custom, who are tolerated because of long service, but the young men entering on that line of work either cut out liquor for themselves or are compelled by their employers to do so. One does not have to be very old to have witnessed an amazing revolution in this matter. It is one of the marks of uplift that the observer of open mind can notice in American life all along the line. The pessimists need to look around them and cheer up; the old world is getting better year by year.

SCOTTISH DRINK AND CRIME

Striking Commentary on Action of House of Lords in Defending the Liquor Interest.

The recent publication in Great Britain of the official "Report of the Judicial Statistics of Scotland" affords a striking commentary on the action of the house of lords in defending the liquor interest against the interests of the public. The report says: "The 103,000 persons charged with drunkenness and disorder, arising in the former entirely from the abuse of alcohol and in the latter mainly so, provide the great bulk of the work for the constabulary and the courts.

"But it has been found that drink is an important factor in the causes of more serious crimes. The bulk of assaults is brought about by it, and it is the common explanation of 589 sentences for cruelty to children. About 80 per cent. of charges for murder and culpable homicide arise from intoxication. But the influence of drink extends into other classes of crimes which are not generally supposed to be affected by it. From five different careful investigations made amongst persons guilty of crimes against property, it has been found that in 60 per cent. of them the criminal was not sober at the time of committing the offence. Teetotalers in this class rarely exceed six or eight per cent. of the whole."

Among other items of interest in the report is the statement that owing to the larger number of prosecutions for serious offenses the average daily number of persons in custody in the prisons was higher than in any previous year. There were 258 children under sixteen years of age committed but a large reduction was expected in this number under the children's act going into force in April, 1909. Under the probation of offenders act, passed 1907, there were 2,510 persons who were dealt with, and the complaint is made that the act is not fully taken advantage of in Scotland.

Effects of Alcohol.

"No doubt by its oxidation (burning up in the system) alcohol does contribute a very small amount to the body-heat, but the value of this is far outbalanced by the fact that alcohol causes a marked dissipation and loss of heat by the skin, and indirectly, through its action on the nervous system; 'it would be foolish and extravagant' for the sake of this small amount of heat to use as a fuel or source of heat anything which so markedly interferes with the well-being of the protoplasm of the body as a whole."—Sir Victor Horsley.

Alcohol Not Stimulating.

Wings in Millinery

THE use of birds and wings in millinery has, in great measure, given way to the use of fancy feathers, that is, fancy feather pieces put together by the manufacturers in many forms, such as bands, pompons, cockades, etc. Fashion takes more kindly to the plumage of birds mounted in ways which do not suggest the bird at all. But the liking for fancy feathers increases with such vigor that there is no sign in sight pointing toward its waning.

The greater number of wings displayed in millinery are "made wings." Plumage is selected and sewed to a foundation to form them. Sometimes feathers are pasted instead of being sewed, but this is unsatisfactory to the wearer. Exposure to rain, and even moisture causes them to loosen and fall off. As wings are especially liked for street hats, this is a fault that cannot be tolerated. Sewed wings are to be chosen. These will last a season out, which is all one expects or wants of them. Wings are short lived as compared to some other feather decorations. The wind catches and strains them because they are more rigid and have a greater surface than other feathers.

But much depends upon the way in which they are mounted on the hat. They may be so placed that the crown of the hat will support them. In using them for trimming, therefore, two things are to be kept in view; the becomingness of poise and its stability.

For certain effects nothing quite takes the place of wing trimming. The arrival of our July and August outing millinery and the hats prepared for our midwinter northern tourists demonstrate that wings are staple in the world of millinery trimmings.

BLACK AND WHITE TURBAN

Black and white is the color combination of this becoming turban, with a touch of gilt to enliven it. The hat is covered with black velvet draped on the left side, and knotted in irregular loops and one long end. Around the crown a scarf on white satin is draped, the ends of this also knotted and mingling with the knotted velvet on the left. Along the bottom edge of the scarf is sewed a narrow white silk fringe and around the top a narrow strip of gilt lace. This is a hat which could be worn with many costumes and be equally pretty with all, owing to its neutrality of color.

Picture Fashions.

The fichu has been with us for some time. Now add to the fichu (the quaintest thing in soft taffetas, edged with a tiny pleated frill) the charming bodice of muslin, run through with narrow black velvet ribbons, the more than attractive frilly sleeves and the long plain petticoat we see in the "Children of George II.," by Copley, and we have a picturesque fashion that is sure to please.

A charming little gown seen recently was made after this fashion and was cut low in the neck in a charmingly becoming round, with elbow sleeves, both sleeves and corsage edged with a plaited and then caught-down frill of muslin. With it was worn a very becoming big hat trimmed with great ribbon bows.

Reversible Coats.

Satin coats are made in reversible style, the lining being in a pretty contrasting shade. To give the necessary warmth the satin reversible coat has an interlining of some woolen material.

Black and gold, old rose and smoke gray, light and dark blue, champagne and pink—these are the color combinations of the reversible wraps, the only trimming being given by means of reverse facings in the deep collars, which are usually bordered with fringe in the two colorings.

SATIN BORDERS ON COTTONS

Material, Thus Trimmed, Makes Up Into Dresses of the Most Handsome Description.

Some of the new cotton fabrics for 1912 are beautiful in the extreme, and lift cotton goods into the realm of fine dress. Rich embroidery is used on them, and one of the new features is satin striping or satin bordering.

On some sheer gray voiles, almost silky in texture, there is a broad border of gray satin, heavily embroidered in the same tone. This will make up into handsome dresses, of which not even the most elderly or most wealthy need feel any shame.

More youthful and giddy is a light cotton fabric with a border of satin sheer in which the motif is stamped on in gold, purple and other rich colors—a series of large iris in natural tones.

The new linens are heavy in texture and come in a large variety of colorings. Gray is especially well liked, and there are good blues, pinks, greens and other shades. In the rough crash finishes the pure white linen is not seen as much as the colored and the natural tone, but it is pre-eminent among the light-weight linens.

VELVET FOR ALL OCCASIONS

Most Popular of All Winter Materials for Tailored or Semi-Tailored Costumes.

"And some in velvet gowns."

That line in the old nursery rhyme is quite apropos this season, for if news from Paris can be relied upon, nearly all will be in velvet gowns before the winter is ended.

Plain and striped velvets are being featured prominently among the semi-tailored and tailored costumes. Two-piece suits and the favorite one-piece afternoon frock of velvet will have a place in almost every woman's wardrobe, especially if she be numbered among the well-dressed class.

Suits of plain one-tone velvet, or striped velvet showing two tones, trimmed with fur or elaborately braided, are very much in evidence. Some of the smartest of these have high collars that close about the throat in military effect, and these are often finished with a big rever on one side of the front.

Velveteen Frocks.

Velveteen, dressy at the first, durable and serviceable to the last, will always be popular for tunic and first suits for little lads. Brown, blue or green are the shades commonly chosen, but a suit in rose velveteen has been seen which made the small wearer look quite a picture. The little trousers should come well above the knee, the tunic should be double breasted and hook down the right side, and it should show about one and one-half inches of the trousers. The leg of mutton shape caught into a cuff is affected for the sleeve.

The doctors gave me medicine to ease me at those times, and said that I ought to have an operation. I would not listen to that, and when a friend of my husband's told him about Lydia E. I can do all my own housework, work in the garden and entertain company and enjoy them, and can walk as far as any ordinary woman, any day in the week. I wish I could talk to ever suffering woman and girl, and tell them what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me."—Mrs. DEMA BETHUNE, Sikeston, Mo.

Remember, the remedy which did this was Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

It has helped thousands of women who have been troubled with displacements, inflammation, ulceration, tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, that bearing down feeling, indigestion, and nervous prostration, after all other means have failed. Why don't you try it?

THE CARELESS GROCER

Blundered, and Great Good Came of It.

A careless grocer left the wrong package at a Michigan home one day and thereby brought a great blessing to the household.

"Two years ago I was a sufferer from stomach troubles, so acute that the effort to digest ordinary food gave me great pain, and brought on a condition of such extreme nervousness that I could not be left alone. I thought I should certainly become insane. I was so reduced in flesh that I was little better than a living skeleton. The doctors failed to give me relief and I despaired of recovery.

"One day our groceryman left a package of Grape-Nuts food by mistake, so I tried some for dinner. I was surprised to find that it satisfied my appetite and gave me no distress whatever. The next meal I ate of it again, and to be brief, I have lived for the past year almost exclusively on Grape-Nuts. It has proved to be a most healthful and appetizing food, perfectly adapted to the requirements of my system.

"Grape-Nuts is not only easily digested and assimilated, but I find that since I have been using it I am able to eat anything else my appetite fancies, without trouble from indigestion. The stomach trouble and nervousness have left me, I have regained my plumpness and my views of life are no longer despondent and gloomy.

"Other members of my family, especially my husband, (whose old enemy, the 'heart-burn,' has been vanquished) have also derived great benefit from the use of Grape-Nuts food and we think no morning meal complete without it." Name given by Postum C Battle Creek, Mich.

Man's Appeal to Himself

By Rev. J. H. Ralston, Secretary Correspondence Department, Moody Bible Institute, Chicago

TEXT.—My soul, wait thou only upon God: for my expectation is from Him.—Ps. 62: 5.

These were the words of a man of affairs, one who had attained the highest position within reach, and that not by heredity or chance, but by the force of his qualities; yet withal a man very human, a man who knew the depths of sin as well as the heights of intimate communion with God — and this man called on his soul to wait upon God.

The psalmist recognized within himself something to which many are very indifferent—a soul that related him to God, and differentiated him from the brute creation. Whether that which he recognized was in itself immortal or only contained the possibility of immortality need not interest us now, but it was another self, an alter ego, what some might call the subliminal self, and which has in those who have lived a life of purposeful sin, been stifled, and yet cries out constantly for recognition, and nourishment, and ultimate perfection.

It is not the imbecile who thinks of his soul, but it is the man who recognizes his true humanity, if you please; as in this case, oftentimes the man of affairs, of parts, of high ambitions. And this man is frequently quite out of patience with those who profess to be physicians of the soul and yet prescribe little or nothing that benefits the soul.

Great statesmen, financiers, railroad magnates, inventors, artists, manufacturers, etc., when they go to church, want soul food, something to which the soul responds. A leading lawyer recently said with reference to the message that should be given from the pulpit: "It should come from God, and should relate to the inner life, it should be food for the soul."

The call was not to something indefinite: "Wait thou only upon God." Here is the recognition of the correlative to the soul, the spiritual God. This recognition was not of an abstract idea, but of a personality—it gave no opportunity for quibbling and doubting. There was no suggestion in any little "if." This man of affairs and great parts was not the only historical character who has thus thought and acted. Some men may be like Job and ask where they may find God, but many others have had direct and constant intercourse with the spiritual God, they have seen him who is invisible.

Can this not be said of our three martyr presidents? Of Gladstone, of Bismarck, of William of Germany, of Justice Harlan? And as we glance back over the past do we not have Chinese Gordon, Stonewall Jackson, Oliver Cromwell, Gustavus Adolphus, Savonarola, Paul, David, Moses, Abraham and a host of others? Granting that these men waited on God, for so they all professed, their achievements are not an enigma.

What is it to wait on God? Is it not keeping silence before him? "Let all the earth keep silence before him." And such silence before God is an essential element of prayer. One has recently said that prayer is not the claiming a hearing, it is giving a hearing; it is not speaking to God, it is listening to God. It is true that

"Whatever is best for me, my God will bring to me.
If I do only wait, and trust, and pray,
What'er seems dark to me, shall end in light for me;
'Tis but the gloaming, which fore-runs the day."

This waiting before God, too, suggests a readiness to respond to the call of God as the old retainers would respond to the call of their liege lords. And was there ever a period of the history of the race when the likelihood of a call was as great? The world is open to men spirit-filled to go to the thousand million human beings who as yet do not know the true God.

Another suggestion is that of tarrying. How impatient we are! A man must make his first millions in ten years of business. Ten more millions must be made in the next five years. Who now toils for the slow increase on an investment, except the man who lacks the speed of action of today's trading? And this is largely true of christian work—we will not work to the limit and be patient as long as the fruits do not fall into our laps in great quantities. And how impatient we are in trial! We will not wait until God gets through his process of realizing for us our best, until the purifying fire has burned away our dross. And this waiting on God would not be honoring to him unless our waiting was with confident expectation. The soul of David would never have received a blessing if he had waited before God indulging a perhaps.

Temperance

DRINK HABIT IS ON DECLINE

Old Type of Hail-Fellow, Well Met, Whose First Thought Was "Take a Drink," Rapidly Passing.

The most lasting advance that is being made in temperance comes from the economic side, the recognition by employers, and especially those handling public service corporations, that they cannot afford to employ men who drink liquor. The Northwestern Elevated railroad of Chicago, for example, recently posted the following notice:

"No employe is allowed to use liquor in any form when on duty and no employe will be allowed to work when there is any indication that he has used liquor in any form before coming to work, and the smell of liquor about him will be sufficient. Employes who are noted as having used liquor when on or off duty, or who are found to frequent saloons when off duty, will be deemed habitual users of liquor and are subject to dismissal from the service. Employes who go into saloons when on duty in any capacity will be discharged."

This sets forth the policy that is in force on every railroad entering Chicago—and everywhere else, for that matter—while thousands of manufacturing establishments and stores take the same position in effect, either through printed rules or the well-understood attitude of the firm or corporation.

What is true of Chicago applies generally throughout the business world. The old type of hail-fellow well met commercial traveler, whose first thought was to "take a drink," is rapidly passing. There are a few of them left capable of attracting custom, who are tolerated because of long service, but the young men entering on that line of work either cut out liquor for themselves or are compelled by their employers to do so. One does not have to be very old to have witnessed an amazing revolution in this matter. It is one of the marks of uplift that the observer of open mind can notice in American life all along the line. The pessimists need to look around them and cheer up; the old world is getting better year by year.

SCOTTISH DRINK AND CRIME

The recent publication in Great Britain of the official "Report of the Judicial Statistics of Scotland" affords a striking commentary on the action of the house of lords in defending the liquor interest against the interests of the public. The report says: "The 103,000 persons charged with drunkenness and disorder, arising in the former entirely from the abuse of alcohol and in the latter mainly so, provide the great bulk of the work for the constabulary and the courts.

"But it has been found that drink is an important factor in the causes of more serious crimes. The bulk of assaults is brought about by it, and it is the common explanation of 589 sentences for cruelty to children. About 80 per cent. of charges for murder and culpable homicide arise from intoxication. But the influence of drink extends into other classes of crimes which are not generally supposed to be affected by it. From five different careful investigations made amongst persons guilty of crimes against property, it has been found that in 60 per cent. of them the criminal was not sober at the time of committing the offence. Teetotalers in this class rarely exceed six or eight per cent. of the whole."

Among other items of interest in the report is the statement that owing to the larger number of prosecutions for serious offenses the average daily number of persons in custody in the prisons was higher than in any previous year. MINERALS IN HUMAN BODY

The human body contains, among other constituents, about two pounds of phosphorus, which is essential to the health of the bones and the vigor of the brain. This phosphorus, if extracted and put to another use, would make up about 4,000 packages of friction matches.

Besides phosphorus, the body contains a few ounces of sodium and half an ounce of potassium. The quantity of the latter would be sufficient for many experiments in a class in chemistry.

In addition to sodium and potassium there are a few grains of magnesium, enough to make the "silver rain" for a family's stock of rockets on a Fourth of July evening or to create a brilliant light visible at a considerable distance.

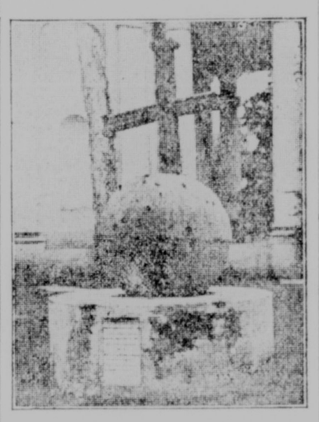
SIAM'S AMAZON GUARD

Siam is one of the few countries which boast of corps of women police. The members of this Amazon Guard are all old and ugly. They wear uniform though they are not armed. Their chief duty is to act as gate keeprs of the inner, or women's palace at Bangkok. They follow any stranger who enters the palace and remain with him until he takes his departure. They see that there is no mischief made and that no one makes love to the royal wives and concubines. Men who have business inside the palace —doctors, architects, carpenters, electric light fitters, etc.—enter the palace freely, but are always accompanied by some of the Amazon guard. The palace has some difficulty in recruiting these guards, as the work is hard and the pay poor, and the qualification—uncomplimentary.

WHEN THEY WORE "PIGTAILS"

The edict sanctioning the abolition of the pigtail reminds us that it is not so very long since the pigtail disappeared not merely from the army and navy, but even from every day civilian life in England. Waistlong pigtails were the fashionable wear in England about 1740 and before that the bag wig had been adorned with a pigtail looped up in a black silk bag. As late as 1858 an old gentleman was seen on Cheapside with his gray hair tied behind in a short queue, and even today we can find a relic of the pigtail, for the three pieces of black velvet on the dress tunics of officers in the royal Welsh fusiliers are the remains of the ribbon with which the queue was tied.

MEASURING STARLIGHT



Starlight has been measured in comparison with sunlight and the following results have been announced: The light received from a star of the first magnitude like Vega is about one forty-thousandth-millionth of the sun's. Young places the total starlight received by the earth at the value of 3,000 first magnitude stars, thus making the whole starlight to be one-sixtieth that of the full moon. Light has an actual mechanical pressure and can be measured in the laboratory. It has been found that the sun's light in itself presses against the earth with a force something like 70,000 tons.

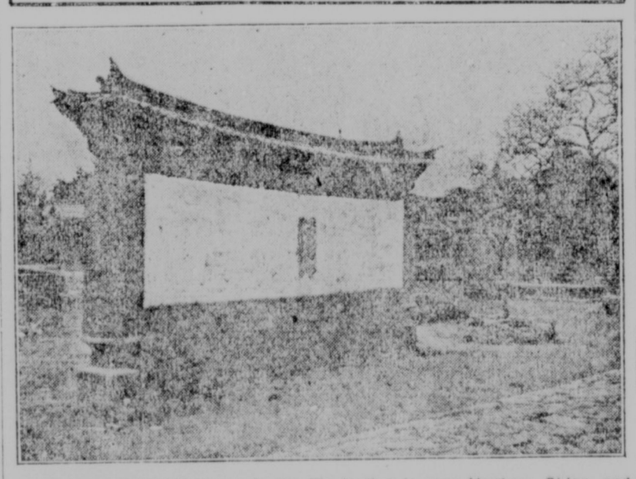
RAT IS SOLD AS PET DOG

The renewal of the fashion for small dogs has led to a remarkable case of fraud, the victim of which is one of the best known women in Paris society. Walking up and down the fashionable side of the Avenue de Bois de Boulogne was a man who had several toy dogs to show off, ostensibly for sale. One of the smallest of them was a particularly diminutive specimen of the griffon. Finally a woman stepped up to ask its price. The man made the little dog perform several tricks, and then, after some minutes' conversation, informed her that he had a still more remarkable specimen in his coat pocket. He then fished out a little creature scarcely more than half the size of the first.

The woman concluded what she thought was a bargain and what the man said was a sacrifice. She put the little one in her muff, went off to luncheon and, on getting home again, pulled him out from his hiding place. For a minute or two the animal showed fear, but then, to her great amazement and that of her servant, the little griffon suddenly started toward the window and ran up one of the curtains with the speed and agility not at all unlike the best known qualities of a mouse. The butler and footman were called, and there was an exciting chase about the drawing room before the little wonder was captured. The new owner was then rather more horrified than surprised to find that her griffon was nothing but a rather oversized rat that had been sewed into a dog's skin.

RELIC OF INDIAN MUTINY

In front of St. James' church in Delhi, the old-new capital of India, are a cross and ball that are vivid reminders of the great Indian mutiny. At that time they were on top of the church, and they contain no fewer than a hundred bullet holes.

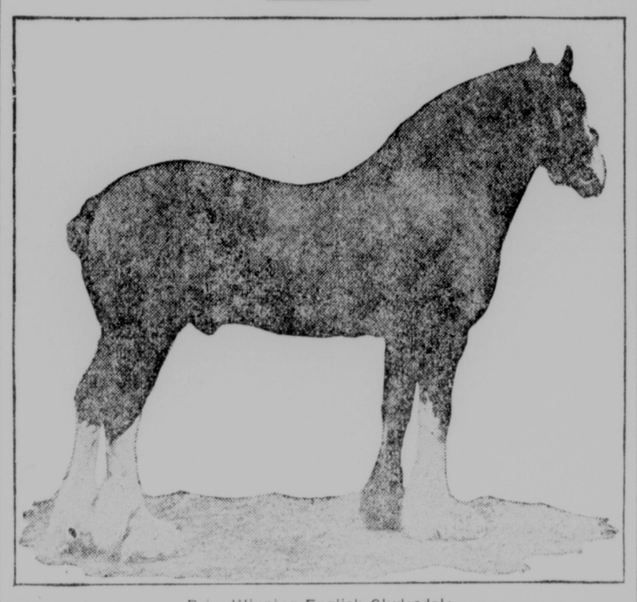


FIRST CAT TAX LEVIED

Munich, in Bavaria, is the first city in the world to levy a tax upon the domestic cat. The tax is 6s, and every cat is provided with a special collar and a metal check such as the dogs wear. Those who are not thus provided will be caught by authorized parsons. The measure is not popular, but it is considered that there are far too many cats in the city, and it is expected that the levying of the tax will result in reducing the numbers kept.

RAINIEST SPOT ON EARTH

The rainfall of a village among the hills of Assam during the ten weeks from May 1 to July 9 was 250 inches. The village is Cherrapunji, the rainiest spot in Asia and presumably in the world. Its annual rainfall is something over 450 inches, say, 15 times as much as London. Cherrapunji stands on a plateau overlooking the plain of Sylhet, and it is 4,455 feet above sea level.



Wall To Stop Evil Spirits

The peculiar wall shown in the illustration is near Hankow, China, and was erected to stop the passage of evil spirits, presumably on the same principle which causes the ordinary middle-class dwelling house in China to have inside the front door a fixed screen which compels anyone entering the house to turn to the right or left. The explanation of this is that evil spirits are able to move only in straight lines.

INCREASE FOAL CROP AND IMPROVE BREEDING CONDITION

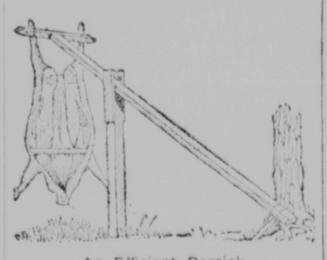
Horse Raising Industry Can be Made One of Most Lucrative of Any Carried on in Connection With Agricultural Work—Record Kept of Many Imported Stallions Gives Facts.

Prize-Winning English Clydesdale.

The greatest leak in American agriculture is that of barren mares. That the horse breeding industry can stand such a waste of energy, money and time is positive proof that the industry can be made one of the most lucrative of any carried on in connection with the work of the farm. The loss in my state, Nebraska, resulting from mares that do not reproduce themselves, exceeds $25,000,000 every year. In all of the United States, the loss from this source will exceed $350,000,000. In the United States slightly less than 40 foals are produced from every 100 mares bred. A small fraction less than 23 foals are produced by every stallion owned in this country and it requires nearly four services of a stallion for every live foal added to the horse population of this country. These facts are small credit to our breeding intelligence, writes Dr. G. L. Carlson in the Farmers' Mail and Breeze.

A record kept of many imported stallions, covering a period of many years, gives the following results: The Suffolk stallions left 69 per cent. of foals, Belgians 61, Percherons 55, Clydesdales 54, and the Shires 49 per cent. Feed is an important factor in the case of stallions. Data gathered in several states, and covering a period of several years, teaches us that a corn diet does not produce a high per cent. of foals. Oats mixed with corn increased the foal crop by 6 per cent. Oats gave an increase of 14 per cent. as compared with corn. Wheat bran added to the oats ration resulted in 7 per cent. more foals, while grass or alfalfa, with no grain, gave 82 per cent. of foals. Here we learn that the nearer we get to a corn ration the smaller number of foals produced, while the nearer we get to a grass ration with no grain the larger the number of foals produced. In other words, the nearer we approach natural conditions the more foals we will have.

Data along these lines secured from a different angle, show quite as conclusively that corn is not good for breeding stallions. The foal crop in Missouri from the best stallions is but 41 per cent. of the mares bred, and corn is the chief ration. In Kansas it is 44; Illinois, 46; Iowa, 47; Nebraska, 49; Minnesota, 61; Ontario, 71; Montana, 72; Wyoming, 72, and Idaho, 73. Here again we notice that the foal crop is small in the corn states as compared with the states producing no corn, and the large foal crop is in those states known as grazing states.



Over-feeding is bad, too, regardless of what the grain is. It is muscle, rather than tallow, that is wanted in reproduction. Tallow is degenerating, impairing the vitality of all cells, glands and nerves around which it is deposited. Everything fed a stallion should be clean and wholesome. Oats that have been wet before threshing and musty or dusty hay should never be fed a stallion. Vigor tablets, tonics or stimulants should never be given a stallion.

The manner of feeding our mares has much to do with foal production. The following includes a large list of mares kept on different feeds, and the per cent. of foals produced by them. The range kept mares produced 91 per cent. of foals; those fed grass in summer and alfalfa in winter, 81; hay, oats and bran, 68; corn, alfalfa or clover, 58; corn, bran and hay, 52; hay and corn, 49 per cent. Here, again, the nearer we get to a corn ration, the smaller the foal crop and the nearer we get to a grass ration without any grain, the larger the number of foals.

HANDY DEVICE FOR BUTCHERS

With Assistance of Derrick Shown in Illustration one Man Can Lift Carcass from Ground.

For a farmer who butchers only once or twice a year it is hardly worth while to build an expensive butchering outfit. One of the best devices I have ever discovered for lifting the dressed carcass from the ground is shown in the accompanying illustration, says a writer in the Farm and Home. A long pole is balanced across a post 8 feet high or across a limb of a tree. On the short end of this pole is attached a gambrel to which the carcass is attached as shown. One man can easily lift a heavy carcass with this device. A good way to hold the pole in place is to have a forked stick in the ground, or one may tie the end down if more convenient.

An Efficient Derrick.

Precautions Against Frost.

Take precaution against apples frosting in storage. Where there is danger from freezing set a large tub of warm water in the cellar to raise the temperature. If freezing occurs allow the fruit to thaw slowly.

Seed Laws in Germany.

Germany has good laws in reference to the purity and viability of seeds that are for sale, and these laws appear to be well enforced.

FEW COMFORTS FOR A PIGGERY

Animal Will Not Do Its Best Unless Kept Comfortable—Food for Pushing Spring Pigs.

(By SYLVANUS VAN AKEN.)

If the hog is not comfortable he will not do his best. The one object of hog farming is profit. The hog responding most readily to good care and that is capable of best development and a variety of foods is the most desirable.

A hog will not make a profit when shut up in a small pen fed on dry corn and filthy water.

Be sure to have a good place for the sows to farrow in. Spring pigs well cared for will bring the farmer good money next fall and he will hardly know how he came by it.

One will find the best food for pushing pigs to be shorts mixed with skimmilk placed in a separate pen just out of reach of the mother; the little fellows soon learn that it is for them.

As soon as they begin to eat it up clean, add a little corn meal to the feed. When three months old one may add to this an equal amount of ground oats. After that soak shelled corn and feed it for slops.

Make slop thick enough to pour readily and add salt, as this aids digestion. Use old process oil meal soaked in slops for twelve hours as a substitute for milk.

When being fed heavily, pigs should have plenty of exercise. Early spring pigs grown on wide grass range having skimmilk and small grain ration costs the owners but little, and are the best money makers.

Excellent Sheep Practice.

It is the custom in Wyoming for owners of land, who rent their fields in the winter to sheepmen, to stipulate in the agreement that the sheep are not to be bedded in one place more than two or three nights, so as to spread the manure. This is an excellent practice.

The Farmer's Son's Great Opportunity

Why wait for the old farm to become your inheritance? Begin now to prepare for your future prosperity and independence. A great opportunity awaits you in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta, where you can secure a Free Homestead or buy land at reasonable prices.

Now's the Time

—not a year from now, when land will be higher. The profits secured from the abundant crops of Wheat, Oats and Barley, as well as cattle raising, are causing a steady advance in price. Government returns show that the number of settlers in Western Canada from the U. S. was 60 per cent larger in 1910 than the previous year.

Many farmers have paid for their land out of the proceeds of one crop.

Free Homesteads of 160 acres and pre-emptions of 160 acres at $3.00 an acre. Fine climate, good schools, excellent railway facilities, low freight rates; wood, water and lumber easily obtained.

For pamphlet "Last Best West," particulars as to suitable location and low settlers' rate, apply to Supt. of Immigration, Ottawa, Can., or to Canadian Gov't Agent.

A ludicrous story is told of an Edinburgh baillie, whose studies in natural history seems to have been limited. The following case came before him one day:

A man who kept a ferret having to go into the country, left the cage with the ferret in charge of a neighbor till he should return. The neighbor incautiously opened the cage door, and the ferret escaped. The owner was very angry, and brought a claim against him for damages.

The following was the decision of the learned baillie: "Nae doot," he said to the neighbor; "nae doot ye was wrang to open the cage door; but," he added, turning to the owner, "ye was wrang, too. What for did ye no clip the brute's wings?"

Maryland Trees Bring In $5,000,000 Yearly.

Telling of the educational work being done for the preservation and propagation of Maryland trees, and showing in detail the past and future of Maryland forests, the annual report of E. W. Besley, State Forester, and the Maryland State Board of Forestry has just come from the hands of the printers.

The booklet embraces 82 pages of intensely interesting matter, not only to the people of the counties, but to the city man. Photographs of the different trees explain faults and advantages of the different conditions in which the trees of the State are found. Forest fires and their destructive results are brought out, and the report shows that, although abused, Maryland forests give an annual revenue of $5,000,000 to the people of the State.

Tables showing the condition of the State's forests and the lumber production is brought out in interesting detail.

Text of Measure Introduced in Legislature By Mr. Weimer.

Sec. 4. No prescription shall be filled a second time. Such book shall be in form substantially as follows:

And the book and all such prescriptions before provided for shall be open to inspection by any State's Attorney, justice of the peace having criminal jurisdiction, judge of any Court or any sheriff, constable, marshal or police officer. Sec. 12. All prosecutions for the violations of any provisions of this act shall be upon presentment and indictment; but any justice of the peace of the county shall have the same authority to receive information of violations thereof, and to take recognizance and bail, or to commit, as is now exercised by justices of the peace of the county under the Public General Law of this State.

Sec. 13. In any indictment for the violation of the provisions of this act, it shall not be necessary, except in the case of cider, to specifiy the particular kind of liquor which any house, person, company, association or body corporate, bartered, sold, or gave away, or solicited or received orders for the purchase of, or kept, deposited or had with the intent to barter, sell or give away, or that the same had been bartered, sold or given away in violation of said provisions; but it shall be sufficient if the indictment set forth that the traverser, bartered, sold or gave away, or solicited, or received orders for the purchase of, kept deposited or had with intent to barter, sell or give away, spirituous, or fermented liquors or intoxicating drinks, or with intent, that the same be bartered, sold or given, aways in violation of said provisions.

Sec. 14. Sec. 15. Be it futher enacted, That nothing in this act shall effect or apply to any case or cases now pending in said for the violation of any of the liquor laws thereof, but all such cases shall be prosecuted in the same manner and to the same extent as if this act had not been enacted.

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

Sing a song of sixpence,
You fellow full of rye;
With not a cent to bury you
Tomorrow, should you die.

The keeper's in the bar room,
Counting out his money,
His wife is in the parlor
With well dressed sis and sonny.

Your wife has gone out working,
And washing people's clothes
To pay for old rye whiskey
To color your red nose.

The ground hog seems determined to keep up his reputation. He has given us all that was coming to us in the shape of rough weather for five weeks, and there seems a certainty that he will get in the sixth of the same kind.

At the M. E. League service Sunday evening Miss Beatrice Heyward favored the congregation with a violin solo, and Miss Maize Prevost rendered a fine vocal solo.

Our people are delighted at the prospect of a change in the management of the Park. They believe that the new company will make the Park in a few years what it should and might have been years ago.

Messrs. Asa and Joseph Callis have leased the old postoffice building in Loch Lynn and will open up a general store in the spring. They are worthy young men and will no doubt receive a share of public patronage.

Mrs. Allie Haymond and Mr. and Mrs. Carl Frame and son James, of Fairmont, were here for a few days last week to arrange for improvements to their cottage. They were suddenly called home on account of the death of a relative.

Mr. Lee N. Hayden has a full line of wall paper samples and is ready to contract for paper hanging and painting.

Special services were commenced in the Loch Lynn U. B. church Tuesday evening by Rev. Bauman. They will likely continue for three weeks or longer.

Mr. J. C. Beckman, of Fairmont, is thinking of locating here.

The Bible Students Convention may be held here again this summer. They desire an earlier date for their meeting.

The change of management will not interfere with the campmeeting and Chautauqua.

With a trolly line from the Park to Oakland and Deer Park we will be "going some."

Preaching in the M. E. church Sunday at 7.30 p. m.

Mr. Amos Fike, sormerly of near Red House, has leased Queenwood Hotel for the season, and is now occupying it with his family.

Mr. Thomas Callis Monday qualified as constable for this district and entered upon the discharge of the duties of the office. Tom will make a good officer.

Mr. W. E. Landon, who recently sold his farm near here, has purchased two lots in Lock Lynn, and will build a residence thereon in the near future.

Mr. B. F. Crane, who has spent several weeks with his family at Clarksburg, arrived here Monday and announced that he would locate his office as Justice of the Peace in Oakland.

Mrs. C. M. Rathbun left here this morning for an extended visit among relatives and friends in Wheeling, W. Va.

BITTINGER.

On last Friday morning at about eight o'clock, John C. Beachy, one of the oldest residents of this district, died very suddenly at the home of his son Oliver C Beachy, at the ripe old age of 80 years, 6 months and 9 days. The deceased was one of the pioneer settlers of this part of Garrett county, and with the aid of a large family of boys cleared out and operated a large farm near this village. He is survived by five sons, John L. Beachy of Fort Hill, Pa., Christian J. Beachy of Swanton, this county, and Messrs. Oliver, Simon and Urner Beachy of this neighborhood, and two daughters, Mrs. Ira Durst and Mrs. Dennis Detrick, both residing near here. The funeral services were conducted in the Lutheran church in this village on last Sunday morning, by Rev. Gideon Miller of Springs Pa., assisted by Rev. C. H. Shull of this charge. Interment was made immediately after the services in the Orendorf private cemetery.

David Miller of Deer Park, spent last Sunday with his wife at this place. Mrs. Miller is suffering considerable from injuries received from a fall on the ice one day last week.

Vincent Fazenbaker, one of our young Nimrods, killed an unusually sly old fox a day or two ago. The animal had eluded the best hunters and the swiftest hounds for some time, but at last fell a victim to Mr. Fazenbaker's skill.

The local mine operators of this settlement have put off a number of their miners and expect soon to shut down for the winter.

Mrs. Hester Fazenbaker, who has been employed in Grantsville for some weeks returned to her home at this place last Friday.

Joe Durst of near Grantsville, was seen in this village one day last week.

George Reckner of North Glade, spent the early part of this week fox chasing with the boys on this side of the mountain, and succeeded in killing one fox on Monday last.

Services in the Lutheran church here on next Sunday morning at 10:30.

THE LOCAL DEMOCRACY NAMED MUNICIPAL TICKET

At A Convention Held in The Court House Last Night.

The Democratic voters of Oakland, assembled in convention last night at the court house, named a municipal ticket to be voted on Monday. A goodly number of people were present and the meeting passed off very smoothly.

Mr. G. Semmes Hamill, Jr., was nominated for Mayor, with the following as candidates for Council: Messrs. Harry Rasche, D. E. Offutt, Jr., and Dr. B. Frank Selby.

The Republicans will meet tomorrow night at the City Council chamber to nominate a ticket.

Mr. Rasche Withdraws From Ticket.

To the Voters of Oakland:

My name has been been placed on the Democratic ticket as one of the nominees for councilman at the coming city election. While I appreciate the honor thus conferred, my duties in connection with the B. & O. R. R. Co. will not allow me to serve, even in the event of my election. I therefore take this method of announcing my withdrawal from the ticket. Respectfully,

H. A. RASCHE,

Of Interest to Women.

A short course in Domestic Science will be given at the Maryland Agricultural College during the week of March 18th to 23rd next. The programme of lectures and demonstrations is well arranged and will interest every present or prospective housekeeper.

Some of the subjects to be considered are household chemistry and bacteriology, planning meals, principles of cooking, care of milk and first aid to the injured. The afternoon of Saturday, March 18th, will be especially for teachers and will be devoted to a discussion of how to teach home economics in the rural schools.

A copy of the programme containing subjects and names of lecturers may be had by addressing a request to the College.

O. H. S. Notes.

Our building has been fitted up with gas lights, which will enable us to have some of our meetings in the evenings.

On Friday Mr. J. E. Harned gave us an interesting talk on "Nature Study." He also presented the O. H. S. with five beautifully mounted specimens which improve the appearance of our room very much. We feel greatly indebted to Mr. Harned; for he has helped us in many ways. We are going to organize a High School Museum sometimes in the near future.

On Friday morning Miss Grant rendered some beautiful musical selections which were greatly enjoyed.

Best regards are sent to the O. H. S. by LaMarck Ward. LaMarck says he doesn't like his new school and longs for his old friends here.

The Sophomores feel very much enlightened owing to the fact that a gas light has been placed near their door.

Miss Arnold was called home on account of the death of her father. We extend our sympathies to her in her sad bereavement.

Base ball season is not far off. Only about five or six weeks, but that is not far when one has something to look forward to. But to get down to business; we are going to organize a team and get down to practice as soon as the weather permits, and would like to make dates for games with any other High School that is not too far away.

Attention is directed to the advertisment of Mr. Joyce Riker, agent for the Overland Automobile Company, which is in this paper today. Mr. Riker represent one of the best automobiles factories of the country and the machine he handles compares very favorably with th se selling at a much higer price. Mr. Riker at present absent from Oakland, will be here shortly to take personal charge of the business.

J. C. Michael will make sale of his personal property on the 14th of March, as he has rented his farm here, and will leave soon after the sale for Oakland, Md. His son, Neil, will also leave about the middle of next month for Parkersburg, where he will attend the Mountain State Business College. We regret to see this family leave our community, as they are among the dearest residents of our community.—Keyser Tribune.

By direction of the Mayor and City Council we publish in today's issue of The Republican the financial statement showing the condition of the city's treasury. With the cash balance on hand of more than $2600 and with all running expenses of the town paid as well as keeping the payment up on the bonded debt and interest, which amounts at present to $59,000, the statement is a creditable one to the city officials.

Frank Carbin, a foreign miner employed by the Monroe Coal Mining Co., at Barnum was painfully and extensively burned about face, head, neck and one arm this week from an explosion of powder. It is the same old story of the careless handling of powder in preparing shots to be used in breaking down coal. Fortunately for the man the quantity in the can was small when the spark from his lamp ignited it or the consequences might have been more serious.

SYNOPSIS.

Elam Harnish, known all through Alaska as "Burning Daylight," celebrates his 30th birthday with a crowd of miners at the Circle City Tivoli. The dance leads to heavy gambling, in which over $100,000 is staked. Harnish loses his money and his mine but wins the mail contract. He starts on his mail trip with dogs and sledge, telling his friends that he will be in the big Yukon gold strike at the start. Burning Daylight makes a sensationally rapid run across country with the mail, appears at the Tivoli and is now ready to join his friends in a dash to the new gold fields. Deciding that gold will be found in the up-river district Harnish buys two tons of flour, which he declares will be worth its weight in gold, but when he arrives with his flour he finds the big flat desolate. A comrade discovers gold and Daylight reaps a rich harvest. He goes to Dawson, becomes the most prominent figure in the Klondike and defeats a combination of capitalists in a vast mining deal. He returns to civilization, and, amid the bewildering complications of high finance, Daylight finds that he has been led to invest his eleven millions in a manipulated scheme. He goes to New York, and confronting his disloyal partners with a revolver, he threatens to kill them if his money is not returned. They are cowed, return their steadings and Harnish goes back to San Francisco where he meets his fate in Dede Mason, a pretty stenographer. He makes large investments and gets into the political ring. For a rest he goes to the country. Daylight gets deeper into high finance in San Francisco, but often the longing for the simple life nearly overcomes him. Dede Mason buys a horse and Daylight meets her in her saddle trips. One day he asks Dede to go with him on one more ride, his purpose being to ask her to marry him, and they canter away, she trying to analyze her feelings.

CHAPTER XV.—Continued.

But through it all ran the golden read of love. At first he had been atent just to ride with Dede and to on comradely terms with her; but e desire and the need for her increased. The more he knew of her, the higher was his appraisal. Had she been reserved and haughty with him, or been merely a giggling, simpering creature of a woman, it would have been different. Instead, she amazed him with her simplicity and wholesomeness, with her great store of comradeliness. The latter was the unexpected. He had never looked upon woman in that way. Woman, the toy; woman, the harpy; woman, the necessary wife and mother of the race's offspring—all this had been his expectation and understanding of woman. But woman, the comrade and playfellow and joyfellow—this was what Dede had surprised him in. And the more she became worth while, the more ardently his love burned, unconsciously shading his voice with caresses, and with equal unconsciousness flaring up signal fires in his eyes. Nor was she blind to it, yet, like many women before her, she thought to play with the pretty fire and escape the consequent conflagration.

"Winter will soon be coming on," she said regretfully, and with provocation, one day, "and then there won't be any more riding."

"But I must see you in the winter just the same," he cried hastily.

She shook her head.

"I've been pretty good," he declared. "I leave it to you if I haven't. It's been pretty hard, too, I can tell you. You just think it over. Not once have I said a word about love to you, and me loving you all the time. That's going some for a man that's used to having his own way. I'm somewhat of a rusher when it comes to traveling. I reckon I'd rush God Almighty if it came to a race over the ice. And yet I didn't rush you. I guess this fact is an indication of how much I do love you. Of course I want you to marry me. Have I said a word about it, though? Nary a chirp, nary a flutter. I've been quiet and good, though it's almost made me sick at times, this keeping quiet. I haven't asked you to marry me. I'm not asking you now. Oh, not but what you satisfy me. I sure know you're the wife for me. But how about myself? Do you know me well enough to know your own mind?" He shrugged his shoulders. "I don't know, and I ain't going to take chances on it now. You've got to know for sure whether you think you could get along with me or not, and I'm playing a slow conservative game. I ain't a-going to lose for overlooking my hand."

This was love-making of a sort beyond Dede's experience. Nor had she ever heard of anything like it.

"So you see," he urged, "just for a square deal we've got to see some more of each other this winter. Most likely your mind ain't made up yet—"

"But it is," she interrupted. "I wouldn't dare permit myself to care for you. Happiness, for me, would not lie that way. I like you, Mr. Harnish, and all that, but it can never be more than that."

"It's because you don't like my way of living," he charged, thinking in his own mind of the sensational joy-rides and general profligacy with which the newspapers had credited him—thinking this, and wondering whether or not, in maiden modesty, she would disclaim knowledge of it.

To his surprise, her answer was flat and uncompromising.

"No; I don't."

"I know I've been brash on some of my rides that got into the papers," he began his defence, "and that I've been traveling with a lively crowd—"

"I don't mean that," she said, "though I know about it, too, and can't say that I like it. But it is your life in general, your business. There are women in the world who could marry a man like you and be happy, but I couldn't. And the more I cared for such a man, the more unhappy I should be. You see, my unhappiness, in turn, would tend to make him unhappy. I should make a mistake, and he would make an equal mistake, though his would not be so hard on him because he would still have his business."

"Business!" Daylight gasped. "What's wrong with my business? I play fair and square. There's nothing underhand about it, which can't be said of most businesses, whether of the big corporations or of the cheating, lying, little corner-grocerymen. I play the straight rules of the game, and I don't have to lie or cheat or break my word."

"Don't you see," he went on, "the whole game is a gamble. Everybody gambles in one way or another. The farmer gambles against the weather and the market on his crops. So does the United States Steel Corporation. The business of lots of men is straight robbery of the poor people. But I've never made that my business. You know that. I've always gone after the robbers."

"I missed my point," she admitted. "Wait a minute."

And for a space they rode in silence.

"I see it more clearly than I can state it, but it's something like this. There is legitimate work, and there's work that—well, that isn't legitimate. The farmer works the soil and produces grain. He's making something that is good for humanity. He actually, in a way, creates something, the grain that will fill the mouths of the hungry."

"And then the railroads and market-riggers and the rest proceed to rob him of that same grain," Daylight broke in.

"There ain't much difference between playing halfway robber like the railroad hauling that farmer's wheat to market, and playing all robber and robbing the robbers like I do. And, besides, halfway robbery is too slow a game for me to sit in. You don't win quick enough for me."

"But what do you want to win for?" Dede demanded. "You have millions and millions, already; why can't you do good with all your money?"

Daylight laughed.

"Doing good with your money! Ain't it funny, to go around with brass knuckles and a big club breaking folks' heads and taking their money away from them until I've got a pile, and then, repenting of my ways, going around and bandaging up the heads the other robbers are breaking? I leave it to you. That's what doing good with money amounts to. Every once in a while some robber turns softhearted and takes to driving an ambulance. That's what Carnegie did. He smashed heads in pitched battles at Homestead, regular wholesale headbreaker he was, held up the suckers for a few hundred million, and now he goes around dribbling it back to them. Funny? I leave it to you."

He rolled a cigarette and watched her half curiously, half amusedly. His replies and harsh generalizations of a harsh school were disconcerting, and she came back to her earlier position.

"I can't argue with you, and you know that. No matter how right a woman is, men have such a way about them—well, what they say sounds most convincing, and yet the woman is still certain they are wrong. But there is one thing, the creative joy; and it's a higher joy than mere gambling. Haven't you ever made things yourself—a log cabin up in the Yukon, or a canoe, or raft, or something? And don't you remember how satisfied you were, how good you felt, while you were doing it and after you had it done?"

While she spoke his memory was busy with the associations she recalled. He saw the deserted flat on the river bank by the Klondike, and he saw the log cabins and warehouses spring up, and all the log structures he had built, and his sawmills working night and day on three shifts.

"Why, dog-gone it, Miss Mason, you're right—in a way. I've built hundreds of houses up there, and I remember I was proud and glad to see them go up. I'm proud now, when I remember them. And there was Ophir—the most God-forsaken moose-pasture of a creek you ever laid eyes on. I made that into the big Ophir. Why, I ran the water in there from the Rinkabilly, eighty miles away. They all said I couldn't, but I did it, and I did it by myself. The dam and the flume cost me four million. But you should have seen that Ophir—power plants, electric lights, and hundreds of men on the pay-roll, working night and day. I guess I do get an inkling of what you mean by making a thing. I made Ophir, and she was a hummer."

"And you won something there that was more than mere money," Dede encouraged. "Now do you know what I would do if I had lots of money and simply had to go on playing at business? Take all the southerly and westerly slope of these bare hills. I'd buy them in and plant eucalyptus on them. I'd do it for the joy of doing it anyway; but suppose I had that gambling twist in me which you talk about, why, I'd do it just the same and make money out of the trees. And there's my other point again. Instead of raising the price of coal without adding an ounce of coal to the market supply, I'd be making thousands and thousands of cords of firewood—making something where nothing was before. And everybody who ever crossed on the ferries would look up at these forested hills and be made glad. Who was made glad by your adding four dollars a ton to Rock Wells?

It was Daylight's turn to be silent for a time while she waited an answer.

"Would you rather I did things like that?" he asked at last.

"It would be better for the world, and better for you," she answered non-committally.

CHAPTER XVI.

All week every one in the office knew that something new and big was afoot in Daylight's mind. On Sunday Dede learned all about it.

"I've been thinking a lot of our talk," he began, "and I've got an idea I'd like to give it a flutter. And I've got a proposition to make your hair stand up. It's what you call legitimate, and at the same time it's the gosh-dangdest gamble a man ever went into. How about planting minutes wholesale, and making two minutes grow where one minute grew before? Oh, yes, and planting a few trees, too—say several million of them. You remember the quarry I made believe I was looking at? Well, I'm going to buy it. I'm going to buy these hills, too, clear from here around to Berkeley and down the other way to San Leandro. I own a lot of them already, for that matter. But mum is the word. I'll be buying a long time to come before anything much is guessed about it, and I don't want the market to jump up out of sight. You see that hill over there. It's my hill running clear down its slopes through Piedmont and halfway along those rolling hills into Oakland. And it's nothing to all the things I'm going to buy."

He paused triumphantly.

"The ferry system between Oakland and San Francisco is the worst one-horse concern in the United States. You cross on it every day, six days in the week. That's say, twenty-five days a month, or three hundred a year. How long does it take you one way? Forty minutes, if you're lucky. I'm going to put you across in twenty minutes. If that ain't making two minutes grow where one grew before, knock off my head with little apples. I'll save you twenty minutes each way. That's forty minues a day, times three hundred, equal to twelve thousand minutes a year, just for you, just for one person. Let's see: that's two hundred whole hours. Suppose I save two hundred hours a year for thousands of other folks—that's farming some, ain't is? Come on. Let's ride up that hill, and when I get you out on top where you can see something, I'll talk sense."

A small footpath dropped down to the dry bed of the canyon, which they crossed before they began the climb. The slope was steep and covered with matted brush and bushes, through which the horses slipped and lunged. Showers of twigs and leaves fell upon them, and predicament followed predicament, until they emerged on the hilltop the worse for wear but happy and excited. Here no trees obstructed the view. The particular hill on which they were, out-jutted from the regular line of the range, so that the sweep of their vision extended over three-quarters of the circle. Below on the flat land bordering the bay, lay Oakland, and across the bay was San Francisco. Between the two cities they could see the white ferry-boats on the water. Around to their right was Berkeley, and to their left the scattered villages between Oakland and San Leandro. Directly in the foreground was Piedmont, with its desultory dwellings and patches of farming land, and from Piedmont the land rolled down in successive waves upon Oakland.

"Look at it," said Daylight, extending his arm in a sweeping gesture. "A hundred thousand people there, and no reason there shouldn't be half a million. There's the chance to make five people grow where one grows now. Here's the scheme in a nutshell. Why don't more people live in Oakland? No good service with San Francisco, and, besides, Oakland is asleep. It's a whole lot better place to live in than San Francisco. Now, suppose I buy in all the street railways of Oakland, Berkeley, Alameda, San Leandro, and the rest—bring them under one head with a competent management? Suppose I cut the time to San Francisco one-half by building a big pier out there almost to Goat Island and establishing a ferry system with modern up-to-date boats? Why, folks will want to live over on this side. Very good. They'll need land on which to build. So, first I buy up the land. But the land's cheap now. Why? Because it's in the country, no electric roads, no quick communication, nobody guessing that the electric roads are coming. I'll build the roads. That will make the land jump up. Then I'll sell the land as fast as the folks will want to buy because of the improved ferry system and transportation facilities."

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Peace is the strongest force there is, but only a few have made the discovery.

CRACKED HANDS ARE HEALED

Woman Suffered for Years. Resinol Worked Immediately.

During the winter many people suffer untold agony from chapped and cracked hands. The manner of washing and drying the hands, the water, exposure, blood and innumerable other things may cause this. To persons suffering in this way, or from any skin eruption, this woman's experience should prove invaluable.

"I highly prize Resinol Soap and Ointment. For years I had suffered with my hands cracking. Had used all kinds of salve, but to no avail, until one day a sample box of Resinol Ointment was sent to our home. Almost discouraged, I had suffered so long with my hands, I opened the package and began reading some of the testimonials. Finally I tried it, and the effect was wonderful. It seemed to take the soreness away, and immediately began to heal, and in a few days (using it every night) my hands were entirely healed. I feel that I cannot get along without Resinol Ointment, and recommend it with pleasure, whenever an opportunity presents itself.

Child's Reasoning.

"I can't tell you anything about my grandpa," said solemn little Eustace, questioned by a happier comrade as to his more recent ancestor, "because I never had any. All my grandparents died before I was born."

"But you had grandparents just the same, dear," interpolated a listening adult. "The fact that they died before you were born doesn't alter the fact that they were your grandparents."

"But if our fathers and mothers had died before we were born they wouldn't have been our fathers and mothers, would they?" the wondering child questioned. "So I don't see how what you say can be true."

Useless.

"Why don't you make up your mind to cease permitting your wife to henpeck you?"

"I have made it up half a dozen times, but it doesn't seem to do any good at all. She refuses to concede that I have a mind."

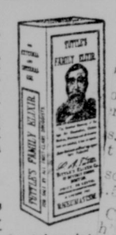
FREE HOMES FOR A Quarter Million Northwest

Montana, Oregon and Minnesota, combined, can provide homes for a quarter million people and give each man a deed to a 160 or 320 acre farm, under the provisions of Uncle Sam's homestead laws.

Montana won the premium for th best wheat, oats, barley and alfalf. grown in the United States at the New York Land Show, and she has more than twenty million acres of government land within her borders capable of raising rich crops of these products yearly. You can homestead this land.

Central Oregon has been opened to settlement by the completion of the Oregon Trunk Railway. Crops raised on its bench lands won against the world at the last Dry Farming Congress. Seventeen million acres of good farm land await the coming of the homemaker here.



Minnesota, contrary to general opinion, has over twenty million acres of unoccupied farm land. A million acres of it is homestead land. Most of it is logged off and wonderfully fertile. Mr. Newlywed Resented What He Considered Impertinence, but the Joke Was on Him.

They were on their wedding tour, and imagined that every civilty given them related to their new condition of servitude.

Having stopped at a way station, the bridegroom was approached by the station agent, who asked:

"Are you going to take the next train?"

"It's none of your business," replied the bridegroom, indignantly, as he guided the bride up the platform, where they condoled with each other over the impertinence of some of the natives.

Onward came the train, its vapor curling from afar. It was the last to their destination that day—an express. Nearer and nearer it came at full speed; then in a moment it whizzed past and was gone.

"Why in thunder didn't that train stop!" yelled the bridegroom.

"Cos you said 'twant none of my bizness. I has to signal if that train's to stop."

By LAWRENCE ALFRED CLAY

(Copyright, 1911, by Associated Literary Press.)

When a man is a jolly bachelor of thirty—when he belongs to three or four clubs—when he is liberal with his money and is familiarly called Fred by every one, how is any one going to take him seriously? It can't be done. He can not get credit for being more than half in earnest. Such a man was Fred Nevins, and now and then he found it embarrassing not to be credited with seriousness.

When he dropped in to see the widow Dareforth one afternoon and offer her his hand and heart, it was rather embarrassing to receive the reply:

"It's a matter you just happened to think of."

"'Pon my soul, but I have loved you for—for——"

"For thirty long seconds!"

"For a whole year."

"Poor man! How you must have thrashed around nights!"

"But won't you believe me?"

"No, sir. Even if I did, I should say no."

"But what's the trouble?"

"Mr. Nevins, I married one lah-de-dah man, and I don't want another. If I marry again, it won't be a sissy. You've got money and you've got brains, and you are throwing them both away. You are a nonentity outside your circle."

"Oh, it's that I'm not in a profession or working at a trade?" he queried.

"Just that. Just idling your time away. Just being a sissy of a man. You may find some women to marry you, but I sha'n't credit her with good sense."

"By George! but I don't amount to much, do I?" laughed Fred. "Come to think of it, I ought to seek a job at something."

"And be told that you couldn't earn ten dollars a week!"

"Perhaps! Say, now, I'm going to be different. I'm going to make a new start. Let's see what I can go into. The detective business is not bad."

Count Lugi called the next day

The widow laughed.

"And the headwaiter at a restaurant makes fifty dollars a week."

She laughed again.

"Would you rather see me in one of those occupations than doing nothing?"

"I certainly should. Then I'd change my mind about your being a sissy."

"Good! You shall change it!"

"Meanwhile, drop in occasionally and renew your proposal. I can always appreciate a bit of humor."

"Great Scotts! She calls it humor!" groaned the bachelor as he left the house. "I must have her or die, and yet she won't see anything but humor in it!"

Count Lugi called the next day He had been rather dilatory in getting around to it, as he had had considerable trouble in ascertaining the widow's financial standing. When the report came that she was worth about $2,000,000 he ordered his auto around and commanded his chauffeur to break all speed laws.

Count Lugi was an Italian count. He owned castles in Italy. Some were built on peaks and crags, that he might hear the wind moan around the gables; and some were on the seashore, where the roar of the mad waters could be heard as a count sat in his library and smoked and sipped a cocktail.

Count Lugi wanted a wife, but not a rich one. The poorer she was the better. She would then appreciate his tens of millions far more. Of course, if he should chance to be loved by a rich woman he would have to make the best of it, but never, never, would he consent to use one single stiver of her money.

The count got this much off in a twenty-minute call. The widow Dareforth was charmed — not too much so, but moderately charmed. She had always wanted to live in an Italian castle and have bananas right at hand. Besides, Italy is the place where the pure olive oil comes from after it has been shipped over there by the Cotton Seed trust. Besides, again, it would be so nice to have a husband who could swear by simply shrugging his shoulders!

Yes, the count left a pleasant impression behind, and four days later, when he invited Mrs. Dareforth to dine with him at a restaurant, chaperoned by her aunt, the invitation was accepted.

Mr. Fred Nevins met them at the door and conducted them to a table in the most ceremonious way. He had got a place as headwaiter. That is, he was to have a week to make good in. He did not smile. The widow was so astounded that she couldn't have smiled for cash down. The aunt, who also knew Fred, had to swallow an olive or perish. The only one maintaining a complacent demeanor was the count, and he snapped his fingers at the headwaiter and said:

"Fellow, see that my orders are attended to with promptness!"

At that dinner the count grew confidential. He was in America to buy the right of a patent flying machine for a million dollars—one he could sell to his government for five million. He didn't need the four million, but he was a charitable man. He would devote the profits of the deal to orphan asylums. He was praised and flattered, and on the way out to the taxi he dared to press the widow's hand. At her door he dared to press it again.

It was at his third call at the house that with a simple shrug of the right shoulder he let the widow know that he was in love with her. Then a shrug of the left warned her that a proposal might come at the next call, and that she had better get ready for it.

It would be ungallant to say that Mrs. Dareforth was ready for it, but it can be related that the proposal didn't come. The count just ran in to say that he had bargained for the patent, but was short $20,000 cash. He must raise it within two hours or lose the four millions' profit. He would have money from Rome by next steamer, and if the widow would——

She would and she did. She was happy to give him a check for the amount needed, and the count shrugged his gratitude with both shoulders at once.

Two hours later Mr. Fred Nevins told her over the wire:

"I've got the bounce at that restaurant!"

"Of course you have," was the reply. "Well, what now?"

"I'm in the detective business. Went into it only twenty minutes ago, but have already struck a clew."

"To what?"

"To Count Lugi!"

"What! What! Fred Nevins, I command you to——"

But he shut her off, and she had a night of anxiety. Next forenoon Fred came again. This time he said:

"Hot on the trail!"

"What do you mean?"

"Count Lugi. He got your check cashed, but I hope to get him with the goods on him."

"Fred Nevins, have you gone crazy!"

No answer. He was off again. Two awful hours passed, and then came the ring again.

"Got him at last!"

"Got who?"

"Count Lugi. Took him off the steamer about to sail. Got your $20,000 back for you. He was formerly a barber."

That night the jolly bachelor was taken seriously for once. When he had finished telling his story he said:

"So you can see how bad you need a husband who is in the detective business."

"Y-e-s," was the long-drawn reply.

"Which is me."

"Y-e-s!"

Danger of a Foreign Spouse.

One of the most prominent college professors took unto himself as wife a very charming and highly cultured German lady who is exquisitely particular about all small matters.

Several years ago, just after she had come to live in this country, she was ever on the qui vive for new forms of expression.

One night the professor came home worn out with the troubles of commencement. As he was dressing to attend a very formal receptoin he remarked:

"I wish we weren't going to this shindig."

"Shindig!" repeated his wife; "what is that?"

"It's the sort of thing we're going to tonight," answered her husband.

At the close of a very enjoyable evening the professor heard his wife saying: "O, Mrs. P——, I have so much enjoyed your shindig."—Harper's Magazine.

HOUSEWORK IS A HEAVY BURDEN

The woman who "keeps house" has enough to do when she is in good, sound health, but if she is weak, tired all the time, and suffering from morn to night with an aching back, house-work becomes a heavy burden.

Many women who were afflicted in this way say that Doan's Kidney Pills have made life easier for them.

Women are subject to kidney disease. The clothing they wear, the work they do, the worry and strain of bearing and rearing children, the lack of proper exercise; all tend to it.

Backache, bearing-down pains, headache, dizzy spells, faintness, fits of "blues," and other troubles often thought to be peculiar to the sex, are found frequently in kidney disease. When any one of these ills appears, together with a discolored condition of the kidney secretions, with passages too frequent, scanty or burning, just make up your mind that your kidneys are weak, and be quick to help them.

Doan's Kidney Pills have helped a great many weak women through the trying times when kidney disease means so much added misery. They do not disturb the stomach or bowels and contain no poisonous, dangerous nor habit-forming drugs. Doan's are harmless for children too.

When Kidney Troubles Keep You in Misery Day and Night

"I just can't get up!"

The following case is typical of the cures effected by Doan's Kidney Pills. Grateful testimony is the best evidence.

SAVED HER LIFE.

Made Well After Doctors Gave Up Hope.

Mrs. F. M. Hill, 188 W. 10 St., Waterloo, Iowa, says: "I enjoyed the best of health until the winter of 1905 when I was seized with kidney trouble. I gradually grew worse until I was devoid of all energy and ambition. There was a stinging pain through my kidneys, followed by a dull, grinding ache across my loins. The whites of my eyes changed color and the eyeballs bulged. My hands puffed and my feet became so swollen I could not wear my shoes. The kidney secretions caused great pain and also annoyance by their too frequent passage. I got so I could not eat, lost weight and was gradually growing weaker and weaker, when my father advised Doan's Kidney Pills. I obtained so much benefit from the very first that I continued and by the end of the first week the backaches and headaches had disappeared. I grew steadily better, and was at last completely cured. Doan's Kidney Pills saved my life when I was so sick that I did not care whether I lived or died. The doctors as well as myself had given up hope of my ever getting well. I am so grateful that I cannot recommend Doan's Kidney Pills too highly."

DIDN'T THINK SHE WAS TIRED

Mr. Jinks' Mean Insinuation When Young Lady Dispossessed Him of His Seat.

"That was adding insult to injury," said Representative Mann, the minority leader of the house, apropos of a political squabble. "It reminds me of young Jinks.

"Late one night young Jinks sat in a crowded trolley car, and, when a girl he knew got aboard and stood directly in front of him, he made no sign. His face hidden by his newspaper, he pretended that he didn't know the girl would like to have his seat."

"After awhile she spoke.

"'Good evening, Mr. Jinks.'

"'Why, good evening.'

"'I've been to the Primrose social dance.'

"'Indeed.'

"Then, after a pause, she added:

"'It's a wonder, Mr. Jinks, you wouldn't offer me your seat!'

"Jinks then got up. He was very angry. He said, as he hooked himself to a strap:

"'I thought you wouldn't want it; for, as you said you'd been to a dance, I knew you must have been sitting all the evening.'"

STUDY, ANYHOW.

"Yes, she had to give up her part."

"Was it a case of overstudy?"

"No; understudy."

PIMPLES COVERED HIS BACK

"My troubles began along in the summer in the hottest weather and took the form of small eruptions and itching and a kind of smarting pain. It took me mostly all over my back and kept getting worse until finally my back was covered with a mass of pimples which would burn and itch at night so that I could hardly stand it. This condition kept getting worse and worse until my back was a solid mass of big sores which would break open and run. My underclothing would be a clot of blood.

"I tried various remedies and salves for nearly three years and I was not getting any benefit. It seemed I was in eternal misery and could not sleep on my back or lean on a chair. I was finally given a set of the Cuticura Remedies and inside of two weeks I could see and feel a great relief. I kept on using Cuticura Soap, Ointment and also the Resolvent, and in about three or four months' time my back was nearly cured and I felt like a new being. Now I am in good health and no sign of any skin diseases and I am fully satisfied that Cuticura Remedies are the best ever made for skin diseases. I would not be without them." (Signed) W. A. Armstrong, Corbin, Kan., May 26, 1911. "Why, I dreamt I was a young lady," the child explained.

"That felt pretty good, didn't it?" the mother remarked.

"Yes," was the reply. "But I felt rather fat."

DOINGS AT ANNAPOLIS, THE SEAT OF GOVERNMENT

Defeat of Woman's Suffrage Bill Due Largely to Delegate Warburton.

STATE HOUSE, ANNAPOLIS, March 6, —By far the biggest event of the 1912 session of the Maryland General Assembly thus far has been the fight for Woman's Suffrage, which was finally defeated by an overwhelming vote in the House of Delegates last Thursday night. The contest was a fierce one, and for six or seven hours oratory flowed in a constant stream. The best speech of the occasion, and, indeed, the best of the entire session, was that of Delegate Warburton, of Cecil county, Republican floor leader, who vigorously opposed the bill and eloquently defended the homes of Maryland and the good women of the State against the polluting influence of politics. Mr. Warburton's address was a brilliant oratorical effort, and the crowded chamber, both floor and galleries, responded generously with applause. Mr. Warburton, since Thursday night, has been spoken of as a candidate for the United States Senator from Maryland two years from now, in the event that the Republicans shall control the legislature on joint ballot. He is personally extremely popular, and possesses every qualification of a United States Senator. The vote of the Woman's Suffrage bill was 74 to 18, and it was completely and absolutely disposed of for this session through a motion to reconsider and then a motion to table the motion to reconsider. Of the four Allegany county members present at roll-call, two—Huster and Greene—voted for the bill, and two—Metzger and Duckworth—against it. The Speaker also voted against the measure, and made a short speech on that side by way of explaining his vote at the beginning of the roll-call.

Reading Clerk Humphrey D. Wolfe, of the House, came in for some very pretty, but all duly merited, compliments Thursday last, upon an order recommending that official to the consideration of the National Democratic Convention for reading clerk of that great body. Many Republican members added their tribute of praise on that occasion, among them Republican Floor Leader Warburton, of Cecil county. Mr. Warburton said he was glad to be able to pay this deserved compliment to an efficient officer of the House, notwithstanding that he (Mr. Wolfe) is a Democrat, and that, too, when he (Mr. Warburton) would not participate in the convention nor would he vote for the candidate of that convention.

Metzger, Republican, of Allegany, followed Mr. Warburton, and said that he wanted to endorse what had been said about Mr. Wolfe and to vote for the order, "although I will not go as far as Mr. Warburton has gone," concluded Metzger, and, as the Baltimore Evening Sun said, "the Democrats in the chamber laughed, while the Republicans gasped." Metzger's statement has been construed by those who heard it to mean that he "would not go as far as Mr. Warburton had gone" in saying he did not intend to vote for the candidate named at the Democatic convention in Baltimore.

Delegate Long, of Garrett county, has introduced in the house a bill to increase the assessment of the mines and operators of that county in order to bring the relief fund up to a sufficient amount to meet the demands that are constantly being made upon it. Delegate Long informs the REPUBLICAN'S correspondent that the miners' relief fund is almost constantly in arrears and that it is now at least $2,000 behind in its obligations and that it has been as much as $5,000 short of meeting the demands. This bill does not change the assessment in Allegany county, the fund in Allegany being evidently sufficient at all times, either because of a smaller per centage of accidents or because some of those who are entitled to relief not making requisition upon it. The clause in the law, however, authorizing either county fund to borrow from the other when necessary, is repealed in Mr. Long's new bill, as it was found impracticable and did not work well. So that in the event of conditions being reversed and Garrett county's fund having a surplus and Allegany's a deficit Garrett county's fund need not lend any of its balances to the other fund. The rate per month for each employee in Garrett county's mines under the new law will be 38 cents, and the same amount upon the operator. The rate in Allegany county is left the same—27 cents.

Senator Speicher, of Garrett county, has introduced a bill in the Senate which will do much toward the progress and advancement of his section of the State. It incorporates an electric railway company and gives them the right to build an electric railway through those sections which needs developing and building up, and it will also prove a lucrative territory for the railway company. The incorporators are named in the bill as G. J. Gnagey, Henry M. Speicher, W. Ravenscroft, Francis J. Schaub and James Fluegel.

Section 3 of the bill provides for the construction and operation of an electric railway "from Oakland, in Garrett county, to Mountain Lake Park, Deer Park, Thayerville, Hoyes, Accident, Grantville, and Frostburg, Maryland. Also from Accident to Friendsville, and from Grantsville to the Pennsylvania State line along the Public Road; thence in the State of Pennsylvania to such points as the Directors may determine."

Senator Speicher gives the assurance that the work of constructing an electric railway under this charter will follow speedily the enactment of this bill, and that capital is already waiting to be put into the enterprise as soon as the preliminaries shall have been completed. It will become a part of the Cumberland and Westernport Electric Railway system when built, insofar as a through line through the territory mentioned in the charter goes, not, however, necessarily a syndicate, but as separate operating companies with mutual connections. The great importance of this vast enterprise can scarcely be fully appreciated before the actual results have been definitely accomplished.

Senator Zihlman has introduced a bill in the Senate which will limit the telephone company rates to a maximum charge of $1.50 per month for residence phones and $2 per month for public offices and business places in Allegany county. This will be appreciated by telephone subscribers in Allegany county, who might be subjected to increased rates through various pretexts since the telephone system is controlled now by one concern. While the Public Service Commission can, in a way, prevent the telephone company from increasing rates for service in ordinary cases, there are many ways, for instance, by supplying private lines instead of two, three or four party lines, and other excuses, in which the rates could be increased, and also in the event some time of the Public Service Commission being legislated out of office, or the law under which it works being amended or new ones being enacted. It is a precaution which it is well to provide.

There is pending in the House of Delegates a tiny, innocent looking, almost insignificantly unimportant bill, which, if allowed to pass will operate disastrously to many industries of the state and those communities which depend upon these industries in consequence. Garrett county, as Allegany, where coal mining is an important medium of employment and revenue, together with other and varied industries, is particularly interested in the defeat of this measure. It is known as the "Infant Eight-Hour-Day Bill," and was introduced on January 23, less than three weeks after the beginning of the 1912 session, and it is now in the hands of the Committee on Labor to which it was referred. This bill makes it an offense punishable by "a fine of not more than one hundred dollars for each and every violation," for any employer or corporation to "permit or require any person under twenty-one years of age in his employ or service to work or remain on duty more than eight hours in any one day." Everybody knows that many hundreds of young men from sixteen to twenty years of age are employed in the coal mines of both counties, and they know that these young men are physically more able to work in the mines as the support of the family than the father and older members of the household, and that they are in many instances the mainstay and support of the families of the counties most thrifty and prosperous citizens. It is a long established fact that because of the character of the work of coal mining the limiting of a work day to eight hours is absolutely impracticable and impossible, some miners being able to load four, five or six tons of coal in eight hours, whereas, other miners may require ten to twelve hours to load as much, owing to conditions within the mine with respect to timbering, the difficulty encountered in some cases in digging a "hard place," etc., so that an eight-hour day where a definite amount of coal is required to be gotten out would be unsatisfactory to the miners as well as to the operator. Yet, should this bill pass, the mine owners will be compelled either to put the pay of their employes on an eight-hour system and continue the old system with reference to others, or adopt the only alternative—that of discharging all these young men who have not yet reached the age of twenty-one years, whatever their stature or physical ability may be. And what is true of coal mining is equally true of every other industry in which young men or girls and young women under twenty-one years of age are employed—saleshadies, stenographers and office helps of every kind. It is of the utmost importance, therefore, that this bill be either smothered in committee, killed on the floor or have Allegany and Garrett counties exempted from its provisions. All the members from Allegany and Garrett in both House and Senate will keep a close watch on this iniquitous measure.

The Senate non-concurring in the House's message to adjourn Thursday night until Monday night, the House held a night session Thursday, and after defeating the Woman's Suffrage bill adjourned until five minutes after midnight, at which time they reconvened and after being in session five minutes adjourned at 12.10 until Monday night. The Senate did not adjourn until Friday at 12.30 in the afternoon.

A number of the members of the House visited the Springfield Asylum at Sykesville Friday, among them being Delegates Lawton and Weimer, of Garrett, and Chairman Huster, of Allegany county.

Delegate Long, of Garrett county, has been suffering considerably from a series of boils on his neck, and while not disabling him from House duty, he suffers great pain and is clearly unwell from the effects.

Delegate Lawton's bill changing the time of meeting of the county commissioners for Garrett county from quarterly to monthly, passed the House late Thursday evening. It now goes to the Senate.

Delegate Herpick Wednesday introduced a bill providing for the erection of poles and flags on public school buildings in Allegany county.

The Garrett county delegation at Monday night's session reported favorably the Garrett county School bill, amending it to keep the schools open eight instead of nine months, as was at first proposed, and the bill was ordered to be engrossed for third reading and final passage.

Delegate Metzger, of Allegany, introduced a bill providing that all theatres or places of amusement in which moving picture machines are operated shall have a safe exit for every one hundred and fifty people allowed in said place of amusement; that no more tickets shall be sold and no more people shall be admitted than seats are provided and that the picture machine shall be enclosed in fire-proof steel boxes. It also prohibits the placing of chairs or other obstructions in the aisles, the allowing of a person or persons to stand in the aisles, and to keep and maintain in the middle of said theatre or place of amusement an aisle at least three feet in width.

Delegate Weimer's bill dividing district No. 8 in Garrett county into two voting precincts, was read third time and passed Monday night.

OVER-INDULGENCE KILLS SERENADER.

Young Man's Sudden Death Due to Intoxicants.

Considerable excitement and horror prevailed at Keyser's Ridge Saturday night over the sudden death of Frank Augustine, a well know man of that community. According to a custom prevalent at that place, the young men of the neighborhood gathered together on Saturday night to serenade some newcomers who had recently moved into the neighborhood. Mr. Augustine was among the number, apparently in the best of health and spirits. The crowd proceeded to the home of Clarence Ringley, but had only been gone a few hours until they returned bearing the young man, a corpse. The exact circumstances of his death could not be learned, but a physician's verdict was that death was caused by an over-indulgence of alcoholic stimulants which resulted in heart failure. A tragic ending to an evening of fun. Deceased was born on May 3, 1872, and was aged 39 years, 9 months and 29 days. He was a son of Mr. and Mrs Jeremiah Augustine and was unmarried. Besides his parents he is survived by one brother W. H. Augustine, of Keyser's Ridge, and three sisters—Mrs. Charles Hoffmyer of Akron, Ohio, Mrs. Harry Holliday, of the Cove, and Miss Anna, at home. His parents and relatives are all well known and highly respected in the community, and the deepest sympathy is felt for them in their bereavement. Interment was made at Addison on Tuesday morning.

BALTIMORE NOT OPPOSED TO LOCAL OPTION.

Tremendous Meeting in the City so Indicated.

At the greatest meeting the Anti-Saloon League has ever held it was shown on Sunday that Baltimore City wants the right to vote on the liquor question. It was a meeting of Christain voters called to protest against the misrepresentation of the city by the action of the so-called meeting of trades bodies. Although the meeting was for men only the Lyric was filled to the roof and not all of them could get in.

Mr. John T. Stone presented an address to the Legislature which exposed the untruthfulness of the memorial adopted by the meeting called by the Board of Trade and appealed to the counties which had secured the right to vote on the liquor question with the cooperation of the temperance people to re-pay the debt by simply giving the city the right to express.

Superintendent Anderson reported that he has in his possession letters from twelve of the fifteen bodies that make up the Board of Trade stating that the meeting called in opposition to the bill did not represent them and that they have taken no action either for or against the bill. Of the other three, one is the Liquor Dealers Association and one headed by an appointee of Mayor Preston and the city ring was not heard from.

Ringing short addresses were made by leading pastors and laymen, representing eight different denominations. In determination tempered with good nature, and representative character, the meeting has never been excelled in Baltimore. Mr. Cochran was given an ovation when introduced, and the meeting expressed its determination to continue the fight.

Taken to Johns Hopkins Hospital.

Miss Lucille Hilleary, daughter of Mrs. Charles E. Hilleary, was taken to Johns Hopkins Hospital in Baltimore Tuesday by Dr. Henry W. McComas, where the young lady will be treated for neuritis, with which she has been suffering for some time.

We Won't Give Him Up.

Who will be the superintendent of the public schools of Garrett county, is the question worrying the minds of several politicians. Prof. Fank Rathbun is frequently mentioned for the position, if West Virginia would give him up.—Mountain Democrat, Oakland, Md.

Prof. Rathbun mentioned above for county superintendent of Garrett county, Md., is the superintendent of the Piedmont District Public schools and also the principal of the Piedmont High School. Prof. Rathbun is well qualified for the position but we do not care to see him leave Piedmont and we positively refuse to give him up.—Piedmont Independent.

Lessons Of The Transfiguration

Matthew 17:2.

By
C. W. HUDSON, Th.D.,
Pastor Loch Lynn Heights
Baptist Church
Loch Lynn Heights, Md.

The transfiguration of Jesus was one of the most notable events of his life on Earth. It must be remembered that the disciples had no conception of the divinity of Jesus in their first acquaintance with him. They looked upon him as being a man like the prophets of old, or like themselves. They had no idea that he was in fact both God and man, and that he was just as much God when he was on earth as he was before his incarnation. It took three years and a half of personal teaching and a view of him ascending to his Father, and the gift of the Holy Spirit to convince them that the man Christ Jesus was very God. The event recorded in our lesson is one of the object lessons which Jesus gave to impress this fact on their minds. It was, perhaps, one of those beautiful days in the spring when Galilee looks like a flower garden. Lilies and fields of flowers are blooming everywhere and all the air is aquiver with the songs of the birds when Jesus said to three disciples who seemed nearest to his heart, Peter, James and John, "Come, let us go up into the mountain a while to pray." They quietly departed from the others and wended their way to a secluded recess in the forest that clothed the mountain. and, as was their custom, the disciples sat down on the green turf to rest while Jesus went a little ways from them and fell on his knees in prayer. While he prayed the sun sank behind the distant horizon and one by one the stars peeped forth from the azure sky and the moonlight flooded the scene. As Jesus remained quiet in communion with his Father the fatigues of the day and the balminess of the early night caused drowsiness to steal over the waiting disciples until they slumbered. Suddenly they were aroused by the sound of voices and looking up they were filled with amazement. All the mountain to seemed to be filled with a blaze of glory. As the limpid moonlight casts the long shadows of the trees across the open space in the forest it seemed to fade before a greater brilliancy that encircled Jesus as he stood looking with rapt attention up into heaven. In a moment two men stood by his side. They two were clothed in garments of beauty and splendor. A brilliant white light seemed to radiate from all three, and the face of Jesus was changed as they had never seen it. The glory of the divine was upon him and they fell on their faces before him in fear and awe. Then a voice, which ages before, had spoken out of the lightnings and thunders of Sinai was heard saying, This is my beloved Son, hear Him. Before the sound of the Voice they fell as men dead and when they dared again to look up they saw Jesus standing alone and appearing as they had always known him.

Some say that Jesus laid aside his divinity when he came to the earth and became a man only and that his divinity was restored to him at the resurrection. Some also say that this vision of the transfiguration was not a reality, but something which the disciples fancied they saw. This is a fulfillment of the prophecy in Second Peter 2:1, "Among you also there shall be false teachers, who shall privily bring destructive heresies." Peter says in 2nd Peter 1:16-18, "We did not follow cunningly devised fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but we were eye witnesses of his majesty. For he received from God the Father honer and Glory, when there was borne such a voice to him by the Majestic Glory, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased: and this voice we ourselves heard borne out of heaven, when we were with him in the Holy mount." Here we have incontestible proof that he was divine while he was upon earth, for the voice of the Father bore testimony to that fact when He said: This is my beloved Son in whom I am pleased: hear ye him. He who was the son of God, begotten of the Spirit, as Jesus was, could be no other than divine at all times. He himself said: I and my Father are one. If he and his Father were one, remember, this was spoken while he was upon the earth, it necessarily implied that if Jesus were a man only, God was only a man. I think none are willing to make that assertion; or it implied that if the Father were divine so also was the Son.

There are also some who deny the resurrection of the body of our Lord on the gound that a physical body did not have the power of changing its form or appearance as the resurrection body of Jesus is said to have done. Nothing is said in the New Testament about the appearance of the body of Jesus being changed other than he appeared to Mary as a gardener, or rather that she thought he was the gardener, and that he appeared in another form to two disciples on their way to Emmaus. Concerning this Luke 24.16 says, Their eyes were holden that they should not know him. That is, not expecting to see him they did not recognize him, or that through some interposition of God they did not recognize him. If his appearance had been changed it was entirely possible, as we have seen by the fact of his appearance being changed to that he had with the Father before the incarnation and then being changed back to the usual form which he had while on earth.

There is also another fact of tremendous importance proven to be true at his transfiguration. It has always been contended by the orthodox believers in God's words that when the righteous die that their spirits do not die with their bodies, but live on in a separate existence apart from their bodies until the resurrection, but there are some who say that the soul dies with the body and lies in the grave with it until the resurrection, except in the case of a chosen few who since 1878 are changed at the burial of the body and are caught up to meet the Lord in the air. None of the Old Testament Prophets or saints have a part in this resurrection according to their theory. This idea is proven to be erroneous by the appearing of Moses and Elijah with Jesus at his transfiguration. We have no record of Elijah death, but that he was caught up by a whirlwind into heaven; but the Scriptures tell us that Moses died and was buried in the land of Moab over against Beth-peor. His body died, but his soul or spirit must have remained alive, for he was present and carried on a conversation with our Lord about his death which he was to accomplish at Jerusalem. That which was dead and non-existent could not be seen and heard to speak. The disciples could not be said to have seen a vision of something that was unreal, for such an assertion would charge God with deception. Besides this the disciples carried on a conversation with Jesus while Moses and Elijah were present about preparing three tabernacles for them that they might remain. Jesus said, Whosoever liveth and believeth on me shall never die. Moses and Elijah lived and believed and did not die, and it is directly contrary to God's Word to say that a christian who lives and believes shall die. They cannot die, for their lives are bound up in the bundle of life with God. Death hath been robbed of its sting in reference to the soul, and the grave will be robbed of its victory over the body when the trumpet of the Lord shall sound and time shall be no more.

The transfiguration of Jesus also gives us some idea of the glory that awaits us when we shall awake in his likeness. We sorrow and grieve here because of the infirmities of the flesh, but there no sorrow or grief will be known. As we walk here before men we have no beauty or comeliness that they should desire us, but we shall be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye. This mortal shall put on immortality and this corruptible shall put on incorruption when we stand in the presence of the King and behold Him in His glory. God grant that all of us may be changed from glory unto glory until we shall stand in the beauty of His likeness, for we shall be like Him when we see Him as He is.

MANUFACTURE OF MAPLE SUGAR

Great Quanitties Made in Somerset Co., Pa., and Garrett Co., Md.

The Meyersdale Republican contains a prettily illustrated article by L. J. Beachy on maple sugar making in Somerset county, Pa., and Garrett county, Md. Mr. Beachy says:

Springtime with maple sugar making will soon again be upon us. Here we live on a knoll in the Casselman valley where I can see the sun set over old Negro Mountain and at the same time may see it cast blood shadows on Meadow Mountain; in a region where there is more maple sugar made within the radius of miles than any other section of equal area in the world. It is in Garrett county, Maryland, with the adjoining county of Somerset in Pennsylvania.

Elijah Livengood, "The Sugar King," is the largest producer and sets four thousand keelers, (vessels for catching sap), of which one thousand are in Maryland, the balance in Pennsylvania. He sets 2,400 on the east side of the Casselman river and 1,600 on the west side. His largest gathering of maple sap in one day last year was 408 barrels. The whole amount of water or sap by his two camps was 5,000 barrels for the season.

To those who are not acquainted with maple sugar making, let me say, the water or sap as it is often called, from which maple sugar is made is procured from the sugar maples. The trees are natives of this section and grow like other large forest trees. There are two species—the red and white. The red-flowering or scarlet maple is the first tree to bloom in the spring in North America and gives the honey bees the first opportunity to gather honey and pollen after their long winter sleep.

It is a beautiful sight in summer to behold a grove of those trees waving their plumelike branches like true soldiers with palms of victory. They are generally large in this section, and when the season opens in February the farmer goes from tree to tree with a three-eighth inch augur and bores holes in the trees 2 or 3 feet from the ground and not deeper than the white wood. At this day the keelers are hung on a wire girding the tree or on the modern patent iron or tin spiles driven into the holes the farmer has bored. Spiles are also made of elder sticks; in either case the spiles convey the sap from the tree to the keelers. Tin keelers that are used a good deal at this day are improvement over wooden ones which often dry out so as to leak out as fast as the tree leaks in, and are more difficult to keep clean.

The water does not run out as may be supposed, but on a favorable day it drops as fast as one can hurriedly count. A bright day with a temperature of 45 to 60 degrees or more, with a southern wind, after frosty nights, tends to make the sap flow freely. A thawing night allows the trees to drop all night, and overflowing vessels next morning means a very busy day from daylight till long after dark to the farmer. When the temperature goes to freezing point the trees soon stop dropping, and when the weather gets warm enough to start buds and bloom on the trees the season is over.

A large tub or cask which holds from 3 to 6 barrels is used for gathering the water from the trees in the groves and for hauling to camp. The larger camps may employ three or four of these hauling tubs. Usually there is a good deal of rain during the sugar season and during a big run those that gather must needs be out in most disagreeable weather all day.

When a gatherer gets to camp with a load he pulls a plug from his tub that lets the sap run out into a spout leading into the camp into a large tank halding many barrels. From the tank a stream of sap is allowed to constantly flow by way of a siphon into a monster boiling pan over a furnace which converts the sap into maple syrup. Although a stream of cold sap is constantly running into the pan, it keeps on wildly boiling if the furnace is kept burning at its best. One hundred barrels must be boiled down to perhaps 50 gallons.

The modern "Miller pan" allows you to tap off boiling syrup at one end of the pan, every hour or so, while cold sap is running in at the other end.

The man that does the boiling must use care lest the syrup gets too thick, turn into wax, burn and at last strike a blaze in the pan. The syrup must not be too thick when removed from the pan, for it must be allowed to settle and cool in tubs before "stiring off" into sugar. The settlings go to the bottom of the tubs, and are a deposit of lime or what not found in the purest sugar water.

As will be noticed, Mr. Livengood gathered a barrel of water from each keeler during the last year season, and most of the smaller producers did as well or better. Four to six gallons of water or sap produce a pound of sugar, or as usually reckoned, 4 to 6 pounds of sugar to a barrel of water. Trees growing on low lands produce more water but do not yield as much sugar per barrell of water as do those growing on uplands.

After the syrup has settled for 24 or more hours and crumb or cake sugar is wanted the syrup is tapped from the tubs and from 4 to 6 gallons put into a large iron kettle over a smaller furnace and again boiled to a thicker consistency until it tests rightly by a thermometer or by dropping a small portion of the boiling stuff from the paddle into a cup of cold water. When the waxy syrup breaks in the cold water it is high time to hustle the kettle from the furnace, lest it burn, after which it is briskly stirred until it forms into crumb sugar. Before it is boiled to the breaking point there is danger of the kettle boiling over and one must be on the watch when it foams up to put into the kettle a teaspoonful of butter or lard to take the foaming seething mass down.

Last season the writer gathered a report from over half of the producers and their produce in this section within a radius of about four miles. If all had reported, without a doubt the product would have reached three hundred thousand pounds. The crop was sold at 10c a pound, the highest price for ten years.

Lee Memorial Bengali Mission, Calcutta.

By courtesy of the Pittsburg Christian Advocate, the official organ of the West Virginia Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church, we reproduce above an excellent engraving show the Lee Memorial Bengali Mission, at Calcutta, India, established and built by the untiring efforts of Dr. and Mrs. Joseph Lee, well known in this sections of the country, they having visited the Park on several occasions where they have made many excellent friends. Much credit for the magnificent building above pictured is due to the work of Mrs Fannie L. Sperry, recently of the Park, but now a resident of Harper's Ferry, W. Va., Mrs. Sperry occupying at present, as she has for a number of years past, the responsible position of Home Secretary of the Mission, to which office she has devoted much of her time and no little labor.

Of the Mission and the success attending Dr. and Mrs. Lee, the Advocate says:

"Few persons have realized the extent of this Christian enterprise, or the beneficence of the work being accomplished there by Doctor and Mrs. Lee. Below we print a word of greeting from Brother Lee which we pass along, and after that a paragraph from the Indian Witness of recent date, containing a commendation which the friends of the Lees in this part of the world will read with pleasure.

"'We are all well, in God's mercy. There are terrible scourges of cholera in the villages about us, and not a little in the city. But we and our workers are all safe. The king [George] has come and gone. His visit has, I feel sure, proved a blessing to India. He was graciously received by all classes. The illumination of the city, the fireworks in his honor, and the reception and farewell pageants were worthy of such an empire, and could hardly be excelled. I never expect to see the like of it until I see the King is in his beauty.'

"The Indian Witness has this to say of the work of the Lees: 'Sir Robert Laidlaw, acting as chairman of a missionary meeting recently, made the following reference to the Lee Memorial Mission, Calcutta. The report says: He wanted to say a few words about a piece of missionary work which he had the pleasure of observing for some years in India. In was one of the finest piece of missionary work he knew. About ten or fifteen years ago a lady and her husband started an orphanage in Calcutta. He had watched the progress of their work for some years, and he remembered, some eight or nine years ago, when there was a very severe famine in the north of India, that those people went into the famine district and rescued about one hundred children, who would have otherwise have been left by the wayside to perish and to be eaten up by wild animals. They were brought down to Calcutta, where they were educated and taught a knowledge of the Savior. He had taken an interest in those children. He saw them again some months ago, and was surprised to see the change in their condition. The change was most remarkable, not only in their physical condition, but in their moral and intellectual condition as well, and he could not help thinking that it was one of the best justifications they could ses anywhere of that kind of missionary effort. Instead of being left to perish, those children were among those who had been brought up and taught the way of life. It is just a sample of what their missionaries are doing in many parts of the world."

COUNTRY LIFE COMMISSION

(Special Correspondence of The Republican.)

STATE HOUSE, ANNAPOLIS, MD., Mar. 12.—A movement of much interest to the farmers and country people of all Maryland was started here last week, when the "Country Life Commission" plan was explained to the Agricultural Conference Committee of the Maryland Legislature, and very many others who are active in the work. The Agricultural Conference Committee is the organization composed of all the farmer members of the General Assembly who have banded themselves together for the purposes of furthering legislation and every other good thing having for its purpose the betterment and improvement of the farmers and their families everywhere in the State. Those gentlemen—and some ladies, too—who are conspicuous in the "County Life Commission" had asked this Agricultural Conference Commission to cooperate with them and they came to Annapolis last Thursdays afternon to explain the plan and the objects and benefits to the rural residents it was hoped to accomplish. A bill asking the State to appropriate probably $10,000 to $15,000 a year to the work, and authorizing the Governor to appoint the personnel of the Commission, is to be introduced, and Mr. Daniel Henry, of Baltimore, who is preparing the measure, was one of the speakers who outlined the plan to the Agricultural Committee and the large number of other members of the Legislature who were present.

Several States have already adopted the "Country Life Commission" plan and its successful operation incites the promoters to extend it to all the agricultural states. It is claimed by Hon. W. M. Hays, of Washington, Assistant Secretary of Agricultural, who was one of the speakers, that organization in the open country is needed. It is contended by the promoters of the "Country Life Commission" that the rural residents are too isolated, too far apart from one another, that the country life is too lonely and monotonous and women are dissatisfied and children will not remain on the farms as they grow older. It is proposed to lay the country sections out and divide into centres; instead of having several one-room school houses have one large graded school with a hundred or several hundred pupils and competent teachers; instead of having several modest little churches, with a dozen or so members of the congregation and a poorly paid and indifferent pastor, to have one large church made up of all denominations, one large and influential congregation and a minister who comes from among the best to be had; and so on, with the stores and everything else that goes to make up the social and business life of the country people. To form societies and clubs; then to federate those and bring them all together, for pleasure and profit, pastime and business.

The farmer is at a decided disadvantage when dealing with organized interests because he is unorganized, and this plan will equip him by knowledge and experience to meet the other fellow upon an equal basis to transact his business and to know what is going on all the time in the world in which he moves.

These Commissioners, which the proposed bill requires the Governor to appoint, will receive no salary and they will be selected with the purpose of making the board nonpartisan. The money to be appropriated will be spent to make surveys, maintain head quarters, clerical force and such other necessary expenses as may be deemed wise and expedient. It is proposed to bring these country centers with their people closer together in social and business relations and cooperation, and thus, as assistant Secretary Hayes said, "create an environment that will make it attractive for our women and children in this day and age." Prof. B. H. Crocheron, principal of the Agricultural High School of Baltimore county, another speaker, said, "Put the man on the farm land and make his life agreeable and the woman's life happier." Mrs. Benj. Corbran, Jr., of Baltimore, president of the State Federation of Women's Clubs, endorsed the proposition and pledged the support of the Women's Clubs of Maryland to its interests. It was a large and enthusiastic gathering, and the project appeals strongly to the members of the Legislature. The proposed bill is expected to be introduced some time this week. It is one of the most important matters to the farmers and country people of the State taken up by the Legislature this session.

Interesting Facts About Coal.

This country has enough coal to last for a while. There is an estimated supply of 3,135,708,000,000,000 tons, or to make these absolutely non-understandable figures a little more comprehensible, a trifle over three million million tons in the ground waiting to be dug out.

Of this colossal quantity North Dakota is credited with having the most—one-half million million tons.

Of the Eastern States, West Virginia leads with 230,389,000 tons. Pennsylvania, famous for a century in coal, in these days, lags far behind with 119,000,000 tons. Alongside of the vast deposits of the Far West this eastern supply is insignificant.

Such vast resources of coal make the reader think. And yet, even with these imposing figures before one, the supply is by no means inexhaustible. It would be for any other country than America, but here by liberal leaps and bounds and persistent demands of commerce that cannot be denied, there is no question that the American people are going to need more coal than appears in sight some day, at least.

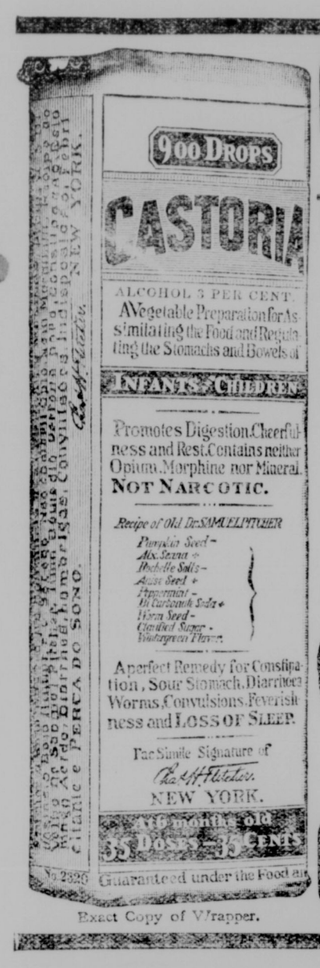
Of course there is no need for present worriment. The consumption in this country is 414,000,000 tons a year, something like 1,250,000 tons a day, and at that rate the coal now known to be in the bowels of the earth will last a matter of 5,000 years.

The consumption of coal, it is an interesting and notable fact, has increased more rapidly than almost any other commodity. There could be no more signal recognition of America's commercial activities and its industrial development.

Five years ago only approximately half the coal was used that is sold today. A consumption that doubles in five years is extraordinary and full of interest.

How was coal discovered in America? It is probably a story that very few people know. Here is one author's version of it:

"In 1791 a hnnter named Philip Ginther lived on the eastern slopes of the mountains which are drained by the Lehigh river. Late one afternoon he found himself at the summit of Sharp Mountain.



"A storm was coming up and Ginther broke into a run, for his home was some distance away. Stumbling over the roots of a fallen tree, he kicked up a big black stone and noticed that the soil in which the tree had grown was mingled with similar specimens of an unusual formation.

"Now Ginther had heard that there was 'stone coal' on the mountains, so he picked up the stumbling-block which had checked his course, carried it home and gave it to Col. Jacob Weiss, who lived near the site of the present Mauch Chnnk."

There was no way to dispose of the new fuel, however. Wood was still plentifnl and no one wated the "black diamond." Finally it was floated in "arks" down to Philadelphia and then its owners sadly flound that they conld not get it to burn. A few years later men were actually arrested in Philadelphia for selling "stones" that would not burn. It was not until some one discovered the principle of a draft that coal could be used at all. It did not get a real start as a commodity until 1830.

Modern mine equipment has been remarkable. Special electrical and mechanical apparatus has been devised that is impressive and valuable from both economic and humanitarian standpoints. The mules and cables of yesterday are replaced by electric, compressed air and steam locomotives, which handle a far greater tonnage than would be possible otherwise. Mines now have underground hospital and hospital cars. There are real "safety lamps," ignited before the miner enters the mine, and locked by a powerful magnet so affectively that it cannot be opened.—Frostburg Mining Journal.

GAME IN THE PANAMA CANAL ZONE

Description of A Hunt Furnished The Republican by a Friend.

The following is a communication written a relative by Mr. L. A. Bonner, a musician in the United States Army who is attached to the command now stationed at Las Cascades, Panama, and is descriptive of a hunt for big game in the Panama country:

The New York boat arrived last week with your letter, but I did not get it until yesterday, as I have been out hunting since last Friday, seeing one fine time and lots of country. I was miles into the interior among the San Blas Indians. They are a treacherous people and no white man is welcome among them. Their main villages are about fifty miles southwest of here and no white man, I am told, has ever lived to come back from so far inland and from their regular hunting grounds. I had no idea of going there, or as close as I did, when I started, but the hunting was good and we had Indian guides so were comparatively safe. The guides stayed with us and brought us back after nearly a week of fine hunting along the streams and water courses, in khikurkas, or boats about twenty feet long hewn from mahogany trees. They travel very fast.

There were only two of us, myself and a man named Hefner, whose home is near Arnold, W. Va., and who is going home tomorrow. He wanted to go hunting before he went back to the States, and I went with him. A government employe, a civil engineer, who knows the country, furnished us with a guide apiece and boats, and we left Gatun lake Friday morning about sunrise and paddled up stream all that day. We killed several ducks and a few small alligators. About eight o'clock we landed an a small round knoll about fifty feet high, and pitched our tents while the guides got supper. They could cook fine, and served a three course meal that was not surpassed by any hotel on the Isthmus. The mosquitos soon found us out and we had to don our leather gloves and mosquito bars or suffer intense pain from their remarkably long bills. After supper we took a plunge in the river and went to bed.

I was nearly asleep twice but the dogs kept making a lot of racket and finally the guides came in and said, "Big cat; him come see." We grabbed our guns and started for the door but we never got there that night. Of all the unearthly and blood-curdling yells I ever heard! Such a piercing yell that promised fair to burst our ear drums at first and dying away into a low rumbling growl that apparently shook the ground with its vibrations and I know that it shook my nerves and I could feel my hair standing on end. All right, you may laugh if you wish, but I did not, neither then nor the rest of the night nor sleep either, and by the steel gray dawn next morning we found the tracks of a great "tiger cat." The guides said he was "heap big, much whopper." We followed his trail through the soft mud and weeds all forenoon but never overtook him. Coming back to camp we killed two small wild pigs and a wild turkey and a back load of squirrels.

After dinner and a good long rest we untied the dogs again and started for the swamps to hunt tapir. We found a fresh trail after an hour or so and soon had it traveling through the jungle like a freight train. We clambered through and over cactus thickets and around swamps until almost dark and was starting home along a deer trail when the dogs ran it right up the trail. We got out of its way and it went out of sight into the creek, and then came back to within a few feet of us again before we could kill it. It weighed about 1000 pounds. We skinned it, cut a few tenderloin steaks and came on into camp, tired, hungry, half stripped of our clothing, and face and hands swollen from mosquito bites, to find our camp inhabited by a million—more or less—army ants, diligently carrying away our provisions, and when we tried to prevent them they began on us. We had to move our tent across the stream that night.

The rest of the time put in along the small water courses for deer and gators and succeeded in capturing a sixteen foot gator by shooting its head almost off with our pistols.

Monday morning we lost our best dog among a drove of hogs and had to turn our heads to avoid seeing him devoured alive by twenty or more roaring, charging and maddened wild boars. It would have been as much as our lives were worth to shoot one or let them know where we were. It was mid-afternoon before I chanced a shot at anything again, although the white faced monkeys would jabber from the tree tops and the squirrel and other small game were plentiful.

When we came out on the main stream again we saw a number of naked Indians in khikurkas gathering bananas and oranges along the banks. Evidently there was a village close for there were a number of children and squaws staring at us from the bushes. Each buck carried a long steel bladed knife called a "Machet," and looked very sullen at us. They are a short necked, broad shouldered and very strong looking people with dark beady eyes and long black hair.

No, I'm not going hunting for anything in that country again and have had about all the alligator scraps I care about for awhile.

The most peculiar animals of all that are down here are the ants and the great ant eaters. I have never seen the latter but have seen its effects and its hide. There is an ant here that grows mushrooms. They will build long roads through the jungles, carry leaves along these roads and pile them in one big pile to decay. This makes a hot bed for the mushrooms. They live on them almost entirely.

Perhaps next time I write I will be able to tell you more about the many different kinds of animals here such as the puma, mountain lion, sloth, and all the other kinds, both from North and South America. It appears to be a happy medium between the two for everything, man as well as animals.

There is about twenty five feet of water in the canal or in the artificial lake, but it will take perhaps a year to fill it full and it will drive all the game out of the low lands for miles around, and with a good dog one could wish no better hunting. But dogs are hard to get down here. No one wants to sell and about the only chance is to ship one from the states, which means $1 per day from Newport News and express to there from the kennels.

I have not had a chance to investigate the effects of the canal on the timber business but there will be very little building here unless at Panama and Colon, the two harbors.

DON'T KNOCK.

Every man who don't think his town is one of the very best to live in ought to get out of it and go to a better one. Every far-sighted and enterprising citizen will have a good word for his town and boost it whenever and wherever he has an opportunity. If it is not just what he thinks it ought to be, his duty is to work for its improvement instead of "Knocking" on it at every turn in the road, and "Knocking" on any business institution or enterprise in the town or community is in effect "Kicking" against the town and community and everybody in it.

This is so far the reason that every dollar legitimately made and spent in a community is a help to that community and what is of benefit to the community is a benefit to each individual of which it is composed, especially is that true of the fellow who looks to the public for his patronage and support. No greater public benefactor lives than a reasonably conservative booster and no worse enemy to society and progress can be found than the habitual "thumper."

THE DEATH RECORD.

CAPTAIN JESSE MCNEILL.

Word has been received here from Mahomet, Ill., of the death in that place on Monday of last of Capt. Jesse McNeill, commander of the famous McNeill's Rangers during the Civil War and who was well known in this section during the war. He succeeded his father, Capt. J. Hanson McNeill, as commander of the Rangers, and was personally known to many men throughout this section.

In the fall of 1863 Captain McNeill led the party of about a dozen Rangers who secretly entered Cumberland and captured the federal generals, Crook and Kelley, taking these officers from the midst of about 10,000 sleeping Union soldiers.

GEORGE W. SHAW.

At his home in Grantsvile, Garrett county, Monday, March 4, 1912, Mr. Geoge W. Shaw, aged 84 years, after years of suffering with Bright's disease. Mr. Shaw was born July 7, 1827, in Barton, Allegany county, and on the 25th of September, 1851, Miss Harriet Potter, a leading society lady of Westernport, became his wife. About four years ago the latter died. Most of their long and happy married life was spent upon their farm, near Grantsville, where they were held in high esteem by many who knew them. Three daughters and three sons are bereaved. Funeral and interment at Grantsville Thursday afternoon.

MOSES WENSEL.

Mr. Moses Wensel, of near Oakland, died at his home Monday morning at an early hour after several weeks of intense suffering. He was born in Bedford county, Pa., on May 22, 1843. For three years during the troublous times of the 60's he was a member of the 22d Pa. Cavalry and was engaged with his troop in more than twenty battles, notable among them being those of Gettysburg and Antietam. Shortly after the war Mr. Wensel came to Garrett county, where he married Miss Haun. To the couple was born six children—two daughters and four sons—who, with Mrs. Wensel survive the husband and father. Mr. Wensel's funeral took place Wednesday morning from his late home with interment in the Lower graveyard, the services being conducted by Rev. E. Manges. pastor of St. Mark's Ev. Lutheran church, of which Mr. Wensel was a member.

Married.

Mr. and Mrs. B. C. Feather announce the marriage of their sister
Mattie O. Garlits
to
John N. Howie
at their home at Oakland, Maryland,
Wednesday, March thirteenth, nineteen hundred twelve.

The marriage ceremony was performed by the Rev. J. M. Davis, in the presence of the immediate friends of the family. The bride is an efficient employe of the Western Union Telegraph Co. at Cumberland, and is well known here, where she has many friends. The groom is a second division engineer of the Baltimore and Ohio R. R. Co., and is the son of an aged Confederate Captain of Monroe, North Carolina.

After a visit to the eastern cities, Mr. and Mrs. Howie will reside in Cumberland.

Heirs Of Senator Speicher.

Sunday's Baltimore Sun had the following to say of the five interesting sons of Senator Harvey J. Speicher, who, with Mrs. Speicher, spent the week-end at Annapolis:

Senator and Mrs. Speicher of Garrett county, had their five little boys in the Senate chamber after the session Friday night. The family received general congratulations and all the Senators and many others came forward to pay their respects. The five boys were seated in a row on a sofa. They were constantly requested to arise and make "stair steps." They were evidently well used to this and they stand in perfect alignment like well-drilled soldiers. Their ages are 6, 8, 10, 12, and 14 respectively and their height is in exact proportion.

While this interesting exhibition was going on, a little newsboy about 10 years of age was standing near looking on with an air of cynical superiority. He said in his family there had been 16 of them, eight girls and eight boys. They lived in St. Mary's county and a short time ago moved to Annapolis. The little newsboy did not consider a family of five worth talking about.

DOINGS AT ANNAPOLIS, THE SEAT OF GOVERNMENT

Less Than Three Weeks of Session Remain and Little Accomplished.

STATE HOUSE, ANNAPOLIS, March 13. —With less than three weeks yet before them the members of the General Assembly of 1912 are getting down to business and preparing for the final round-up. It is expected that hearings before committees will be discontinued after this week, and next week will be the last for the introduction of bills. The committee are now holding two and three sessions daily and are gradually getting the bills off their files. Those that for any reason have been laid aside will be pretty apt to stay where they are unless somebody and something gets behind than to push them out. Only those measures which are of particular importance per se, and those which have strong influences behind them will be reported, many of them being allowen to remain in the committee rooms, or, if a report on them is enforced, the report will nine times out of ten be unfavorable. That is why the members are now bestirring themselves and getting to work to find out just where their bills are and what they are to expect from the committees. The Garrett Delegation have kept track of their several bills pretty well and know just where they are. They are keeping after the committees which have them and they will continue to keep after them until they come out. There is nothing in the way of legislation offered by the Garrett county Delegation which promises to meet with any serious objection from any quarter, most of it being local legislation and nobody outside the county will interfere with it if the Delegates themselves are agreed.

This is about the situation with Senator Speicher's bills, also. His bills will be sent over to the House as fast as they are passed for the Delegates to look after, and the bills of the Delegates will go to the Senate where Senator Speicher will care for them. And this is about the situation in Allegany county. In Allegany, however, there has been some friction, ever since Delegate Metzger bolted the delegation and voted with the Democrats to permit the Speaker to continue naming the employes, and refusing to consider the caucus action binding upon him so far as the economy proposition is concerned. The relations between Delegate Metzget and the five other members have been strained, and while there has been no open rupture there have been many little things that give proof of inharmonious action. There are evidences of very sharp rivalry in the matter of local legislation, and some strong differences of opinion have cropped out which may endanger if they do not actually kill some meritorious bills. For instance, there is the "Wide Tire Bill" for Allegany county, introduced by Delegate Wittig empowering the Road Directors to regulate the width of tires on vehicles traveling over the county roads. Mr. Metzger, who is a member of the committee on Roads and Highways to which the bill has been referred, made objection to the bill because of alleged increase in the cost of hauling to mining companies, brick ware, etc, but which Mr. Wittig and Senator Zihlman contended did not affect the materials used by these companies as they are all brought in by rail. And it is now said that the committee, irrespective of Metzger's protest, will recommend that the bill be referred to the Allegany county delegation, which means it will be favorable reported, and in this event that Mr. Metzger will carry the fight to the floor and solicit votes of other members against it. Should he do this, then the other members of the Delegation, through Senators Zihlman, Speicher, Emmert of Washington, and Mathias of Frederick, will make war in the Senate upon every bill in which Metzger is interested when it reaches the Upper House. And so the merry war goes on on, while matters of importance to the people of Allegany county will be sacrificed upon the altar of personal feeling among the Delegates.

Delegate Herpich of Allegany, last week introduced a bill in the House providing for the erection of poles and the placing of flags upon every public school in the county, and authorizing the County Commissioners to appropriate $500, or so much of that amount as may be necessary for defraying the expenses. The bill was referred to the Allegany Delegation, who reported it favorably at Friday night's session, and it will be passed this week.

Delegate Lawton's bill changing the time of holding County Commissioners' meetings in Garrett county from quarterly to monthly, passed the Senate Friday night. It had previously passed the House.

Delegate Long's bill raising the assessment for the miners' relief fund in Garrett county, was favorably reported by the Garrett and Allegany delegations, to which it was referred, and it will pass this week.

Senator Zihlman's bill to pay a bounty claim to Henry Keech, Joseph M. Furstenburg, George Witt and Patrick Broderick, and in behalf of which he appeared before the Finance Committee, was reported favorably by the committee in the senate Friday last, and ordered to be engrossed tor third reading.

Senator Zihlman's school teachers' pension bill for Allegany county passed the Senate Friday night and will now be sent to the House.

Senator Speicher's bill ratifying the the charter of the Youghiogheny Power Company passed the Senate Friday, as did also his bill incorporating the Garrett County Railway Company, the later being amended in one or two minor details.

Speaker Trippe's bill placing the matter of hotel rates for Baltimore City during the Democratic National convention in the jurisdiction of the Public Service Commission was unfavorably reported and the report was adopted.

A bill to incorporate the town of Barton, by submitting the proposition to the voters within the proposed city limits has been introduced in the House by Delegate Duckworth, of Allegany county. The bill will give them the right to vote every year to and including 1914, unless it shall carry before that time.

Senator Speicher's wife and five sons have been in Annapolis the past week, and the sons created considerable interest and attracted no little attention from the members of the General Assembly. The boys, who range from six to fourteen years of age, are fine, healtny chaps and their manly deportment and pleasant address have won them friends among all the Senators and members, with whom the father is also extremely popular. Mrs. Speicher is a lady of culture and was accorded every attention and courtesy during their visits to the State House. They called on the Governor and were cordially received. In the Senate Friday night Senator Duke, of Calvert county, introduced the following order:

"By the Senate of Maryland:

"WHEREAS, Senator Speicher, of Garrett county, has introduced to the Senate today his wife and five sons; therefore, be it

"Resolved, That a group photograph of the family be taken and sent to 'Teddy' Roosevelt to show that race suicide does not exist in Garrett county, Maryland."

The order was adopted.

Reading Clerk Wolfe, of the House, after shaking hands with each of the young gentlemen, remarked that "Garrett county will never go Democratic now."

Delegate Weimer's Local Option Bill for Garrett county is still in the hands of the Temperance Committee, and will probably be reported soon after the Anti-Saloon League bill shall have been disposed of. The State-Wide bill will be reported out on the 19th, and it will take precedence over any and all legislation until final action has been taken.

Mr. Weimer's bill, being a local measure, will not be reported before the State-wide bill but it is expected it will follow soon thereafter.

The Local Option bill, which will be reported unfavorably by the Temperance committee in the House on Tuesday, March 19th, will be the feature of the session so far as now appears by the calendar. The sentiment in the House seems to have changed, so far as public expressions are concerned, but there is the silent, unrecorded sentiment which both sides are trying to sound, and and which keeps them guessing, however confident they may appear to be in talking for publication. This silent sentiment, if thrown either way, would decide the fate of the bill, and both the friends and opponents of the measure know this. That is why they are so persistent in their efforts to secure expressions from those who have so far declined to commit themselves. Because of the reasonable and logical explanation that can be given for so voting, it is believed a majority of this neutral vote will finally be recorded for the passage of the bill. It can be said in meeting any criticism that may be made for the voting for the bill by the constituents, that it were better to vote to put the question of local option up to the people than to presume to decide so great a question for them. It is conceded by the opponents of the bill that those who vote to put the proposition up to the voters in general have the best end of the controversy, and there is really less objection to this than those who openly favor the matter of local option. In all arguments against the measure the opponents have not attempted to question the tenability of the position assumed to submit it to a vote, but have invariably argued that the evils resultant upon the decision of the people against the saloon will be so great that the legislators will be justified in the voting to prevent the people of the state from getting the opportunity to vote on it. This has been one of the weak points in the case of the local option opponents, and has done more to demonstrate the inconsistency of their position than any argument the local optionists have advanced There will be a wide range of debate and it is believed the broadest latitude will be given both sides in discussing the matter. Buteven if debate should be curtailed by a demand for "the previous question," this will not prevent the members from "explaining" their votes on the roll-call. Debate on the bill two years ago lasted nine hours, and it may go even longer than this this session. It is entirely an unknown quantity, and there is no way of knowing what the finall result will be, notwithstanding the published claims of both sides. It will take the final roll-call to decide, because many members who are now claimed by one side or the other will be found to have changed their position at the last moment.

Ex-Assemblyman Nathan R. Selby, of Selbysport, was in the city Monday and Tuesday as a witness in the Orphans' Court in the case of Collins vs. Collins. The action was brought by the youngest son of the late Walter Collins against his elder brother, W. S. Collins, the former alleging that in the settlement of the estate of his deceased father a sum of money aggregating about $600 had been left with his brother, W. S. Collins, who had applied it wrongfully in meeting the expenses incident to the last illness and death of their father. It was clearly proven, however, that the money was expended lawfully and the case was decided by the Court in favor of the defendant, W. S. Collins. Other witnesses present at the trial were Mr. E. H. Wolfe and Mr. H. M. Frankhouser, both of near Cranesville

"Mason and Dixon's Line."

The name of "Mason and Dixon's Line," has been properly applied to the whole divisory line between free and slave soil, but properly it belongs only to the south boundary of Pennsylvania, suveyed by Charles Mason and Jeremiah Dixon, 1763-67.

For over 100 years this line was a "bone of contention," and England finally sent Mason and Dixon to the colonies to make an official survey which was to be final.

At the end of every fifth mile of this line a stone, brought from England, was placed, engraved on one side with the coat of arms of Lord Baltimore, and on the other with those of the Penns while the intermediate miles were marked by smaller stones, 16 inches square and 18 inches high, bearing the large letter M on one side, and P on the other. The line is 280 miles long.

TIME TO SPRAY

State Entomologist Gives Directions for Preservation of Fruit Trees.

Now is the time for all growers to make arrangements for treating fruit tree for the San Jose Scale. The best all around is the concentrated lime-sulphur mixture. This wash can be bought or made at home, depending upon the inclination of the grower. Bulletin No. 161 of the Experiment Station, College Park, Md., which can be had for the asking, discusses the manner of making and use of this remedy. All trees should be spraved before the buds open.

All fruit growers who have neglected orchards near them which are a menace to the vicinity, should notify the officers of the State Horticultural Department, at College Purk.

All Osage Hedges should be gotten rid of as far as possible, as they serve to spread the scale. If kept, they should also be sprayed.

The Maryland Agricultural College and Experiment Station desires to conduct as many spraying and pruning demonstrations in different parts of the State as means will permit, to show what may be accompliahed by up-to-date methods of treatment. Any person or persons who are particularly interested in promoting this work should communicate with the undersigned.

Mr. Carl B. White Has Secured Control of Large Mercantile Establishment.

The many friends of Mr. Carl B. White, son of Mr. James W. White, of Oakland, will be glad to learn of the former's success in business at Uniontown, Pa., where he has been located for the past two or three years as manager of the Uniontown Hardware and Supply Company, extensive dealers in hardware, mill and mine supplies, etc.

Of Mr. White's business relations with the concern, both past and prospective future, the Tribute, published at Uniontown, in a recent issue, had the following to say concerning him:

"Mr. C. B. White, former manager and stockholder of the Uniontown Hardware and Supply Company, has purchased the entire store and the three-story brick building at 56 Peter street, the present location of the Company. Arrangements were concluded and the deal was consummated Tuesday afternoon.

"The large hardware, mine and mill supply store will continue under the old name and under the efficient management of Mr. White, the new proprietor.

"In conversation with a Tribune representative, Mr. White stated that with the help of the coke operators in this region, this store will be made the best supply store in Western Pennsylvania. With an establishment of this kind in Uniontown, the centre of the coal and coke region, it will be unnecessary for coke and coal mine operators to purchase their supplies in Pittsburgh, as everything needed can be secured at this enterprising establishment and at prices which will meet competition."

Warning to Natural Gas Customers.

Owing to the severe cold weather this winter and the ground being frozen deeper than usual and as the service lines from the street to the houses are not more than twelve or eighteen inches in depth, we find in several cases where the frost is deeper than the service lines there is more or less danger of the lines pulling part and causing leaks.

The Gas Company is doing everything possible to prevent any leaks of this kind and will take this opportunity to notify all customers of Natural Gas, to use every precaution against accidents and should they detect the odor of gas at any time, to immediately shut off the gas at the meter and notify the Gas Company at once. We particularly caution you not to look for a leak with a light.

WARNING TO POTATO GROWERS.

Imported Potatoes May Bring the Dreaded Wart Disease.

The short crop of Irish potatoes in United States last year has led to the importation of large quantities of European potatoes. Much of the importations are from regions infected with the potato wart disease, a disease much more destructive to the potato than any of our blights or scab. It converts the tubers into a rough, unsightly mass, and in many parts of Europe it has seriously damaged the potato industry. It has spread over Europe in recent past and has already appeared on this side of the Atlantic in Newfoundland.

Canada has quarantined against regions in Europe and Newfoundland infected with this disease, and because the United States has no law to prevent the introduction of potatoes from infected countries, Canada is now barring out our potatoes as a necessary means of keeping the disease out of her fields.

Maryland potato growers should take warning not to plant any imported potatoes as they may contain the disease without it being seen. If the disease appears once in our fields, it will be practically impossible to eradicate it.

GREAT VOTING CONTEST

Elegant Obermeyer & Sons Piano and Other Valuable Prizes to be Awarded to the Successful Candidates.

"THE REPUBLICAN" AND OAKLAND MERCHANTS GIVE PRIZES

Read the Announcement and Particulars on Seventh Page of this Issue, and get in the Game.

The Republican this week inaugurates the greatest voting contest ever held in this section of the state, and one which we believe will arouse a great deal of interest.

This contest will extend over a period of about 90 days, and at the close of the contest some lady in Oakland or vicinity will be the proud possessor of a handsome $400 piano.

On page seven of this issue will be found a full explanation of the contest, with the rules that govern it, and a list of beautiful and useful auxiliary prizes which will be given by the progressive merchants of the town. There are a great number of prizes, besides the piano, any one of which will be worth winning, and every contestant who gets out and makes any kind of a hustle will be sure of winning a handsome prize, even if she does not win the piano.

This contest is put on under the auspices of the Publisher's Music Company of Chicago, who will have charge of the arrangements. This company makes a business of conducting these popular voting contests and at present has a number of them under way in this and other states.

Some popular lady will have a beautiful piano as the result of this contest, and a number of others will have beautiful prizes of various kinds.

Read the rules elsewhere in this issue, inspect the offerings of the merchants, and learn how you may secure votes for yourself or your friend.

Use the 25-vote coupon in this issue and cast it for some one, as it may be the starter of a winner. Fill out the nomination blank and send it or hand it in to The Republican office, as this may be the means of helping some deserving lady to win a handsome piano or some of the other valuable prizes enumerated in the list.

This contest is without doubt the biggest business getting enterprise that has ever been presented to the people of Oakland and vicinity.

While the Oakland Republican enjoys a good business, nevertheless we are always reaching out after more and in our present method of helping others, we hope in return to help ourselves. We expect to increase our subscription list at an exceedingly rapid rate, and thereby benefit the advertiser.

Remember that a number of our leading merchants are interested in this contest and give 25-vote coupons with every dollar cash purchase. Also those who do not fully understand the rules and regulations of this contest can call or write this office and we will be pleased to go over the proposition with you.

Remember and have your friends trade with the merchants who are giving the coupons. They are reliable trades people as follows:

DR. H. W. M'COMAS ELECTED MAYOR FOR FOURTH TIME

He Had a Majority of 64 Over His Opponent.

Three times Mayor of Oakland and elected for a fourth term by the voters of the town Monday is the record of Dr. Henry W. McComas, who received the Republican nomination last Friday night at a well attended meeting of the Republican voters held in the Council Chamber.

For members of the Town Council Messrs. John W. Davis, Henry Lauer and James W. White were nominated at the Friday night meeting. Saturday morning, however, Mr. White withdrew from the ticket and the name of William Lawton was substituted by the proper officials.

The result of the election on Monday was surprising in the extreme. While it was conceded by nearly everyone that Dr. McComas would be elected over his opponent, Mr. G. Semmes Hamill, Jr., by a good majority—the majority given the successful candidate, amounting to 64 votes, far exceeded the highest figures placed by the warmest supporter of the Republican candidate.

The councilmanic ticket named by the Republicans was an exceptionally strong one. Of the three nominees, two—Messrs. Davis and Lauer—were elected by large majorities, while Mr. Lawton was defeated by but two votes, Dr. B. F. Selby being the winner, having received 131 votes as against 129 for Mr. Lawton.

The Council will organize Monday night, April 1st, with four Republicans—Messrs. Davis, Lauer, Johnson and Naylor—and two Democrats—Dr. Selby and Mr. Thos. Gonder.

While Mr. Lawton was defeated by so small a majority, he feels very highly complimented by the vote he received at the hands of his fellowmen.

Mr. Davis and Mr. Lauer as well as Dr. Selby are three of the best known young business men of Oakland. The taxpayers feel that their interests will be carefully conserved by not only these gentlemen but by the other members of the Council, and we feel prefectly safe in predicting a successful administration of public affairs by the new officials.

The vote in detail follows:

FOR MAYOR.

Dr. H. W. McComas, R.	166
G. Semmes Hamill, Jr., D	102
Maj. for Dr. McComas	64

FOR COUNCIL.

John W. Davis, R.	162
Henry Lauer, R.	147
William Lawton, R.	129
Dr. B. F. Selby, D.	131
D. E. Offutt, Jr., D.	130
James L. Pollock, D.	102

Mr. J. H. Beckman, of Fairmont, W. Va., was in the city yesterday on business. Mr. Beckman may become a permanent resident of Garrett county, locating at Mountain Lake Park where he will probably engage in the mercantile business as a partner in the firm of Garthright & Harvey.

FOR SALE.—Two horses aged 3 years, and one 6 year old mare; all good workers; weight about 1250 pounds each; in good condition. Apply Richard Tasker near Three Fork Coal Mine, Chaffee, W. Va. 52-3t.

Tomorrow night a banquet will be served the members of the local lodge, Knights of Pythiss at the Castle hall, the occasion being the housewarming of the new quarters in the Pythian building, which has been occupied for a month or more by the lodge. The occasion promises to be a happy one for those who attend. The menu will include cold roast turkey, oysters and other seasonable dishes. A number of addresses will be made by members of the organization.

We present on an inside page of The Republican today an excellent article contributed to our columns by Rev. Dr. C. W. Hudson, of Loch Lynn, who is soon to leave for his new charge in Alabama. Dr. Hudson's departure from Garrett county will be sincerely regretted by his host of friends in all parts of the county. He is an excellent preacher and pastor and has done a wonderful work at Loch Lynn and his other appointments. The best wishes of all will follow Rev. Hudson to his new field of labor.

Rev. Dr. A. B. Riker went to Wheeling Monday afternoon to attend the "Billy" Sunday revival meetings now being held in that city. The third week of the effort has been entered upon and the interest has became so great that large bodies of police are required to keep the great crowds in order which assemble in front of the tabernacle and clamor for admission. On Sunday 20,000 men tried to get into the building and the officers were required to use every effort to maintain a semblance of order. So far $20,000 have been contributed toward the fund to carry on the meeting. Dr. W. D. Reed also went to Wheeling to attend the meetings, leaving here Monday night on train No. 7.

The Meeting of the Two Who Had Been Sweethearts.

By HELEN M. QUINN.

Saturday afternoon and the great publishing house was almost deserted. In one of the offices a man and a woman were at work, the former busily writing and the latter reading wearily through a slowly diminishing pile of manuscripts.

The woman sighed. The man looked up at her.

"Tired, Miss King?"

"Tired! That does not express it, and it does seem that I am accomplishing very little today."

"Can I be of assistance? I am almost through."

"Well, there is one thing I should like to have you do when you can spare time. I have two stories here on which I should like to have your opinion."

"You think they are good?"

"Yes, but I should like to know whether your judgment agrees with mine. This 'Reason and Romance,' I think, shows decided genius, and this 'For Auld Lang Syne' seems to me to be rather a clever little story, but as it is written by a very dear friend of mine perhaps I am partial. Will you give me your unbiased opinion?"

He crossed the room and took the manuscript from her hand. A few minutes later she closed her desk and put on her hat.

"I am going home," she said as she paused at the door. "If Mrs. White should come in, would you mind asking her to telephone me from here?"

"It will be a pleasure, Miss King."

When she had gone he laid down his pen, put away his papers in a methodical way, lighted a cigar and settled himself comfortably back in his chair. The first story he took up was "Reason and Romance." It was short, and he read it through quickly.

"Umph! Well, yes, I suppose there is genius in it," he mused, "but it certainly wants cultivation."

He picked up the other and at first glanced over it somewhat carelessly; then suddenly a few lines brought back his wandering thoughts. He turned the pages to look at the author's name.

"Lilian Watson," he said thoughtfully. "Well, this is a coincidence!"

He read a few pages further.

"It is surely more than a coincidence, because no one but Bessie could have written this, no matter what the signature. Why, I remember this scene as if it were yesterday. We were only children then, to be sure, but there are things one never forgets, and she has remembered our very words."

Once more he turned to the sheets in his hand, but soon they were laid on the desk, and he sat with his forehead resting on his palm, and his deep gray eyes looked wearily back through the years.

How vividly the little story brought it all back to him—the two childish playmates of long ago, the scrapes they fell into and out of together, the boy and girl who were schoolmates and shared each other's sorrows and joys and were loyal comrades, then the realization that this youthful companionship had developed into the passionate love of man and woman and the deep happiness of this awakening had brought to both of them! How well he remembered his ardent wooing and her sweet surrender!

Then the gray eyes grew troubled as he thought of the "little rift within the lute" and the final quarrel and parting brought about by a woman's pride and a man's stubbornness.

That was five years ago, but it seemed as if he had just awakened from a long dream. He had tried so hard to forget and until today almost had convinced himself that he was succeeding, but somehow all the old hopes crowded into his heart, and he realized that they were mastering him in spite of himself.

"I cannot forget," he said. "I must see her again and win her forgiveness. She cannot have forgotten the old days or she would not have written this."

There came to him a great longing to hear her voice, to feel her hand, soft and cool, on his forehead as she used to lay it long ago when he was tired or discouraged and came to her for sympathy.

He was roused from his reverie by the entrance of the office boy bearing a card.

"Lady for Miss King, sir."

"Bring her in here," he said without glancing at the card which the boy laid on his desk. He took it for granted that the lady was Mrs. White.

Was it fate? Was it chance? Who knows?

In a moment he heard the office boy return, and he could hear the faint rustle of a woman's skirt.

The shadows had gathered in the office, and the light was somewhat dim. He looked up and saw her standing there in the doorway in her simple white dress and blue ribbons, the sweet girlish face just a trifle more serious perhaps than of old, but otherwise unchanged.

He jumped to his feet and came forward, but his back was to the light, and she did not have a good view of his face.

"Has Miss King gone?" she asked in a low voice, and the old tones thrilled his very soul.

Without answering her question he held out both hands.

"Bess!"

For a moment the woman's self possession left her; her lips were colorless, and the roses in her cheeks turned from red to white. That deep, strong voice, then, had power to move her after five long years. It was only for a moment, however. She recovered and held out her hand.

"Why, Bert," she said, and her voice was almost natural, "this is a pleasant surprise."

Her tone of simple friendliness staggered him, for he had been quick to note the effect his greeting had on her, but she continued:

"When did you come east?"

"Six months ago. But tell me about yourself. Are you living in New York?"

"Oh, no! I am only visiting here. My home is still in Omaha, and I am going back tomorrow. I have been here three whole weeks, and I shall be so glad to get back."

"Is she perfectly indifferent?" he asked himself. "How can she be so matter of fact after all that has passed between us?"

Once he had held her in his arms, kissed her forehead and her lips, and now he did not dare even to touch her hand. Could he let her go like this?

"Do you know," he continued desperately, "I have been thinking of you all afternoon?"

"Of me?" she questioned in a surprised tone.

"Yes; I have been reading your story, and"— He moved closer to her, and his gray eyes searched hers in silence. How well she remembered that look—the same look that in the old days had seemed to read her very soul! His eyes told her now, as they did then, all that he would say, much that was otherwise inexpressible, and her face flushed crimson. He had been reading her story into which she had put so much of the long ago—their long ago. What had it told him?

"What do you think of it?" she asked as carelessly as she could. "Harry makes fun of my writing and says it is"—

"Harry?" he interrupted, his face paling.

"Yes; my husband. You remember Harry Rogers?"

And then he showed of what he was made. "Yes," he answered quietly, "but I did not know you were married."

"Why, I have been married for three years. If you ever come to Omaha you will come and see us, won't you? Harry would be glad to renew old associations, and I want you to see my little boy. We call him"— The sweet voice trembled and hesitated ever so slightly, and then she went on with a brave little smile, "We call him—Bert!" The last word was said almost in a whisper, and just for one instant her little gloved hand rested on his, and he noticed that her lips trembled. He looked earnestly into the blue eyes.

"I shall try to come some time," he said gently as he held her hand for a moment at parting. "Goodby! God bless and keep you, little woman!" The old name slipped from his lips almost unawares.

She smiled and went out into the gathering dusk.

"I have been dreaming," he said to himself an hour later as he rose, with a shiver, and brushed his hand quickly across his eyes. "I have been dreaming, and this is the awakening. She called her baby Bert. I wonder— Ah, well, women are queer!" But there was a look of weary longing in the gray eyes as he mingled with the hurrying crowds on Broadway.

A week later a woman knelt by a tiny cot and stroked a baby's golden curls. "Bert, Bert!" she whispered. "God bless you, dear, and make you as happy as you deserve." Something glistened on the baby's cheek. Could it have been a tear? Perhaps she prayed for her boy and perhaps— Yes, women are queer.

Pretty Fast.

A Washington broker has a big country place just outside of Leesburg, Va. He put a large searchlight on top of his stone watertower and from time to time at night amuses himself by throwing the light around the country, says the Saturday Evening Post.

One night the broker was on the tower playing with the searchlight. A Virginian, driving a skittish team hitched to a surrey, in which there were two ladies, was coming along a road leading to Leesburg and was about four miles from the village.

The broker threw the searchlight down the road.

"Gosh darn it," exclaimed the Virginian, "here comes one of those pesky automobiles!" He jumped out and took the horses by the heads. The light continued on the road for half a minute and then was switched away. The Virginian stood stupefied. Then he turned to the ladies and said in an awed voice: "Jeerusalem! That automobile must be going fast. It's gone by, and I didn't even see it!"

Marvels of the Stock Whip.

The stock whip in the skillful hands of the Australian is not only an article of the greatest utility, but also a formidable weapon. Owing to its great length—the lash varies from twelve to thirty feet—and the shortness of the butt, which measures only eighteen inches, it is an extremely difficult and awkward thing to wield, and the beginner is apt to seriously hurt himself if he does not exercise care when practicing. A well trained stockman, however, can hit a cent every time at ten paces distance and with the dreaded lash in his hand, cracking like pistol shots, can keep a mob of wild cattle in check. If used with full force it will cut through skin and flesh like a knife, but unless a beast shows distinct vice the stockman uses it more for the purpose of instilling fear than of causing pain. It can also be used as a bolas—a Patagonian form of the lasso—and an adept with the whip can catch and hold a beast by causing the lash to curl around its legs.—Wide World Magazine.

PASTOR RUSSELL SPEAKS ON MARS HILL

"Unknown God" Again Declared in Athens and Corinth.

In the Words of St. Paul, He Declares That For a Long Time God "Winked" at Polytheism and Image Worship, "but Now Commands All to Repent."

PASTOR RUSSELL

Corinth, Greece, Mar. 10.—The I. B. S. A. Missions Investigation Committee is here. Pastor Russell, its Chairman, delivered an address in our largest Auditorium. Rev. Bosdayannes served as interpreter. Pastor Russell's text was, "God hath appointed a day in the which He will judge the world." (Acts xvii, 31.) He said:—

Enroute to your city I visited Athens. As I stood upon Mars Hill and made a short address my mind reverted to the account of Saint Paul's preaching there, and I have chosen some of his words on that occasion as my text. As St. Paul made no impression there it is quite improbable that I made any.

True, it is not today fashionable in civilized communities to worship images; and yet in another sense it is still fashionable. There is still much idol worship throughout the civilized world, but in a different form from that of old. No longer do we bow before wooden images, but before inward images, the images of our minds, our mental aspirations—with some, wealth and fame; with others, ease and pleasure, and with still others, the creed-idols of our forefathers, miserable misrepresentations of the true God.

The Day of Judgment.

Saint Paul on Mars Hill preached Jesus and the resurrection—Jesus as the Redeemer from the death sentence, making possible the resurrection of the dead by satisfying the demands of Divine Law against the sinner—the resurrection as the means through which the blessing of the Savior's death will reach Adam and all his children.

Addressing the Gentiles, the Apostle explains that for a long time God had "winked" at Polytheism and image worship, "but now," he says, "God commandeth all men everywhere to repent." How did God "wink" at sin and idolatry? And does He still "wink" at it? And why did He change and when did He begin to command repentance?

We answer: For four thousand years idolatry prevailed and God took no notice of it. He did not "wink" at the idolaters' dying in their ignorance, and say to the devils, "Take these poor creatures who know no better! Roast them to all eternity!" Nothing of the kind! Our forefathers merely imagined that and by false reasoning convinced themselves, and twisted texts of Scripture which they did not properly understand in support of this theory.

Let us note carefully what the Apostle says respecting God's appointed Day for the judging of the world. He says that the command to repent now goes forth to all men everywhere, "because God hath appointed a Day, in the which He will judge the world." The Apostle does not refer to that Day as already begun, but as merely appointed or arranged for in advance. He means that in arranging that "Jesus, by the grace of God, should taste death for every man," God was arranging that every man might have a judgment or a trial, to determine whether or not he will be worthy of this blessing which Jesus' death provides him an opportunity to secure.

"The Mystery of God."

The purpose of the nineteen centuries between the time when Jesus died as man's Redeemer and the time when He will take His Throne, as the Restorer of Adam and his race, is spoken of as a "mystery," because the great work of grace herein accomplished is measurably hidden from the world.

The Scriptures tell us who may understand this "mystery," and when it will be finished. They say, "The secret of the Lord is with them that fear Him, and He will show them His Covenant." They tell us that "In the days of the voice of the Seventh Angel, when he shall begin to sound, the Mystery of God shall be finished," which He hath kept secret from the foundation of the world. (Revelation x, 7.) Saint Paul refers to this mystery, saying that it was "hidden from past Ages and Dispensations," and "is now revealed to the saints." (Colossians i, 26, 27.) He explains what it is that we should be fellow-heirs, and of the same Body with our Redeemer.—Eph. iii, 6.

We should notice this wide difference between the reward promised the Church and that proffered the world. The difference is as to nature. The reward for the world will be earthly, human nature, with everlasting life in an earthly Paradise or Eden—world-wide. Mankind never lost a spiritual or heavenly condition through Adam's disobedience, nor in any other manner. He never had such a condition or nature that he could lose it. He was made man, "a little lower than the angels." This which he lost Jesus paid the redemption price for at Calvary; and these things lost are the very things which Jesus and His elect Bride will restore to mankind during the thousand years of the Messianic Kingdom. "The Son of Man came to seek and to save that which was lost."

Humor and Philosophy

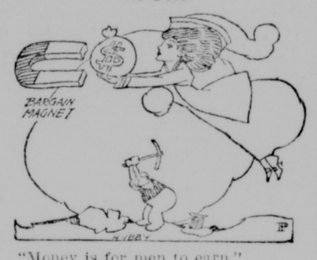
IMPROVING THE BREED.

ONE eminent surgeon says that old age is caused by germs in the larger intestine and that man would live longer with it amputated. Another wants to ward off possibilities of indigestion by cutting out the stomach. A third would lop off the appendix right at the start without giving it a chance to get gay, and a fourth is for clipping off the tonsils. Perhaps the child of the future as soon as nature has turned it out in the raw state will at once be turned over to the surgeons for the finishing touches.

Who knows but what mankind as soon as he has been perfected will be fitted out with an internal gasoline engine to perform the functions now done in a hesitating manner by the organs of the body. There may come a time when the sick man instead of going to the doctor will hie himself away to the repair shop for treatment.

Worth its Cost



When something for nothing
By chance you may get
It's worth what it costs you—
On that you can bet.
And still more distressing
Some things that you buy
And pay for with money
Of worth are as shy.

The bargains in landscapes,
In mines and in stocks
That cost but a trifle
If taken in blocks
May go up a-kiting
And dividends pay,
But most of them travel
The opposite way.

The dollars and doughnuts
You capture with pain,
That come with a struggle—
The hard worked for gain
May not be of value,
But if it is not
You know how you got it,
And that helps a lot.

This something for nothing,
As you are aware,
Is but a delusion
And likewise a snare.
Indeed, you are lucky
And working it strong
If something for something
Pans out right along.

Its Uses.

"Money is for men to earn."
"Indeed?"
"Yes."
"And how about women?"
"Oh, it is for them to spend."

Second Nature.

"My own darling," he sighs, "say that you will be mine!"

The beautiful actress drops her eyes and suffers herself to be folded in his embrace, whispering, "Egbert, I have always been yours!"

To his astonishment, an instant later she draws away from him and taps her foot angrily on the floor, saying:

"Goodness, you did that like a wooden man! We didn't get a hand. You'll have to put more life and go into your part or"— Here she blushes vividly, and across her face surge waves of sweet confusion as she shyly says: "I am so sorry! For the moment I forgot that we were here alone and not on the stage."

A Chastener.

"Women do not show any ingenuity in inventing things to make their work easier."

"Yes, they do occasionally."

"Then why hasn't one invented a back to a dress that doesn't need buttoning up?"

"That wouldn't be an improvement from their standpoint. How would they keep their husbands in subjection without it?"

Precaution.

A man should bury his old straw hat,
Should cremate well the thing,
Or he'll be tempted, like enough,
To wear it in the spring.

Wrong Carriage.

"Blinks tells me he is writing a story of automobiles."

"Out of his field, isn't it?"

"Why so?"

"Well, he is a hack writer."

Explained.

"What is there so fascinating about an ocean trip that everybody is crazy to try it?"

"You feel so good when you get on land again."

The Pessimist.

"Every cloud has a silver lining."

"Sure about that?"

"It is what they say."

"Bet mine are made of tin."

A Sure System.

The landlord's is a pleasant lot.
He works with simple skill.
He guesses how much cash you've got
And then presents his bill.

Not So Surprising.

"He believes all he hears."

"He must be unsophisticated."

"No; deaf as a post."

A Hint.

"You look lonesome?"

"But don't I look as if I liked it?"

WOMEN'S HELPING HAND.

Their Clubs Make Atlanta, Ga., a "Spotless Town" Twice a Year.

Cleanliness is the mother of health and the sister of beauty. That is the belief of the women of Atlanta, Ga., and pursuant to their conviction they have dedicated two days in the year to the broom, the rake and the mop. From breakfast time to twilight they work in every nook and crevice of the town, driving out dirt in all its thousands of forms. Dirt is an evil witch, they say. It must be exorcised.

It is no fanciful project, no fad. It has been undertaken by the Atlanta Federation of Women's Clubs in a thoroughly organized and practical manner. This plan was tried and proved such an excellent thing that it has been perpetuated in a semi-annual custom, recurring every spring and autumn. And the federation calls upon each woman in Atlanta to join for a day at least in seeing how spotless every inch of Atlanta can be made. The men, too, are urged to enter the ranks.

In each of the ten wards a standing committee of eighteen ladies has been appointed to direct the campaign. The first thing the members of these committees do is to see that their own back yards are free of trash and that no scraps of paper or old tin cans clutter their own sidewalks and streets. Then they tactfully try to spread this back yard gospel. They also try to get every groceryman to keep the cabbage leaves and chicken feathers and muck of all kinds away from his shop door and alley, and every lady in the neighborhood lends her aid.

They don't interfere with any corporation or individual. What they want to do is to help them and thereby better the entire city. The time has passed long ago when it was sufficient for the citizens to keep their houses trim on the inside and front lawn clean. It is now equally important to keep the back yard and the alley clean. Citizens should keep the sidewalks and the middle of the street clean. They should not think of their immediate selves and affairs, but should by all means operate and work for the entire city. That is the dominant spirit of cleaning up day.

FOR PUBLIC PLAYGROUNDS.

This Poem Urges Denver to Construct More of Them.

Regarding the movement in the city of Denver for public playgrounds for the children, which is being bitterly fought by an organization of that place, the Denver Republican, a leading newspaper, is in receipt of the following poem forwarded by a gentleman of Butler, Pa., who was visiting Denver recently and beheld the glories of the Rocky mountain range from the capitol dome and who believes that Denver has the greatest chance of any city in the United States to become the most beautiful city in the world:

GIVE THEM A PLACE TO PLAY.

Plenty of room for dives and dens
(Glitter and glare and sin),
Plenty of room for prison pens
(Gather the criminals in!),
But never a place for the lads to race—
No; never a place to play!

Plenty of room for shops and stores
(Mammon must have the best),
Plenty of room for the running sores
That rot in the city's breast,
Plenty of room for the lures that lead
The hearts of our young astray,
But never a cent on a playground spent—
No; never a place to play!

Plenty of room for schools and halls,
Plenty of room for art,
Plenty of room for teas and balls,
Platform, stage and mart;
Proud is the city—she finds a place
For many a lad today—
But she's more than blind if she fails to find
A place for the boys to play!

Give them a chance for innocent sport,
Give them a chance for fun—
Better a playground plot than a court
And jail when the harm is done!
Give them a chance. If you stint them now
Tomorrow you'll have to pay
A larger bill for a darker ill.
So give them a place to play!

—Denis A. McCarthy.

Cards For Spitters.

In order to prevent the spread of disease germs by spitting upon the streets of the city of Lawrence, Mass., the board of health had 5,000 cards bearing the spitting ordinance printed and delivered to the police department to be distributed by policemen. The cards will be given to any individual who spits on a sidewalk. The board takes this means of preventing the habit in conjunction with the spitting signs which have been erected. This is a good method for making any city or town clean and healthful and should be adopted by the citizens working for the welfare of their home towns.

Helps to Beautify Her Town.

Mrs. F. E. Cook of Fresno, Cal., has evolved an original plan for helping in the improvement of her home town. She has a large, beautiful garden in which she employs several gardeners to raise plants and shrubs, which she distributes to all who apply for them to plant in their gardens or on the lawns in front of their homes. During the past year she gave away several thousand plants and is doing much to make Fresno one of the most beautiful towns in California.

To Work on Streets For Lodging.

Jonesville, a prosperous town of Wisconsin, has a novel plan for keeping its streets clean and improving them. The board of aldermen of the town unanimously passed an order compelling all persons who receive food and lodging in the city lockup and who are not at the time under arrest to work on the streets from 7 a. m. to 10 a. m. each following morning.

OREGON'S NOVEL IDEA

Plan For the Discussion of Lecturer's Programs.

Practical Subjects So Presented That They May Be Most Generally Discussed In All Granges Throughout the State.

The literary programs presented by the lecturer of the state grange of Oregon and the method proposed for their use are worthy more general publicity. Oregon is a small grange state, and its granges are divided into ten districts for the state lecturer's purposes. The names and location of the granges are printed by districts as diagram No. 1, and following those is a schedule known as diagram No. 2, which is as follows:

SCHEDULE OF PROGRAMS, DISTRICTS AND MONTHS.

Districts Nos.	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	10
Nov. '08..Prog. No.	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	10
Dec.....Prog. No.	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	10	1
Jan. '09..Prog. No.	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	10	1	2
Feb.....Prog. No.	4	5	6	7	8	9	10	1	2	3
March...Prog. No.	5	6	7	8	9	10	1	2	3	4
April....Prog. No.	6	7	8	9	10	1	2	3	4	5
May.....Prog. No.	7	8	9	10	1	2	3	4	5	6
June.....Prog. No.	8	9	10	1	2	3	4	5	6	7
July.....Prog. No.	9	10	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8
Sept.....Prog. No.	10	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9

Following this schedule are the subjects to be discussed throughout the year, known as diagram No. 3, the programs being numbered from 1 to 10, each program comprising four subjects. They are as follows:

GENERAL PROGRAM FOR YEAR.

PROGRAM I.

"Road Legislation For Oregon."
"The New Farm Home."
"Surroundings of the Home."
"The Greatest Present Needs of the Country School."

PROGRAM II.

"Our National Immigration Problem."
"The Folly of the Bare Fallow."
"The Care of the Home—Home Sanitation."
"The Schoolhouse and Its Surroundings."

PROGRAM III.

"Our National Waterways and Their Importance."
"Live Stock as a Factor In Successful Agriculture."
"Personal Hygiene."
"School Hygiene."

PROGRAM IV.

"The Movement For the Conservation of Natural Resources."
"Tillage, Drainage and Irrigation."
"Mold In the Home."
"The Raising of School Funds."

PROGRAM V.

"The Prevention of Disease."
"The Farm, Orchard and Garden."
"Leavens."
"The Distribution of School Funds."

PROGRAM VI.

"Food Adulteration and Its Detection—Pure Food Laws."
"Soils—Their Origin and Classification."
"Pure Water and Pure Milk."
"Centralization and Consolidation of Schools."

PROGRAM VII.

"The Patent Medicine Evil and the Crusade Against It."
"Plant Food—Character and Source."
"Meats and Vegetables."
"High School Development In Oregon."

PROGRAM VIII.

"Our Defective, Dependent and Delinquent Classes and the Institutions Which Care For Them."
"Barnyard Compost and the Maintenance of Fertility."
"Diet and Mastication."
"Literature For Boys and Girls—School Libraries."

PROGRAM IX.

"The American Farmer Feeding the World."
"The Advantages of Crop Rotation."
"School Training In Domestic Economy."
"Agricultural Education."

PROGRAM X.

"Elimination of the Tramp."
"Clover, Vetch, Alfalfa and the Field Pea."
"The Fireless Cooker."
"Ethical Ideals In School and Home."

The carrying out of the lecturer's plan is an easy matter. If the reader will select any program, as No. 1, and notice where it occurs in the schedule he will catch the idea. It is a good one. Here are forty important topics covering many subjects in which the farmer is vitally interested, directly or indirectly, and if the plan is faithfully carried out every grange in the state will consider them during the year. There is, therefore, a certain unity in the literary work of the granges of Oregon, and an opportunity is afforded all the granges in a given district of the state to consider the same subjects at the same time, and when the year is done it is reasonably certain that the general discussion of these subjects will add very materially to the sum total of practical knowledge possessed by the grange membership of the state.

A Grange Talk.

Professor M. W. Harper delivered a lecture before Forest City grange, Ithaca, on "Breeding Horses For Profit and Pleasure." He recommended the breeding of draft horses as being much easier and more profitable than to raise other breeds, because the advent of the automobile has not affected the price of draft horses, while it has that of the fine carriage breeds. In his opinion, the best manner in which farmers of this state can acquire good draft horses is to form associations for the breeding of such animals.

A Remarkable Showing.

The growth of the grange during the year ending Sept. 30, 1909, will make a remarkable showing. With more new granges organized than in any year for thirty-five years and the membership increased in the same proportion, there is abundant reason for the friends of the organization to rejoice

Patrick, Apostle To The Irish

By
C. W. HUDSON, Th.D.,
Pastor Loch Lynn Heights Baptist Church
Loch Lynn Heights, Md.

That Saint Patrick was an Irishman, and a Roman Catholic of the present accepted sense of the term, is to many a foregone conclusion, but that such was not the case history gives abundant evidence. Our information concerning his birthplace is obtained from his Confession. He said:

"I, Patrick, a sinner, the rudest and least of all the faithful, and most contemptible to very many, had for my father Calpornius, a deacon, a son of Poltus, a presbyter, who dwelt in the village of Bannaven Taberniae, for he had a small farm hard by the place where I was taken captive. I was then nearly sixteen years of age. I did not know the true God; and I was taken to Ireland in captivity with so many thousand men, in accordancy with our deserts, because we departed from God, and we kept not his precepts, and were not obedient to our priests, who admonished us for our salvation."

Evivently he was born outside of Ireland, and most authorities agree that his birthplace was at or near the present town of Dumbarton, on the Clyde, in Scotland. The most authenticated date of his birth is about 387 A. D. His mother's name is said to have been onchessa or Conches. Patrick's real name was Succat; Patricius being his Latin name, from whence we get Patrick.

When he was taken to Ireland he became a slave of Milchu, King of Dalaradia, the most powerful kingdom in northern Ireland. By him he was put to feeding swine. He escaped after six years and went to France. He was converted during his captivity and on his arrival in France became a monk at Tours and afterwards at Lerins. Here he lived a quiet life for a time, but his heart continually turned to the savage people who had enslaved him, and somethime about 432 A. D. he returned to Ireland and began to preach to them christianity. He met much opposition at first, but in the end was instrumental in winning a large number to at least a nominal profession of christianity. The reforming effect on the lives of the people was not very apparent during the life of Patrick, but in after years the seed bore good fruit. From Ireland went such men as Columban, Columba, St. Gall and others, who were instrumental in the evangelization of England, Scotland and many countries on the continent.

There are many stories of miracles performed by St. Patrick, such as driving serpents or other reptiles out of Ireland, but they are nothing but folklore stories which among a primitive people always cluster around their heroes. At least there is no evidence to substantiate them.

That neither Patrick, nor his immediate successors considered themselves under the jurisdiction of the bishop of Rome is proven by the fact that the Celtic Christians opposed with all their might the attempt to Romanize them in the sixth and seventh centuries. Wakeman, in his history of the Church of England, in speaking on the difference between the Irish and Roman churches, and in referring to the Irish Church says: "There is no territorial episcopate whatever. Jurisdiction, or the power of government, lay in the monastery, which was the unit of the church organization, and was administered by the abbot or coarb, who represented in ecclesiastical spheres the chief of the tribe, with whom lay the chief authority in Irish political life. The tie between the superior and inferior clergy was wholly personal, like the tie between thegn and king. They looked upon the episcopate merely as an ecclesiastical order, necessary for the due discharge of certain spiritual functions—such as ordination, confirmation and consecration. It was the custom for each monastery to keep a certain number of its monks in episcopal orders for these purposes.

Besides this lack of recognition of the authority of Rome there were differences between them concerning the observance of Easter, tonsure and the marriages of priests. Patrick's father was a deacon in the church. In the Roman church deacons were not allowed to marry. And when one comes to the beliefs and practices of Patrick as compared with the beliefs and practices of the Roman Catholic Church of today they are as far apart as the poles. He knew noting of the doctrines of transubstantiation, the immaculate conception, or the veneration of images or even of the saints themselves as far as can be found from his writings. His creed, as set forth in his hymn, could easily be accepted by the Protestants of today, except his belief in charms and incantations.

The date of Patrick's death is disputed. Some place it in 460 A. D., while Ussher claims that it was in 493 A. D.

That he was a consecrated christian man the following extract from his hymn shows:

"Christ with me, Christ before me,
Christ behind me, Christ within me,
Christ beneath me, Christ above me,
Chhrist at my right, Christ at my left,
Christ in breadth, Christ in length,
Christ in height,
Christ in the heart of every man who thinks of me,
Chirst in the mouth of every man who speaks to me,
Christ in the eye of every man who sees me,
Christ in the ear of every man who hears me."

BITTINGER.

There was some prospects of sugar making beginning last week, but considerable drop in the temperature made us think of winter again and there is no sugar made yet.

Big Engine Hauling.

The B. & O. is running quite a number of their mallet engines to Keyser, W. Va., where they are attached to a heavy train and sent back to Rowlesburg and Newburg, where they are placed in helping service again. It is astonishing to see the tremendous heavy trains these monsters can haul up the seventeen mile grade with only one helper. They usually haul about seventy cars in one train.

Messrs. Gilmor S. Hamill and W. M. Trickett were in Kingwood, W. Va., Tuesday on business.

The Cheapest Advertising Medium.

Bricks at $18 a thousand may be cheaper than bricks at $5 a thousand, if 98 per cent. of the former are sound and usable, and 80 per cent of the latter are so misshaped, broken and otherwise marred as to be unfit for used in the walls of a substantial building. You can't calculate the worth of an advetising medium to your bnsiness in terms of its rates per 1,000 circulation without reference to the quality of that circulation. Bricks have sometimes only a very thin plating of gold.

The cheapest advertising medium you can use is the one which yields the highest return per dollar invested in its space.

By throwing his winchester at the fox which brought it to a halt, he succeeded in climbing a large apple tree and was safe.

TO GAIN HOME TRADE.

Advertising Pointers That Will Prove Valuable to Local Merchants.

It is a lamentable fact that many merchants who complain because the mail order houses are killing off their business are losing their chance to survive because they don't know how to advertise. They carry standing advertisements in the local papers—some of them do—which occupy sufficient space to attract a great deal of patronage if properly filled. But they do what might be termed "label advertising." They paste a label like this, "Hallowell & Harrison, Groceries," on their newspaper space and let it stick there.

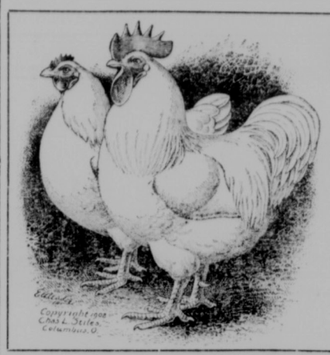
An advertising expert gives below some pithy advice which may be of high value to some merchants, provided they read and heed:

Advertising without any originality can only be compared to buying without any knowledge of the wants of your trade.

Some of the advertising that comes under our observation is so devoid of intent and purpose as to make us wonder why the failures reported from week to week are not greater than they are.

When Tom Brown announces through his local daily that he deals in "hats, caps, shoes and gent's furnishings" he is only working an overtired reading public, telling them something they have known for those many years.

Another feature is the nonchange of copy in your advertisement. We came across a Nebraska paper a few weeks ago which announced the fact that one of the local hardware men had the best line of lawn mowers, sickles and garden tools of any store in central Nebraska. Now, the first mentioned ad. starts off to do that which was the necessary magnet to bring to Tom Brown a good volume of trade, but his weakness and lack of originality were shown when he did not bear down on whose goods he handled, so wording his advertisement as to show wherein those particular goods were superior to any other handled in his town.



The second advertisement had merit if the advertiser was anticipating next spring and summer trade. However, we believe that late October is a poor time to advertise for the following summer, especially when there are snow shovels, coal buckets, stoves and other winter lines which have been placed on the shelves for winter sale.

Be original; tell what you have to sell; tell it right; change copy every week; you are paying for the space; it is yours to do with as you want.

CONGRESSIONAL PRIMARY TO BE HELD IN MAY

Date Fixed at Present Session of Legislature.

Only two months hence and the Republicans and Democrats will be called upon to make nominations for Congress in each of the sixth district of the State and for judges in the Second circuit (Talbot, Caroline, Queen Annes, Kent and Cecil counties) and in the Sixth circuit (Frederick and Montgomery counties.

The nominations in May instead of in August and even later, as in previous years, are necessary because of the primary election law enacted during the first week of the present session, which law fixes the first Monday in May as the day of the primary election. The date this year is May 6.

At the same primary delegates will be elected to the state conventions of the two parties, which conventions in turn will elect delegates to the two national conventions. Efforts are being made to have the primary election law so amended by the legislature now in session that there may be a direct vote for the national convention delegates. Under the present law the delegates, as stated, will be chosen by state conventions and can be instructed by one or both of those conventions to vote for the candidates for the nominations by the respective parties favored by one convention or by both. The object of the amendment in view is to permit voters to express their individual preference for presidential candidates. The independent element in the Democratic party favors this idea, but the independent Democrats are not numerous in the Maryland legislature. Governor Goldsborough is favorably inclined towards the proposition.

No candidate has thus far appeared in the Fifth district to make the contest at the general election against Hon. Thos. Parran. Former Senator Gorman has been urged as the strongest candidate of his party in the district, but he has not indicated a willingness to accept the nomination, which would be his for the asking. With Mr. Gorman's declination accepted as a fact, Mr. J. Enos Ray Jr., of Prince George county, is being urged to enter the field again. He was the candidate of his party two years ago and was defeated. He received the nomination after defeating Mr. Charles H. Stanley in the primary. If Mr. Ray should decline to be a candidate, Democrats of the district may select Mr Stanley, Mr. Ogle Marbury, Mr. Fred Dallman, all of Prince Georges, or Mr. J. Mitchell Digges, of Charles.

Because of the part played by Congressman Thomas Parran in distributing state patronage in the district, especially in that part of the district in South Baltimore, which, Republicans say, was not recognized to the extent to which they believed they were entitled, and because of the disappointments arising from non-appointments Democrats say they they have a good chance to carry the district. They have been saying the same thing for 18 years. The Republican disappointments may be relied upon not to be lasting or far reaching. Democrats frankly admit that Republicans display agreat ability in getting together on election day.

Horse and Buggy Washed Down Stream.

A horse to which was attached a buggy, was driven into the Little Yough back of the site of the old Glades Hotel yesterday afternoon by Carroll Kelly, son of Mr. J. A. Kelly, and the stream being rather higher than usual and running pretty swift, the horse and vehicle were both swept down the stream at a pretty lively gait. At the railroad station young Kelly, who fortunately retained his presence of mind, succeeded in guiding the horse to the bank where it was detached from the buggy and helped ashore by a number of men who were at that point.

MAIN SOURCE OF TOWN'S WATER SUPPLY CLOGGED

Some Cause, Yet Unascertained. Closed Well In Hotel Grounds.

Just when the people of Oakland thought they had the water supply problem about solved, and were congratulating themselves upon the presumption that nothing could successfully interfere with the system, the deep well located in the Oakland Hotel grounds, upon which the town has a lease, suddenly ceased flowing last Saturday afternoon, since which time hardly any water has been pumped from that source, with the result that the town officials are puzzling themselves to ascertain the cause of the stoppage, it being generally supposed, however, that the well has fallen in below the casing and effectually closed the water off from the pump.

For the present water will be procured from the other wells located at the head of Third street. In the meantime an effort will be made to reopen the well affected.

DENNIS GLOVER KILLED.

An old B. & O. Conductor and Former Garrett Countain Met Death at Keyser.

Mr. Dennis Glover, a former resident of Garrett county, his home being at Hutton, but who has resided at Keyser, W. Va., since the death of his wife two years ago, was killed at Keyser yesterday morning while engaged in his duties as conductor of a freight train on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad.

Mr. Glover was aged sixty years and had been in the employ of the railway company for a great many years. He is survived by a number of children. His funeral will occur at Terra Alta tomorrow, where his wife, a daughter of Mrs. Margaret Connel, of Oakland, is buried.

Fun for all Oakland at the Maryland Theatre Friday evening.

THREE GREAT LECTURES

To Be Heard By the People of Oakland and Vicinity.

A chance to hear the three famous lectures of Dr. A. B. Riker, pastor of St. Paul's M. E. church, will be presented the people of Oakland and vicinity on dates set out below, as the gentleman, after much solicition, has consented to deliver his lectures entitled, (1) "What Shall we do With the Boys;" (2) "The Mission of Culture;" (3) "Tomorrow."

Dr. Riker has had a wide and varied experience as pastor, college president and lecturer in some of the principle cites of America. People think, laugh and cry while he talks. Here are some of the comments of of those who have heard him: Dr. W. L. Davidson, of Chautauqua fame, "He discusses great themes in a great way." Dr. George H. Ball, president of Kena College, "Stirs the people to their heart's centres." Dr. George R. Holt, pastor of Baptist church, Hilton N. Y., "He captured and enraptured his audience." Prof. F. D. Ward, sup't schools, Loraine, O., "Scholarly, eloquent, brilliant."

The place, Maryland Theatre; dates, March 22nd and 28th and April 11th. Tickets on sale at all the drug store in the city.

Brakeman Hinkle Killed.

Howard J. Hinkle, 38 years old, Baltimore and Ohio brakeman, was killed Saturday afternoon at Terra Alta, W. Va. His body was taken to his home in Cumberland. He stepped on an adjoining track to wave his train ahead when an engine backed over him cutting him in twain.

A Beautiful Day.

Sunday last was the only real pleasant day experienced by the people of Oakland and Garrett county in three months past, and remined one that spring was nearly here. As a result of the warm sunshine and balmy air the people came out in crowds and thoroughly enjoyed the day.

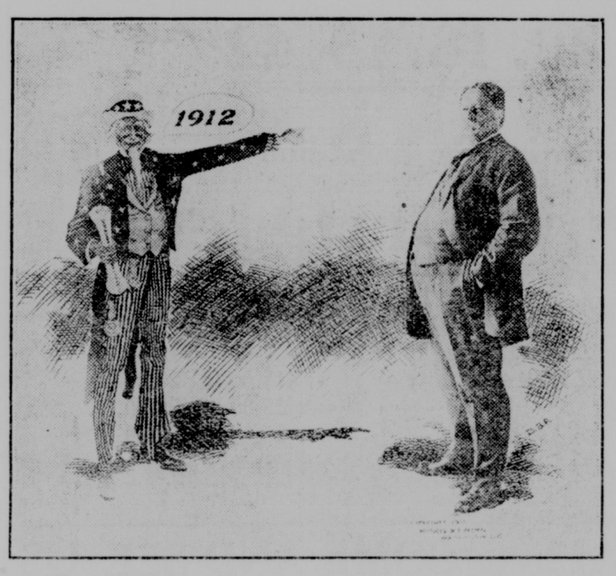
TAFT IS CERTAIN OF NOMINATION

Only Thing In Doubt Is Size of His Vote at Chicago.

MAY BREAK 1908 RECORD.

Sentiment Growing in Big Republican States That He Is Only Man of His Party Who Can Be Elected This Year—Voters Satisfied With Administration's Policies.

President William H. Taft is on a fair road to renomination as the Republican standard bearer in the campaign of 1912. With approximately 100 delegates to the Chicago convention already instructed for him, the president is more than likely to break his record of 1908, when he was nominated with 702 votes on the first ballot in the Chicago convention of that year. There is no longer any question that he will be renominated, and the only question now puzzling the managers of the Taft campaign is the completeness of his victory.



Coupled with the assurance of his renomination is the growing sentiment in the big Republican states both east and west that President Taft is the only Republican candidate who can possibly be elected this fall. It will be recalled readily enough that when Mr. Taft took office three years ago, March 4 last, the great issues of tariff revision and reform on a protective basis and of monetary reform and the great legal problem involved in the exact meaning of the Sherman anti-trust statute were squarely before the country. In the latter issue the supreme court had not made its famous ruling in the Standard Oil and tobacco cases which were to outline for the first time since the law was passed by congress its exact meaning. On each of these three great issues it has been necessary for President Taft to consider and frame a definite policy, and it is his decision as to these great questions that has convinced the business men, the laboring men and the farmers of the country that another term in the White House for William H. Taft is all that is necessary to restore the country on that basis of unparalleled prosperity which characterized the administration of William McKinley. It is this sentiment which not only assures the renomination of Mr. Taft at Chicago, but also his re-election in November.

So many bewildering side issues have become involved in the present campaign for delegates to the Chicago convention that the facts above stated have been overlooked in certain communities. Even the progressive achievements of the Taft administration have been forgotten in the excitement occasioned by the introduction of new political doctrines, practically none of which, except the proposal to recall federal judges, can be dealt with by the national government, but must be decided each state for itself. The demand for a presidential preference primary in each state, wholly a state matter, in which even the president himself has no right to interfere, has been magnified into a national issue notwithstanding the fact that there is and can be no national law on the subject, and only a few states are prepared to throw the protection of the law around any such primary and in face of the fact that one-tenth of the delegates to the Chicago convention are already chosen and hundreds of delegates elected to state and district conventions. It has been estimated that to clothe such a primary with legal authority, as provided by the rules of the party, it would cost the taxpayers of this country not less than $5,000,000 immediately.

The hysteria occasioned by these conditions is now passing away, and the foremost facts staring the voters in the face are the progressive and definite policies of President Taft and the certainty of an immediate improvement in business conditions all over the country following his renomination and re-election. These facts are of vital interest to all classes of citizens, especially when they are confronted with the alternative of a change in administration, a change in policies and a continuation of business depression and general unrest.

In estimating the probabilities of President Taft's renomination and reelection it is necessary to recur only to recent history. The president carried every northern state in 1908. Between the election of that year and 1910 occurred the tariff legislation known as the Payne tariff law. It is a well known maxim of politics that that party which revises the tariff is defeated at the next election, and the only exception to the rule in recent years was the passage of the Dingley law, which was followed so closely by the outbreak of the Spanish-American war as to bury the tariff issue in a wave of patriotic enthusiasm. The more recent by-elections in the big Republican states east of the Mississippi river, notably in New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania, have shown a return of Republicans to the fold and a restoration of the old time Republican majorities, which justifies the prediction that they will be safely in the Taft column in November. That they will so unanimously support any other Republican candidate, particularly if the third term issue is injected into the fight, is denied by the best informed leaders in those states.

As to the nomination there is no longer any doubt but that President Taft will have a majority of the delegates both from the north and the south. New England will be practically if not entirely solid for him. He will have sweeping victories in New York, Pennsylvania and the other middle Atlantic states. Ohio has never yet failed to support a favorite son candidate or failed to cast its electoral vote for a Republican candidate for president. Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Missouri, Minnesota, Kansas, Nebraska, South Dakota and Oklahoma of the middle western states will all have their quota of Taft delegates in the convention, four of them having already instructed delegates in some districts for the president. The southern states will be almost unanimous in their support of the president, while in Utah, Montana, Idaho, Colorado, Wyoming, Arizona and the Pacific coast states there is every assurance of solid Taft delegations. Present indications point only to a scattering opposition to President Taft's renomination.

Taft For Peace.

It was only by the exercise of rare discretion and tact that war was averted with Mexico nearly a year ago. Had President Taft yielded to the demands of some of the "jingoes" of the country the United States might easily have been plunged into a conflict with its neighbor over fancied wrongs. Without permitting the rights of American citizens to suffer in any respect, Mr. Taft handled a ticklish diplomatic situation with such good judgment that trouble was averted and the friendly relations with Mexico were undisturbed.

Taft's Anti-trust Record.

In the real prosecution of the trusts the administration of President Taft has established a record that is far beyond that of any of his predecessors. Big combinations have been brought to the bar of federal justice, their promoters have been fined for disobeying the Sherman anti-trust law, and the controlling corporations have been disintegrated. The record of the Taft administration stands unequaled in its curbing of illegal combinations and monopolies.

What Theodore Roosevelt Said.

On the 4th of March next I shall have served three and a half years, and this three and a half years constitute my first term. The wise custom which limits the president to two terms regards the substance and not the form, and UNDER NO CIRCUMSTANCES WILL I BE A CANDIDATE FOR OR ACCEPT ANOTHER NOMINATION.—Theodore Roosevelt, Nov. 8, 1904.

I HAVE NOT CHANGED AND SHALL NOT CHANGE THAT DECISION THUS ANNOUNCED.—Theodore Roosevelt, Dec. 11, 1907.

I WILL ACCEPT THE NOMINATION FOR PRESIDENT IF IT IS TENDERED TO ME, and I will adhere to this decision until the convention has expressed its preference.—Theodore Roosevelt, Feb. 24, 1912.

NOTABLE TAFT ACHIEVEMENTS

FOR THE HOUSEWIFE

Vinegar's Various Uses.

A little vinegar added to the water in which fish is boiled will remove the strong oily taste.

When added to the water in which fowl is boiled vinegar tends to make the flesh more tender.

If beefsteak is tough rub it with vinegar, let it stand for a few hours, and you will regard your butcher more kindly.

A little vinegar added to butter and sugar is an excellent remedy for hoarseness.

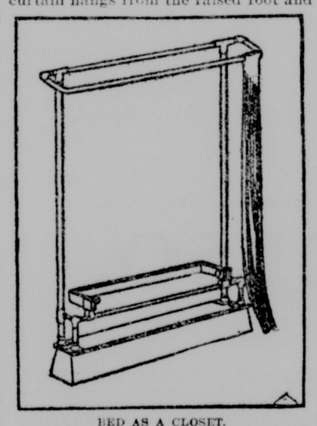
When tired and nervous have some one rub the back of the neck and temples with vinegar and water mixed. It will prove most refreshing.

Vinegar burned in a sickroom or wherever there is a disagreeable stuffy odor will give the room a pleasant aromatic fragrance.

Cleaning Furs.

A method of cleaning furs which is as excellent as it is easy is to clean them with bran.

Fill a dishpan with bran and set it in the oven to warm. Rub the warm bran into the fur again and again until every spot has been gone over several times.



When the bran becomes soiled throw it away and replace it. When the furs are clean brush them well until every particle of bran has been removed. Hang out of doors for a day or two, and the fur will be soft, fluffy and full of life.

Custard Potatoes.

Mash potatoes without milk, simply putting in pepper, salt and butter. Now put through a potato sieve (or a colander will answer for the purpose), leave the flakes as they fall and pour over them an egg beaten with a gill of milk. Bake for about fifteen minutes. When put through the sieve let drop into an earthen dish that will stand the heat and can be sent to the table just as baked. If more than six potatoes are cooked more milk and egg will be needed.

Metal Folding Bed.

In view of the popularity of the metal bed it was only a question of time when there should be metal folding beds. It was an Indiana man who designed the example of the latter shown in the cut herewith. This bed consists of a base on which the framework stands upright when not in use for sleeping purposes. A curtain hangs from the raised foot and not only conceals the furniture, but provides a sort of screen behind which clothing may be hung on the wall if space is much needed. The whole is held in an upright position by clamps which engage the fulcrum rod and the standards. By loosening these clamps the bed is released and may be let down to the floor, a crossbar at the foot keeping it the proper height. The bed is pivoted to the base at the head, and the base acts as a support for this end. It will be readily noted that one of these metal folding beds has the advantage of being easy to keep clean, and there is no danger of a powerful spring closing it as you lie sleeping.

Ham Darioles.

Chop fine enough cold ham to fill a cup, one-quarter cupful of sifted bread-crumbs, the yolks of two hard boiled eggs passed through a sieve, two tablespoonfuls of melted butter, one-quarter teaspoonful each of salt and paprika, two beaten eggs and one-half cupful of milk. Bake in pattypans, mixture to be three-quarters of an inch thick in the pans. Cook on several folds of paper and surrounded with boiling water until firm in center. Unfold on rounds of toast and set a poached egg on top.

Oyster Cocktails.

Stir together a tablespoonful each of tomato catchup and lemon juice, one-half tablespoonful of grated horseradish, one-half tablespoonful of vinegar, a saltspoonful of salt, one-half tablespoonful of worcestershire sauce and six drops of tabasco sauce. Set on the ice until very cold. Put six small oysters into glasses, which should be set in the middle of a plate or crushed ice, and pour into the glasses the chilled sauce.

Pear Honey.

Reserve the juice from cooked pears and boil it with cinnamon bark. Before placing it in the jar boil a fourth teaspoonful of cream of tartar in each half gallon of juice. It prevents the sirup from crystallizing. This is a rich sirup to serve with breakfast cakes.

Washing Windows.

When washing windows put a few drops of turpentine in the water and you will be able to dry them much quicker, and they will be clear and bright.

Humor and Philosophy

By DUNCAN M. SMITH

TIMELY HINT.

WE meant
To speak of it sooner.
So careless
In us to overlook it!
You'll forgive us,
Won't you?
That's a dear.
In the busy
Rush of life
We sometimes grow careless
And neglect
Our obvious
And most important duties.
Of course
It slipped our mind.
That goes
Without saying.
We do not offer
That
As an excuse;
Just as an explanation.
There is no excuse
For such
A palpable oversight.
True.
We have been so busy
Getting a living,
Preparing for vacation,
Giving advice
To the weather man,
Reading the tariff bill,
Working in the garden,
Looking at airships
And performing other
Imperative duties
That we have overlooked
And neglected
Matters of moment.
However,
Better late than never,
So
Here goes!
Everybody listen
And heed this word of wisdom.
'Tis this:
Buy your Christmas presents early.

Very Nifty.

We notice a new style of humor that has broken loose in the eastern fun-making magazines. It is so deep and subtle that not every reader can tumble to it at first, but after they do we presume their sides shake with laughter. We hope it will become popular, as we could write it all day with our eyes shut. Here is the idea:

Tea is usually served in a teacup.

A debt may be paid with money.

Pants are worn by men.

To ride on a railroad train buy a ticket and get aboard.

Ice put in water will cool the same.

When hungry, eat.

Isn't it too cute for anything?

Learning Young.

"Ma, what is a pippin?"

"A kind of fruit."

"It ain't either."

"What makes you think so?"

"Pa saw one the other day when we were out walking, and there wasn't any fruit store near."

"That'll cost your pa a new dress."

Worse Still.

Preserve me from the candid man.
But, oh, let me keep shady
When somewhere in the neighborhood
Appears the candid lady!

Felt Heavier.

"Strange that a pound of lead should weigh no more than a pound of feathers."

"Doesn't it?"

"Certainly not."

"Have some one hit you with a pound of each and see."

Quite Appropriate.

"What is she going to name her twins?"

"She is thinking of calling them both William."

"What's the idea?"

"Aren't they a double Bill?"

A Spur.

"Just at this point the explorer got cold feet."

"I suppose he stopped right there."

"No; he pushed on. Cold feet are normal in north pole discoverers."

Useful Information.

"He insulted a pugilist and made a great discovery."

"What was it?"

"That he had a solar plexus."

Easy.

If bound to get some trouble
By either hook or crook
You always know before you start
You won't have far to look.

HINTS FOR FARMERS

System In Horse Breeding.

It might be hard to put one's finger on the greatest defect in horse breeding on the farms of this country, but perhaps nothing is doing more to keep the business back than the lack of a definite system on the part of many farmers, says the National Stockman and Farmer. This lack of system is responsible for the great mixing of types and breeds, which means inevitably the production of mongrels. Every farmer who raises horses should make up his mind to follow some system in his breeding. It does not matter so much what type or breed of horses he may select. Whatever serves his purpose best on his farm and brings him a fair price for the surplus is a good system. Farm mares, those used in farm work, can raise colts cheaper than any breeder who has to keep a lot of idle mares can raise them, and they can be just as good whether they are of trotting, carriage or draft blood. The mares won't look so nice, and perhaps the foals will not develop quite so fast, but the economy of their production will offset other disadvantages. The farmer who uses his brood mares and his colts when old enough to do his work can raise good ones if he gets the right type and sticks to it, and he can raise them cheap enough to make money on them.

Feeding For Eggs.

The morning feed of mixed whole grain, consisting of wheat, corn, oats or any good grain to be had is scattered in the straw of the scratch shed, writes an Iowa poultrywoman in the Western Poultry Journal. Here the hens will work, contented and happy, through the cold winter days, when the snow keeps them in. About the middle of the afternoon I feed a mash of two-thirds wheat bran and one of middlings and cracked corn. To this I add all table scraps and enough hot water or milk to make a crumbly mass. The hens always relish this feed. During the short winter days I feed but twice, but there is always something to be found in the scratching material if they are hungry enough to work for it. For green feed I give them second crop clover hay, mangel wurzels, small potatoes, cabbage or any other vegetables I can get. The poultry have oyster shells, grit, wheat bran, charcoal and beef scraps always before them in small hoppers fastened to the fall of the shed. There is one thing more that I cannot dispense with, and that is my bone cutter. By the aid of this machine all scraps of meat and bones can be reduced to very profitable food, and there is nothing that will start the hens to laying quicker. During freezing weather I give warm water.

About Testing Cows.

The tests we want are the ones made with normal feeding, whether for one week or one year, writes a New York dairyman in Kimball's Dairy Farmer. Personally I want both. A week's test will show the capacity of the cow, and a year's test will show the ability of the man as a feeder. With proper feeding there is little danger of injuring the offspring. The first thing I look for when reading a test is the amount and kind of feeds fed; then I can tell whether the cow is a paying proposition or not. A cow that eats a dollar's worth of feed to produce a dollar's worth of butter is of little value, even though she produces twenty pounds of butter per week. What prospective purchasers want and are entitled to is what your cow has done for a year in milk according to the test, what feeds were fed and what kind of care was given. Don't pamper, don't stuff, but don't be afraid to feed. There are thousands of cows ruined by underfeeding where one is spoiled by overfeeding.

The Brood Sow.

On every farm there is a good deal of waste from different sources, writes D. J. Blyther in Kimball's Dairy Farmer. A brood sow offers a very profitable market for all this, even to the weeds from the garden.

It is a good plan when a sow of good type proves herself a prolific breeder and an economical feeder and kind mother to keep her several years.

A mature sow requires only food for maintenance, while a growing one needs food for growth. Furthermore, the older one will have a good appetite for waste that a young one would not care for.

It is worth considerable to know that at farrowing time, if you do not happen to be around, your pigs are safe, while with an untried young sow you never know what is going to happen to the pigs.

Fattening Fowls.

Buckwheat meal is very good to use in fattening chickens, but should be used in preference mixed, half of its bulk of other meal, choice being given to cornmeal or ground oats. To fatten a fowl you should commence doing so exactly eighteen days before the fowl or fowls are needed for killing or for marketing, as after eighteen days of fattening they begin to lose flesh instead of gaining it.—A. V. Meersch in Western Poultry Journal.

Protect the Grindstone.

A grindstone should never be left exposed to the sun. The weight of the handle will always cause one portion of the stone to remain uppermost, and this from exposure will reach a different degree of hardness from the underside, so that after awhile the stone will be ground out of circle. If the stone has to stand in the open a flat box can easily be obtained to serve as a cover.

THE COST OF LIVING PROBLEM.

President Taft's message to Congress, in which he calls attention to consular reports concerning the increase in the costs of living throughout the world, may be classed as a campaign document, for it is not probable that in the gathering of this information the advantage to the present administration of having it known that the increase is not confined to this country alone was lost sight of. It is entirely proper and just, however, that the facts—assuming that they are correct—should be used in this manner, and certainly the public at large is too intelligent and well-informed to believe that the increase in the cost of living is attributable altogether to causes for which the administration is responsible, of that legislation alone might serve to overcome the tendency of living expenses to increase. It would be futile to deal with this problem as one of politics purely, and to expect the solving of it simply by a change of party control would lead only to disappointment. In having information concerning the methods and accomplishments of cooperative associations which have been struggling with the problem collected by consular officers. President Taft has done a good service, and has proceeded along a line upon which the movement to bring about a more equitable relation between incomes and expenses must proceed if it is to accomplish any really beneficial results—the determination of actual facts, both as to conditions and as to causes.

MARYLAND FARM PRODUCTS UP

Secretary Wilson's Reports Show Prices Lower in 1902.

A steady advance in the price of the necessites of life that has more than kept pace with the advance in the wages paid the laborer, characterizes the condition of Maryland farms, according to a report on the farm products of the State, issued by Secretary of Agriculture Wilson Monday.

In 1902 the average farm laborer in Maryland secured $12.67 per month, with board included. In 1911 he received $14.10 per month, with board—an advance of $1.43. Without board he, in 1902, received $19.71, as compared to the $22 he now receives.

The average wages paid for labor in the harvest fields in Maryland in 1902, without board, was $1.38 per day. In 1911 the harvest fields in Maryland in 1902, without board. With board, the rate in 1911 was $1.20, as compared to $1.14 in 1902.

The average value of Maryland productions on March 1 last was wheat, at 94 cents a bushel, as compared to 91 cents a year ago. Corn was selling at 70 cents a bushel, as compared to 56 cents on March 1, 1911. Oats were selling at 50 cents, as compared to a year ago. Maryland potatoes are today worth $1.14 a bushel. A year ago they were selling for 49 cents a bushel. Hay is now selling at an average price of $28.80 a ton, as compared to the $15 a ton price that it brought March 1, 1911. Maryland rye is selling at 81 cents a bushel, as compared to 68 cents on March 1, 1911. The average price of butter in Maryland was, on March 1, 29 cents a pound, A year ago, the average price was 27 cents a pound.

Maryland eggs were selling for 26 cents a dozen on March 1, as compared to the 19-cent price that they brought a year ago.

Maryland chicken has proved the sole exception to the rise of the necessities of life. Chicken is now selling at 13 cents a pound in Maryland, or exactly 1 cent a pound less than the fowls brought in March, 1911.

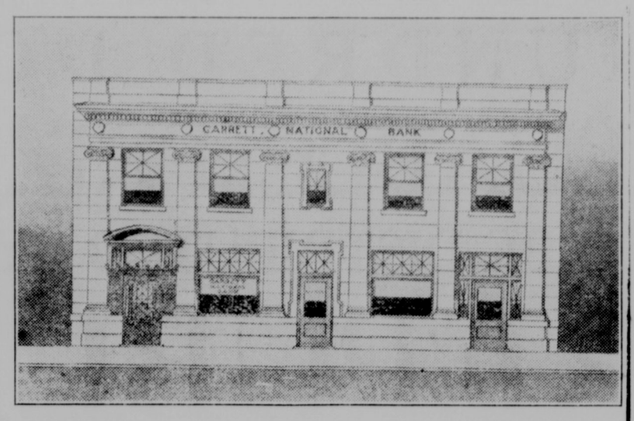
DOINGS AT ANNAPOLIS, THE SEAT OF GOVERNMENT

Women of Loch Lynn May Be Given the Franchise.



STATE HOUSE, ANNAPOLIS, March 20. —Notwithstanding the decision of the Maryland General Assembly that the women of the State shall not vote, at lease for some time, an effort if being made to extend the franchise to the ladies of a certain section of Garrett county. A bill introduced on Friday last by Delegate Weimer, of Garrett county, while plain, common-place and demure so far as its title is concerned, will, if passed by the Legislature, extend to the ladies of a portion of Garrett county the right and privilege to vote. And the bill goes even further than this. Not only will they be entitled to vote, but they may vote by proxy. That is if they do not care to go to the polls, they may delegate the power to their husbands to do so for them. The bill is an amendment to the charter of the town of Loch Lynn Heights, and makes three notable innovations in the government of that thriving and enterprising town. First, the election for town officers—Mayor, Clerk, Treasurer, Tax Collector and a Chief Bailiff—is to be held on the first Monday in March of each year, except in 1912, when the election this year will be held on the first Monday in May, and these officers elected in May of 1912, shall serve until the first Monday in March, 1913, when another election will be held to fill said offices, and the first Monday in March annually thereafter, the term of all officers to be for one year, or until their successors are elected and qualified; and at the said annual elections they shall also elect two Councilmen to serve for three years, and two Councilmen who shall be elected in May, 1912, and who shall serve until the first Monday in March, 1915, the term of the present holdover Councilmen, B. L. Hardesty and Levi Hewitt, shall expire on the first Monday in March, 1913, and T. B. Doman and L. W. Ream the first Monday March, 1914. The Mayor and Council are to appoint election judges and clerks, designate a place for holding said electons and give ten days' notice.

The second innovation is that of giving a vote "to all persons (this includes women as well as men) who own property in said Loch Lynn Heights, and are of the age of 21 years and upwards, and who have resided within the corporate limits of said town for six months immediately preceding any election for officers, and who are assessed with said property and paying taxes thereon." And the same section provides another remarkable feature, that of giving the women the right of vote by proxy. The amendment stipulates that "any married woman qualified to vote in said town as aforesaid, may delegate such right in writing to her husband, and such husband shall be entitled to cast said vote instead of his wife upon presentation to the Judges of Election said writing, however, that said husband is not qualified and does not vote at said election in his own right." In other words, the law permits one of them—either the husband or the wife—to vote, but not both of them but if the female voter be unmarried or a widow she shall vote herself and cannot delegate her right by proxy to vote.

The third extension of the rights and powers of the Mayor and City Councilmen of the town of Loch Lynn Heights, authorizes the said Mayor and Council, and gives them the power, "to pass all such ordinances as necessary to regulate animals running at large in said town, by impounding said animal, and if the owner thereof is known, to impose a fine on said owner for allowing or permitting said animal or animals to run at large; and if the the owner or owners thereof is not known, or being known, refuses to pay said fine, then to sell said animal or animals at public auction, after reasonable notice," etc.

This bill has attracted considerable interest in the House by those who have become familiar with its provisions, with special reference to the section giving to women the right to vote, and of married women the right to delegate that right to her husband. It is not certain that the bill will pass, as it has not received the endorsement of the entire Garrett county delegation. The bill, after it was introduced by Delegate Weimer, was referred to the Garrett Delegation, and until Messrs. Lawton and Long have considered the matter, together with Delegate Weimer and Senator Speicher, the fate of the proposition will be unknown. Although introduced by Delegate Weimer, that gentleman was not sufficiently familiar with the bill to discuss it or to determine what his attitude on it will be, and he will wait until the whole representation from Garrett county have discussed it and outlined a plan of action. Woman suffrage in any guise is not popular at this session of the Legislature, and while the bill may eventually receive the endorsement of the Garrett delegates through a favorable report, there is the danger of meeting with strong opposition from those members who have gone on record against woman suffrage when the bill comes out of the committee.

Garrett National Bank Building

Above we present an excellent engraving of the building recently completed for the Garrett National Bank on Second street.

It will be impossible to give an adequate description of the interior of the edifice. It is finished in mahogany and marble, with rubber and cork floors, the arrangement being so perfect that the maximum amount of work may be done in the least possible time.

In the rear of the banking room a very beautifully arranged directors' room is located, which is reached through an open archway while adjoining it, but commanding a view of the banking room through another but larger archway is the book keepers' department. The cashier's desk is to the right of the door way as one enters the building.

The officials take great delight in showing the depositors through the various rooms.

Friday night Delegate Weimer's bill fixing the exemption from attachement of wages and hire in Garrett county to 75 per cent., allowing 25 per cent. to remain attachable, was unfavorably reported by the House Judiciary committee, and, in the absence of Mr. Weimer, the unfavorable report was adopted, thus killing the bill. Just what action, if any, Mr. Weimer would have taken had he been present, is not known, and in his absence, not having left any instructions with his colleagues, the other members of the Garrett Delegation did not know what to do in the matter, and allowed the motion to adopt the unfavorable report to pass.

Senator Zihlman on Thursday introduced a bill in the Senate regulating the sale of cocaine and certain other drugs and patent medicines in the State.

Delegate Metzger's bill, appropriating $25,000 for improvements to the State Normal School at Frostburg, passed the House on Thursday, and passed the Senate at Saturday morning's session. It will now be engrossed for the Governor's signature.

Senator Zihlman's bill, appropriating a sum of money for the burial of deceased indigent soldiers and marines in the State, passed the House. It has already passed the Senate.

Senator Speicher's bill providing for the special school tax for Garrett county, which has previously passed the Senate has passed the House and will be engrossed for the Governor's signature.

Delegate Huster, of Allegany county, has introduced two companion bills making valid certain mortgages and similar papers that had been erroneously acknowledged in other States, but which had been made of record in Maryland.

Delegate Hargett, of the Frederick Delegation, has introduced a joint resolution petitioning Congress to pass the bill offered by the Hon. David J. Lewis, in the House of Representatives, to reimburse the city and citizens of Frederick for damages done during the Civil War by Federal troops, which was referred to the Committee on Federal Relatious.

The State-wide "Plumbing Inspector" bill introduced by Delegate Duckworth, of Allegany county, has been reported favorably by the committee on Hygiene, and has been passed to the third reading file in the House.

Senator Zihlman's "Pawnbroker" bill for Allegany county passed the Senate Saturday morning, as did also his bill fixing the maximum rate for telephone service rentals in Allegany county.

Senator Speicher's bill incorporating the Garrett County Railway Company, was given its third reading and final passage in the Senate Saturday morning.

Delegate Herpic's bill authorizing the placing of flags on all public school houses in Allegany county has passed the House and has gone to the Senate, where it was referred to a committee of which Senator Zihlman is chairman.

Municipal ownership of lighting plants seems to be the order of the day. Delegate Huster has introduced a bill empowering the Mayor and Councilmen of Cumberland to establish an electric lighting plant, and Delegate Wittig, by request of a petition from many business men and citizens has offered a similar bill to empower the Frostburg City Council to establish its own lighting system.

It is practically certain that Bill No. 41, known as the "Infant Eight-Hour Bill," to which attention was called recently in this correspondence, will not be heard from again this session. As soon as the real purport of the measure became known, together with the dangerous character of its provisions, protests began coming in from all quarters, with the result that Chairman Wright, of the House committee on Labor, to which the bill was referred, told the Republican's correspondent the other day that it had been decided not to take any action on the bill and therefore, it will not even be reported by the committee. The great injury to all industries and factories, as well as to employes themselves, that would result from its enactment made this bill particularly dangerous and vicious, and the putting of it to sleep in the pigeon-hole of the committee will meet with general approval.

Delegate Wittig has introduced a bill making the mine inspectors for Allegany and Garrett counties elective instead of appointive. The candidates for Mine Inspecter will be nominated as all the other county officers are nominated, and the first election will take place on the first Monday in November, 1913, and they will hold office from May 1, 1914, for two years. Candidates are required to measure up to the qualifications specified in the old law to be eligible, and the salaries are fixed at $1,500 a year, payable monthly, in each county.

Delegate Wittig's bill carrying an appropriation for $25,000 for the establishing of a Miners' Hospital at Frostburg, has been reported favorably by the House Ways and Means committee, and it is now on the third reading file. It is believed it will pass the House and go to the Senate this week, where Senator Zihlman will keep it on the move.

A companion bill to Senator Herpic's flag bill for Allegany county has been introduced in the House by Delegate Wittig. It is a bill "to provide for the reading of the Holy Bible (St. James Version) in each and every public school in Allegany county, at the opening of said schools each morning." A penalty of a fine of from $1 to $10 in specified for violation.

With the end of the 1912 session drawing to a close the work of the General Assembly is piling up, and the time lost during the early weeks is being felt. Last week, and so far this week, three sessions are held by each House daily, and it is believed both Houses will sit on Saturday of this week, and next Saturday's session, March 30, may run away into Sunday by the turning back of the legislative clock, thus keeping the proceedings all within Saturday, March 30. Thus sessions may be continued all through Sunday and Sunday night, and continuous sessions on Monday, April 1. The time for introducing bills expires today, and the work thereafter will be confined to committee reports, second readings and passage of bills. The big bills have all been allowed to wait for the last two weeks of the session, and every local delegation will have to be on the alert if they succeed in having their local measures all disposed of. Allegany and Garrett counties will not suffer much from this handicap as they have kept track of their bills and know how to get them, first, from the committee, and then from the files. The remaining days of the session will be of exceptional interest and energy, and the real record of the General Assembly will be made within the next two weeks.

Delegate Lawton has introduced a bill asking for an appropriation of $100,000 for a tuberculosis sanitorium to be located in Garrett county, $75,000 of which will be used for a site and building, and $25,000 for maintenance. Eudowood, which is doing such a grand and good work for White Plague sufferers, is over crowded, and there are hundreds now awaiting admission who cannot be accommodated. The climate and environment of Garrett county are peculiarly adapted for the treatment of tuberculosis and the need of additional facilities is recognized by everyone. It it contended that money to any amount is well spent when applied to the stamping out of this scourage and the alleviation of the sufferings of its victims. While it is a little late in the session for the introduction of bills carrying appropriations as large as this one, it is, nevertheless, believed that the merits of the case will appeal so strongly to the committee on Ways and Means that a favorable report will be speedily forthcoming, and the bill hurried through. Already there are many supporters of this bill as it is intended for such a noble and humane purpose.

His mother was Miss Mary Kennedy, of Norfolk, a daughter of Commodore Kennedy, who was presented a sword by the State of Maryland for gallantry in the War of 1812 and for meritorious conduct in the encounter with the Tripolitan pirates.

Dr. Goldsboroug was married in 1878 to Miss Mary Coyle, daughter of the late Fitzhugh Coyle, of Washington, who survives. He leaves six children, as follows: Miss Julia F. Goldsborough and Miss Mary Goldsborough of Washington; Mrs. William F. Stedman, wife of the American Vice-Consul at Nottingham, England; Edward R. Goldsborough, of Elkridge, Md.; Tilghman Goldsborough, of Washington, and William F. Goldsborough, a student at the University of Virginia.

The funeral was held Saturday afternoon and interment in Oak Hill Cemetery, Washington.

Dr. Goldsborough did not confine the field of his activities strictly to the practice of medicine. He became widely known as an author, and it was his pen that wrote the renowned "Old Marse and Old Miss" and "Ezra and Other Sketches."

In St. Paul's M. E. church Sunday night Rev. Dr. A. B. Riker, the pastor, who attended the "Billy" Sunday meetings in Wheeling last week, gave his congregation a sample of how "Billy" conducts his meeting and how plain English is used by him in driving home facts in the minds of his auditors. Mr. W. A. After making a study of all the parcels post bills now pending before Congress, Representative Lewis, of Maryland, father of the proposition to take over the express companies and convert them into parcels post carriers, finds that the systems now under consideration do not help the farmer in any way. "I feel that I can say truthfully that these bills, if passed, will prove the greatest 'fake' upon the people ever inflicted. Furthermore, the express companies will welcome them as giving them a new lease of power to maintain their present absurd rates."

For the past week or more a corps of B. & O. engineers have been engaged in Oakland making surveys, the purpose of which is not disclosed, resulting in a vast amount of surmising on the part of our residents. Some, who claim to speak with authority assert that the purpose of the survey is to establish a new route through Oakland for the lines of the company, while others, speaking with the same degree of authority, say that the survey is preliminary to the work of raising the two bridges in town under which the road of the Company now passes. Either or neither may be correct.

The local camp Woodmen of the World, at a meeting held a few nights ago, determined to accept a proposition from the Knights of Pythias to become tenants in common with the latter organization of the lodge room located in the new K. of P. building. The first meeting of the W. O. W. will be held on Monday night, April 1st, in the new quarters, and on the first Monday night of each succeeding month. The Woodmen lodge is a benevolent-insurance organization and has a large membership throughout the country. Its rates of insurance are extremely low, being less than half those charged by the old line of insurance companies.

Assemblyman E. A. Weimer spent Saturday and Sunday in Oakland with his family, returning to Annapolis Sunday night on train No. 4. Mr. Weimer's bill which proposes to give the people of the county a vote on the liquor question will not be reported out by the Intemperance Committe, to which it was arbitrarily referred by the speaker, until after the State-Wide Local Option bill has been disposed of by the House. In case the State-Wide bill passes no effort will be made to pass the local measure, but on the other hand should the statewide measure fail then the probabilities are that the report on the local bill by the committee will be unfavorable and the fight for its passage must then be made on the floor of the House.

Mr. Abraham Wilson, of Wilson Station, probably the oldest man in this section of Garrett county, spent Monday and Tuesday in Oakland on business Mr. Wilson was born July 11, 1815, and it is his proud boast that nearly everything animate on the face of the earth today was born since his advent into the world. He has also witnessed the introduction of the steam railway, the telegraph as well as all other electric appliances, labor saving machinery on the farm and in the factory, the rise and fall of empires and republics and the evolution of the world and methods of business and industry. While his age nearly approaches the century mark he is well preserved in all his faculties except that of hearing, which is somewhat affected.

K. OF P. HOUSEWARMING.

Event Celebrated Last Friday Night by a Banquet.

Last Friday night marked an epoch in the history of the local lodge Knights of Pythias, the occasion being the housewarming of the new home of the local organization, which will long be remembered by those whose good fortune it was to be present.

The lodge met in the spacious room built and especially equipped for it, with about seventy members present. After the regular routine of business had been transacted the lodge in a body adjourned to the banquet hall, adjoining the lodge room, where tables had been prepared for seventy-five. The menu consisted of cold meats, salads, ice cream, cake, coffee, etc.

Following the banquet speeches on the principles of the organization were delivered by Mr. G. Semmes Hamill, Mr. J. C. Renninger and Mr. A. T. Matthews. Dr. Henry W. McComas was toastmaster and presided with grace and dignity.

Good fellowship prevailed and a most enjoyable evening was spent by those in attendance.

A Tremendous Freight Wreck.

Sunday afternoon about two o'clock a west-bound freight train composed of two engines of the large class and fifty-three empty coal cars, was wrecked at a point about one-half mile east of the Mountain Lake Park station owing to a broken rail and as a result sixteen of the cars were badly wrecked, the track torn up for several hundred feet and traffic delayed several hours. Both the Piedmont and Rowlesburg wrecking crews were called to clear the wreckage and it required two or three hours' steady and uninterrupted labor before one of the tracks was open. Four boys of the Park, who were riding one of the wrecked cars, had a narrow escape with their lives. The car upon which they were "passengers" was picked up bodily and flung from the track and landed high on the bank. One of the boys was thrown through a network of telegraph lines and landed in a swamp, while another was shunted thro the drop bottom of the car, all, however escaping without injury. Going to the wreck from Oakland on a helping engine Harry Martin was struck on the knee by a flying piece of wood and painfully injured and is still confined to his bed as a result.

O. H. S. Notes.

Miss Grant's musical recital which was given at the high school Thursday evening was well attended by the citizens of Oakland and the pupils of the high school. The girls of the domestic science classes were on hand with some excellent candy, which they sold without any trouble. They cleared $6.39 in this way.

The lecture given by Prof. Bender on last Monday evening was not very well attended. The people who did not attend have missed a very good musical program as well as the lecture. The selections by Miss Grant were greatly enjoyed. Mrs. Riker and Miss Hellice Rathbun rendered vocal solos in a very pleasing manner.

The Juniors are glad to welcome Helen Townshend in their class again

We are in correspondence with "Prof. Johnson Bane," who is a "concert guitarist," and will be likely to give a recital in connection with the high school in the near future. He comes here from Fairmont, where he is meeting with marked success. Students of violin and piano should hear this recital.

THE FLOWERS ON HER BONNET

How a Pink Geranium Made Trouble In a Church Society.

By CLARISSA MACKIE.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

Mrs. Wixon paused outside the church door and waited until two other women joined her; then the three made their way slowly down the path and out into the dusty road, where their plodding feet left a white cloud of dust in their wake.

Mrs. Wixon was short and stout and red of face, with iron gray hair, surmounted by a rusty black velvet turban, above which waggled a worn ostrich feather. Her antiquated cape was rusty, as was the black silk skirt she trailed.

Miss Luella Barton was tall and of a sallow complexion. Her gown was of better material and perhaps in a better state of preservation than that of her stout companion, but it was far from fresh or inviting.

"I'D LIKE TO SPEAK A FEW WORDS MYSELF."

Little Mrs. Peters skipped along beside the other women, a faded blue straw hat askew on her white hair. All three women wore exceedingly shabby shoes, and their garments seemed unsuitable for the hot June day. They had been the last ones to leave the church, and now they had the white, hot highway to themselves.

"Did you see it?" asked Mrs. Wixon breathlessly of her companions.

"I did," agreed Miss Barton acidly.

"And I," chirruped Mrs. Peters.

"I guess we'll have to call a special meeting, after all," murmured Mrs. Wixon, with a degree of relish in her tone.

"There ain't no use in having a society with rules to it if the rules ain't kept," snorted Miss Barton.

"My husband says a rule isn't a rule unless it is enforced," remarked Mrs. Peters importantly.

"We're going to enforce this one," said Mrs. Wixon decidedly. "Cornelia Rowland knows the rules of the Give It Up society of the First M. E. church just as well as you and me do. She knows she ought to wear her old bonnet, no matter how poor it looks, until the new organ is paid for."

"I guess it won't hurt Cornelia to give up buying flowers for ner hat any more'n it does for me to wear my Cousin Emmeline's castoff clothes," commented Luella Barton gloomily.

"No, indeed," chimed in Mrs. Peters, "or for me to wear this awful bonnet. I ain't accustomed to wearing blue anyhow, and"—

"'Tain't so much the wearing the clothes," interrupted Mrs. Wixon, tossing the thin feather majestically; "it's the principle of the thing. Here's Cornelia, one of the charter members of the society, coming out with pink flowers in her bonnet for the last two Sundays. She knew she was breaking the tenth rule, which says:

"'No member shall purchase any new garment or article of adornment for her person until the debt on the church organ has been fully met and paid.'" quoted Mrs. Peters eagerly.

"As I was about to say," remarked Mrs. Wixon in an injured tone.

"And there's still $50 due on the organ," commented Miss Barton as she took out a handkerchief saturated with Florida water and proceeded to dust her square shoulders energetically.

"I suppose it will be another year before we can have any new—that is, I suppose it will be another year before the debt will be paid," said Mrs. Peters moodily.

"Mary Peters, I do believe you are feeling bad because you can't go gallivanting around with pink flowers in your bonnet, too!" exclaimed Mrs. Wixon indignantly. "For my part," she continued virtuously, "I'm willing to wear my old clothes year in and year out for the Lord's sake."

"So am I," said Miss Barton. "I give $2 last winter that I was going to lay out on spring clothes."

"I guess I've done my share," whimpered Mrs. Peters angrily. "I guess I done all the cooking for the fair and give"—

"That ain't either here or there," interrupted Mrs. Wixon decidedly as she paused at her front gate. "The matter before the society will be this: Cornelia Rowland has bought new pink flowers for her bonnet and has wore 'em to church two Sundays. Last Sunday I spoke to her about it, and she said nothing and did nothing. Today she wore 'em again, and now we've got to take some action. That bunch of flowers never cost less than 50 cents."

"How do you know?" asked Luella.

"I went into Miss Kline's millinery store and asked to see pink geranium flowers, and she showed me a bunch just like Cornelia's, and it was 50 cents."

"Did Cornelia buy hers there?" asked the other women eagerly.

"I asked Miss Kline, and she wouldn't say. She's terrible close mouthed, you know."

"I know," nodded Mrs. Peters sagely. "When is the meeting to be?"

"Tomorrow afternoon, here, to my house," said Mrs. Wixon, "and I hope you'll both come. All the other members will be here and Cornelia too."

"We'll come," said the other women, moving along the road.

"Goodby!" said the president of the Give It Up society as she panted up the graveled walk.

"Is that Cornelia ahead?" asked Mrs. Peters, peering nearsightedly up the road.

"Yes," replied Luella Barton grimly. "She's just going in her gate."

"Cornelia's terrible dressy," sighed Mrs. Peters. "I always liked Cornelia Rowland, but I always thought she was fond of clothes."

"I've seen other people that's fond of clothes," sniffed Miss Barton, with a furtive glance at her friend.

"I suppose you mean me," retorted Mrs. Peters, with an offended laugh. "I don't care if I do like to look nice. My husband says I've looked so shabby the last year that he's ashamed to be seen with me on the street."

"I suppose that's why he spends so much time down to the postoffice," remarked Luella maliciously as she stalked into her front yard and closed the gate with a vicious snap.

Mrs. Peters did not reply. Her blue eyes grew watery, and her thin little nose turned a deep pink, but she did not weep. There were suppressed woe and anger in the look that followed Luella's gaunt form into the front door. Then Mary Peters trotted along home.

"Yes," said Mrs. Wixon, bustling about her small parlor hospitably the following afternoon; "we're all here except Cornelia Rowland herself. I expect she'll be here presently."

There was a murmur of approval among the assembled ladies who comprised the members of the Give It Up society. Seated about the stuffy little room they numbered about twenty-five in all. Without exception they were shabbily attired. Some were even slovenly in their dress, while many were neatly but poorly dressed; but, representing, as they did, a prosperous farming community, a stranger would have been surprised at the lack of taste or beauty in their garments. Even the younger women wore threadbare gowns.

"Here comes Cornelia," whispered Mrs. Peters from her seat in the front window.

There were a shifting of chairs and a buzzing undertone as the harsh bell clanged through the house.

Then Mrs. Wixon, with grave importance depicted on her round face, ushered into the room the erring member of the Give It Up society.

Cornelia Rowland was small and thin, with a straight back and a trim figure. She had meek brown eyes and soft brown hair parted over her smooth brow. Her skin was faded, with a few lines here and there. She wore a spotlessly clean white muslin dress, with a white ribbon belt, and her feet were shod with old fashioned black prunella gaiters. She wore no hat.

She nodded seriously to the assembled women and took a chair which Mrs. Nixon indicated. As she seated herself she found that she was confronting the members of the society, while Mrs. Wixon, as its president, was seated beside her in a huge Boston rocker.

They all rocked silently for a few seconds; then Mrs. Wixon got upon her feet and adjusted a pair of steel bowed spectacles upon her nose. The women were looking at Cornelia Rowland's fresh attire and whispering among themselves.

"Silence!" commanded Mrs. Wixon sharply. There was a rustle of protest among the members; then they settled themselves expectantly.

"We are gathered here this afternoon," continued the president gravely, "to consider the action of one of our members in breaking the tenth rule."

There was a murmur of approval.

"I will give in a few words the history of the Give It Up society, and then the members can agree upon whether Cornelia Rowland's behavior is becoming to a member."

"I guess I'd like to speak a few words for myself," said Cornelia Rowland, arising with unexpected spirit and fixing her mild eyes upon Mrs. Wixon's heated countenance.

"Anybody got any objection?" wheezed Mrs. Wixon, looking apprehensively about the room.

There was no answer, and Mrs. Wixon lurched into her chair, leaving the floor to Cornelia Rowland.

The latter faced the assembled women. There was an obstinate line about her pleasant mouth, and her soft eyes were a look of new determination. She fanned herself with a black silk fan for a few moments before she began, and then she closed it with a little click.

"I am a member of the Give It Up society," she said earnestly. "I can recite all the rules forward and backward, and I've lived up to all of 'em forward and backward. I ain't never broke a rule."

There was a gasp of horror from the women.

"I ain't never broke a rule," repeated Cornelia energetically. "Now, the Give It Up society was formed for the purpose of paying for the new organ. Nobody asked the ladies of the church to give up wearing any respectable clothes and going around looking like ragpickers' wives in order that the First M. E. church should have a new organ." Cornelia fixed an accusing eye upon Mrs. Wixon's startled countenance. "That organ could have been paid for if it was needed in the regular way by fairs and suppers and the like. But no; somebody with the idea of getting a martyr's crown organized this society, with the result that Upper Village has got the reputation of having the shabbiest looking lot of women in Suffolk county."

There was a shrinking of feet under chairs and a concealing of worn sleeves.

"I want to know if the members of the choir belong to this society?"

"No," piped Mrs. Peters, with a newly awakened sense of injury. "Catch them fine ladies a-wearing any old clothes for the Lord's sake!"

"I don't believe in churches a-buying organs and things they can't afford. When they can raise the money for a new organ or such without throwing the whole congregation into the poorhouse, it's time to have it. In the meantime the Lord will harken to the old melodeon until the church can afford an organ. But the Methodist church has bought the organ. The choir wanted it, and the minister wanted it, and the congregation wanted it, and now they've got it, and we're working hand and foot and eyelash a-trying to pay for it!" Cornelia's voice took on a dramatic quality, and the women listened eagerly.

"We said we'd pay for it, and we will do what we promised, and I say to all of you that while you're wearing these terrible old garments you might as well be clean and tidy about it and"—

"But that ain't explaining about the pink geraniums in your hat," interrupted Luella Barton sourly.

"That's so. If you ladies will follow me to my house I will explain about the pink flowers," replied Cornelia amiably.

There was some protest at this sudden adjournment of the meeting, but presently they all trailed down the road toward the small brown house where Cornelia Rowland lived by herself. Cornelia led the way with head erect and white skirts billowing in the breeze.

She led the way into the house and through the hall to the sunny sitting room. When they were all inside she left the room and returned with a small black bonnet in her hand.

"This is the bonnet," she said dryly, "that has caused all the trouble."

"Yes, yes, but you've taken the flowers off, Cornelia Rowland!" cried old Mrs. Beers fiercely.

"Look here," said Cornelia, turning to the widow. "This is where I get the flowers for my bonnet every Sunday, and they're a mite sweeter than any you can buy."

She indicated a large potted geranium which was covered with great pink, spicy blossoms.

There was a dead silence while the women stared first at Cornelia, then at the geranium and finally at the bonnet.

"I want to know!" ejaculated Mrs. Peters admiringly. "I guess I can do that myself and have a new flower every Sunday."

"I know you are all looking at my white dress," continued Cornelia pleasantly, "but if you'll look at it closely you will see it is made from the white muslin curtains that used to hang in my best bedroom. I had plenty of curtains, but no dress, and so I used them for that." She smoothed down the crisp folds thoughtfully and then looked at her guests with a bright smile.

"And now, ladies, you will see that in wearing the pink flowers in my bonnet I was not breaking a rule of the society."

"That's so," they agreed heartily, casting accusing glances at the unhappy president.

"And I want you all to stay and have tea with me," continued Cornelia, "and we'll plan an entertainment so's to pay off the church debt this summer. Then we can all have something decent to wear next winter."

So the members of the Give It Up society of the Methodist church sat down amicably together and ate of the delicious cooking of Cornelia Rowland, while the pink geranium graced the center of the table and shed beauty and perfume over all.

A MISTAKE IN THE MAN.

It Was Embarrassing, but It Turned Out Well.

By EDGAR P. YARDLEY.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

One summer I alighted from a stage at the entrance of a hotel beside a New Hampshire lake. There were several persons sitting on the porch, and one, a young girl, arose and advanced with a happy smile to meet me. If there is one thing I have always prided myself on it is keeping my equipoise when people speak to me whom I don't remember. I had no idea who the girl was, but did not propose to betray my ignorance. She put out her hand and put up her lips. Not to give her the expected kiss would have been a rudeness.

That was about as sweet a kiss as I ever enjoyed. Whether it was because her lips had a peculiar flavor to them, whether it was that it was unexpected or whether there was a natural predisposition in me for that particular girl I don't know. I only know that the softness of rose leaves is nothing to the exquisite sensation I experienced in the pressure of those lips.

"LOOKED ME SQUARE IN THE FACE."

Of course I was not so stupid as to speak first. I gave her that privilege and waited for a cue.

"What brought you so early?" were her first words.

"I found I could get away earlier than I expected."

"How did you leave Katherine?"

"Very well."

"Why, she hasn't recovered, has she?"

"I mean she's doing very well."

"Oh!"

"I think I'll go in and register, getting rid of the satchel at the same time. I'll be with you in one moment."

Entering the office, I found a clerk and asked if Miss —— I stumbled on the name.

"Miss Ellison?" supplied the clerk.

"Did she say anything about a room for me?"

"Yes, but she didn't expect you on this train. However, I can take care of you."

While we were talking I was running my eye back over registered names until I came to "Mrs. Montgomery Ellison, Miss Edith Ellison, Detroit." I didn't know a soul in Detroit, so I was now quite sure the young lady had mistaken me for some one else. I must let her down easy. It occurred to me that to put my name on the hotel register might betray the situation, so, the clerk turning to inspect his key rack, I left him without doing so and walked toward the door.

"Mr. Wardwell!" he called.

I turned.

"You have not registered."

"I will do so presently." And I walked out on to the porch and joined Miss Ellison.

My next move was to discover what relationship Mr. Wardwell bore to her. It was to be supposed that he was her lover, but I was not certain.

"You've changed a little since I saw you," she said.

"Do you think so? Let me see—how long is it?"

"Two years last month."

I wished to ask where we were when we parted and, above all, whether we were lovers. How could I frame a question to get this information without making a break?

"I'll bet you can't remember your last words," I said playfully, "on the day I left you."

"I can," she said—"'don't forget the candy.'"

"What a memory!"

"It was delicious. I almost made myself sick."

I was puzzled. Candy is sweet, but I fancied the last words of a young girl to her lover before parting for two years would have more depth to them.

"Well," I said, making another attempt to draw her out, "do you feel just the same as when we parted?"

"About what?"

"The most important thing you can think of."

"The most important thing I can think of?" she said musingly. "Oh, I know! No, indeed I don't feel the same about what was the most important thing to me at that time."

"Any change there?"

"Where?"

"Why, in what you have just mentioned."

"Yes, indeed! What was it we were talking about? Oh, yes! I'm so glad to see you that I can't think of anything else."

"Well, about this change of heart?"

"Change of heart?"

"Yes. Weren't you saying you've had a change of heart?"

"No! What put that into your head?"

"Oh, tell me about that most important thing to you!"

"The most important thing when you left; not now. Well, I was to have a new dress, and I was in a great quandary as to whether I'd have it made up with large or small sleeves. You know, then they had been wearing small sleeves so long that there was sure to be a change very soon."

I gave an impatient grunt. I was not getting on. Here was I playing the part of another not knowing whether that other was cousin, uncle, brother or lover. The situation was distressing.

"Do you mean to tell me," I said, "that your heart has had no emotional upheavals since I last parted with you?"

She turned and looked me square in the face. "Emotional upheaval!" she repeated. "Aren't those words both too big to be put together?"

"What I mean is does your heart occupy the same position it occupied two years ago, or has it changed?"

"You remember that position was equivocal."

"I understand that perfectly well, but an equivocal position may become a settled one."

"Well, then, I don't mind telling you that the position is settled. My mind is made up."

I was getting deeper in the mire rather than getting out of it. Every moment I dreaded lest I would be called upon to make some explicit statement that would give me away. I had taken a kiss from a stranger I had no right to take, and now I was piling up the sin by endeavoring to extract from that stranger her heart's secret. Nevertheless I pushed on.

"Well, what is the result?"

"That things are the same as they were before anything happened."

I was getting red in the face. Though the air was delightfully cool, I took out my handkerchief and mopped my face. Having lost my assurance, I began to fancy all kinds of unpleasant happenings. Another train might come in and bring the real Wardwell. I remembered that on consulting the railroad time table before starting there were two trains I might take fifty minutes apart. I took the first.

"I'm disappointed," said Miss Ellison.

"Disappointed! Why?" I asked.

"I don't believe you are glad to see me a bit."

"How can you say that? I was never happier in my life."

My looks belied my words. I was never more miserable.

"You seem to be bored rather than happy."

This was said with an expression of disappointment.

"What you mistake for being bored," I said, "is really pain. When I left you it was under certain conditions, known only to us two."

"And one other."

Another stumper.

"After an absence of two years isn't it natural that I should wish to know how those conditions now stand?"

In my agitation I had changed positions so often that my chair now faced the ladies sitting on the other end of the piazza. One of them gave me a bow or half a bow, as though fearful of not being recognized. Her face was familiar to me. I knew that I was acquainted with her, but I couldn't place her. I was also sitting with my back to the direction from which a stage was approaching. I heard the creak of wheels, but was too intent upon other matters to heed it. It stopped before the door. I turned in time to see a man who very much resembled myself coming up the steps. He stopped and stared at me. I stared at him. Miss Ellison burst into a laugh.

"Frank," she said, giving him a duplicate of the kiss she had given me, "this is Mr. Edwards. He came an hour ago, and I mistook him for you. Had not Mrs. Gordon, who knows him, told me when he went in to register who he is I should have continued to be deceived."

She looked at me and burst into another laugh. If I looked as I felt I must have resembled a man who had been tarred and feathered, ridden on a rail and then keelhauled. My legs would scarcely support me.

Then she kindly came to my rescue. The real Mr. Wardwell went inside to register, and Miss Ellison bade me be seated and said:

"Don't be troubled. It was my mistake, and you were led into it very naturally. Mr. Wardwell is my half brother. When I saw him last I was meditating accepting an offer of marriage. I declined it"—

"Thank God!"

"And this is the explanation," she continued, with a smile, "of what I was saying to you. But what is the 'thank God' for?" turning away her face and continuing the smile.

"For two things—first, that you declined the offer and, secondly, that Mr. Wardwell is your half brother instead of your lover."

"This is quite too much," she said, rising, "for an hour's acquaintance. You should speak to Mrs. Gordon."

I left that hotel engaged.

THE SPORTING WORLD

Wootton, Great English Jockey.

It is said that Jockey F. Wootton, who nosed out Danny Maher as leading English horse pilot of 1909, will ride the horses of W. K. Vanderbilt on the English tracks next season. The report states that Vanderbilt is to give the youngster the snug sum of $25,000 for his services.

Wootton is fifteen years old and made an astounding record by riding more than 100 winners. His younger brother, Stanley, has beaten him in many hard races. W. Higgs, an Irishman, finished third, with over 100 wins.

International Polo.

An international polo contest will be seen at Saratoga, N. Y., during the racing season next summer. Harry Payne Whitney has invited the famous Hurlingham polo team of England, from whom Whitney's team wrested the challenge cup last summer, to come over and try to win the cup back again. The British team has accepted, and some stirring matches at this aristocratic game are assured. It is generally understood that the same Meadowbrook aggregation that Whitney headed in England will defend the cup.

Saratoga has one of the best equipped polo fields in the country. The field is lightning fast, and this insures a classy polo series. The matches will be played while racing is in progress.

Trap Shooting Team to Athens.

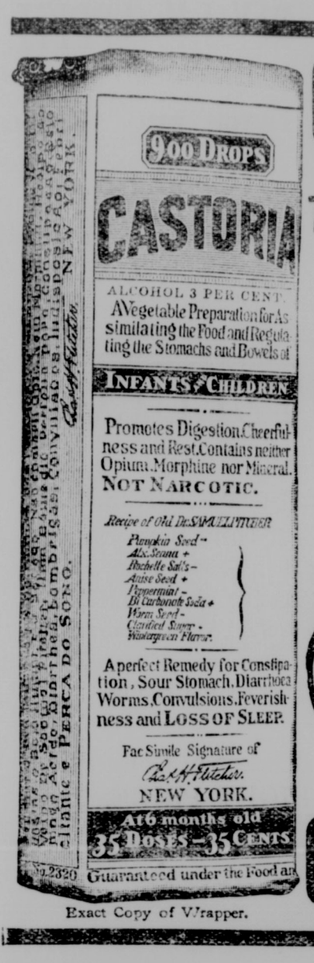
America will have a representative team of amateur trap shooters at the Olympic games in Athens next year, according to a resolution adopted by the Interstate Association For the Encouragement of Trap Shooting in New York recently.

Tom Marshall, mayor of Keithsburg, Ill., was authorized to pick the team. The Grand American handicap for 1910 will be held in Chicago next June, the Eastern handicap at Philadelphia in July, the Southern handicap at Columbus, Ga., in May; the Western handicap in Des Moines, Ia., in August and the Pacific Coast handicap at Seattle early in September.

Gould to Race In France.

Frank Gould is establishing a racing stable in France, where he will compete with other American millionaires who have been so successful on the French turf. Recently he concluded the purchase of the horse Gavero from the French banker Lazams, and later six more horses were placed in the Maison Lafite as the nucleus of his stable, with which he hopes to win some big French prizes. Since he visited Paris Mr. Gould has been much interested in racing, and he has never missed a meeting.

Western Intercollegiate Alliance.



The Western Intercollegiate Conference Athletic association ("big eight") made a one year alliance with the Missouri valley conference at the annual meeting of the former body recently. This is an athletic movement under which the two organizations will be able to schedule games. The Missouri valley conference is composed of Iowa, Kansas, Missouri, Nebraska, Ames, Drake and Washington (St. Louis) universities.

Michigan Out Again In 1910.

Coach A. A. Stagg's prediction that the proposed meeting of the "big eight" coaches would fall through came true when it was announced at the University of Chicago that the session had been called off. The indications are that the western schools will drop the Michigan question and allow the present intercollegiate organization to continue for another year.

One Thing Americans Can't Get.

Lord Lonsdale's championship belts that are being offered in England are emblematic of the different pugilistic titles can be competed for only by British boxers. A stranger can box for the title, but he does not get the belt if he wins.

THE CONSANGUINITY OF THE HUMAN RACE

God Determined In Advance the Bounds of the Nations.

Pastor Russell Finds Great Changes Imminent Amongst the People of the World—The Barriers of Language Yielding Because of the Approach of the Divinely Appointed Times.

PASTOR RUSSELL

London, March 17.—London Tabernacle was crowded today to greet Pastor Russell. Behind him on the rostrum were the six other members of the Foreign Missions Investigation Committee, viz., Gen. W. P. Hall, United States Army; Prof. F. H. Robison, Dr. L. W. Jones, Mr. J. T. D. Pyles, Mr. E. W. V. Kuehn and Mr. R. B. Maxwell, all of the United States.

His text was: "God hath made of one blood all nations of men, for to dwell upon the face of the earth; and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitations, that they should seek the Lord, if haply they might feel after Him and find Him." (Acts xvii, 26, 27.) He said:—

My text is taken from Saint Paul's address to the Athenians, whom he found so religious that they had erected an idol to every known deity, and then one prominently "to the unknown God." The words of my text have been repeatedly borne in upon my mind in my sojournings of the past four months. I marveled as I perceived the thoroughness of the division of the human family as a result of the confusion of language.

Conditions Now Changing.

It should not surprise us to find at this time great changes imminent amongst the peoples of the whole world. The bounds of human habitation and the barriers of language are rapidly yielding because of the times of Divine appointment which have been reached, the period mentioned in Daniel's prophecy as "The Time of the End." (Daniel xii, 4.) And here we must remind you afresh that The Time of the End does not mean the end of time. It merely signifies the time for the ending of the present order of things, that a New Order, the Messianic Kingdom, may be substituted. Twenty-five centuries ago God determined this time and gave us four important proofs by which to identify it.

(1) The first sign of The Time of the End was to be, "Many shall run to and fro." How wonderfully this prophecy is fulfilled before our eyes today! Its fulfilment has been in progress, especially, for fifty years, and it is less than eighty years since the first locomotive was built. The nations, first separated by diverse languages, have kept well within the bounds of their habitations until now; suddenly we have a running to and fro in fulfilment of this prophecy which is amazing! The various nations and languages are being scattered all over the earth.

(2) The next step in the prophecy marking The Time of the End of this Age is, "Knowledge shall be increased." The general increase of education amongst all classes is a logical result of the commingling of humanity and the lessons of comparison and competition being learned. Suddenly, as though in obedience to the Divine command, nation after nation has made schooling free; and more, have made it compulsory; and this spirit is spreading to Oriental lands. The whole world is waking up! Personal rights and national rights are everywhere being discussed. The schools of India are said to be turning out a million graduates in the English language every year. The Chinese also are introducing English schools. What will be the results? Enlightenment? Yes! Godliness? No! Contentment? No! Dissatisfaction, war, strife, anarchy, are coming to the world by leaps and bounds, as a result of general education and the breath of liberty, because not backed by reverence for God and His will.

Those Days Will Be Shortened.

(3) The third item indicative of The Time of the End of this Age is: "The wise shall understand;" not the worldly-wise, but those wise toward God. And so we find it today. While the great and the learned and the masses are rapidly drifting into heathenish darkness, away from the Bible, God's saintly few, of every nation and denomination, are gradually seeing more clearly the teachings of the Scriptures.

(4) As a result of the fulfilments of Nos. 1 and 2, we see nearing us, portentously, No. 4: "There shall be a time of trouble such as never was since there was a nation." That time of trouble is now looming up on the horizon of every nation. It comes in the wake of an unsanctified knowledge. It would mean the utter wreck of all civilization were it not for the interposition of the Kingdom of God's dear Son, for which we have long waited and prayed, "Thy Kingdom come; Thy will be done on earth as in heaven." Our Lord, speaking of this trouble, declared, "Unless those days were shortened there should no flesh be saved; but for the elect's sake those days shall be shortened"—because of the "elect," and the Kingdom which they will establish, that "time of trouble" will be cut short. Dan. xii. 1; Matt. xxiv, 21, 22.

The page devoted to the interests of boys in school and college always has an article of expert advice on athletics by some one who speaks with authority, whether it is football, baseball, skating, swimming, or other vigorous pastime. The page for girls suggests useful occupations at home and profitable occupation in the community, without forgetting that girls like to be ornamental as well as useful. And there is the family page, which in the course of a year fills the place of a domestic encyclodecia.

Warning to Natural Gas Customers.

Owing to the severe cold weather this winter and the ground being frozen deeper than usual and as the service lines from the street to the houses are not more than twelve or eighteen inches in depth, we find in several cases where the frost is deeper than the service lines there is more or less danger of the lines pulling part and causing leaks.

The Gas Company is doing everything possible to prevent any leaks of this kind and will take this opportunity to notify all customers of Natural Gas, to use every precaution against accidents and should they detect the odor of gas at any time, to immediately shut off the gas at the meter and notify the Gas Company at once. We particularly caution you not to look for a leak with a light.

GREAT VOTING CONTEST STARTS LIKE A WHIRLWIND

Many Nominatfons of Popular Young Ladies Already Made

The big prize voting contest announcement in these columns last week is creating more interest than we imagined it would at the beginning. Nominations of contestants are being sent to this office and soon there will be many who would be willing recipients of a fine $400 Obermeyer Piano or other valuable prizes enumerated in this list.

All of these handsome prizes are enumerated in the announcement on another page and will be given to some of the ladies of Oakland and vicinity.

The question is: how can I do it? All that is necessary is to get your relatives and friends to trade with the merchants who are donating prizes in this popular voting contest.

For each $1.00 spent with the merchants you will receive 25 votes which can be voted for any of the contestants. Also to get your friends to subscribe for the Oakland Republican. For each one year new subscription you will receive 600 votes; for each one year renewal 500; for each one year back subscription 400 votes. Of course it wi'l be understood that under no circumstances are coupons issued by the merchants except upon cash purchases.

We have been asked if the wife or daughter of merchants who are cooperating with The Republican in this voting contest may complete for prizes. The rules are that no one connected The Republican office can compete for any prize, neither can the wife or daughter of any of the merchants who are cooperating with The Republican in the contest enter the competition. The reasons for this are obvious, and we are very sure that the merchants will all feel just as we do in regard to the matter. We want the contest to be conducted with the greatest possible fairness, with no occasion or opportunity for anybody to criticise. The ballot box is now at The Republicun office, ready to receive votes. The keys are in the hand of Mr. Henry Lauer, of Oakland, who will be one of the judges. The box will not be unlocked until the first count is made, on April 17th. The judges will be absolutely disinterested people, in whom everybody will have confidence, and every count will be participated in by a representative of the Publishers' Music Co., who are managing the contest. There will be no favorites and no chance for favoritism. The lady who secures the largest number of votes will win the piano, and so on down for the rest of the prizes. We wish there were pianos enough to go round for all the girls, but there are not, and all but one will have to be content with one of the many other beautiful prizes offered.

Voting can commence at any time in a ballot box which is placed in this office and the key to the box will be given to the awarded committee whose names will be announced in another issue of this paper.

Use the free vote coupon in this issue. If you know of any lady who has not been nominated and whom you think would make a good race use the nomination blank below and send her name to the Oakland Republican office or bring it in person and her name will be entered. It matters not if she is married or single.

Read the rules in the large ad. in this issue or we will mail them upon request. Inspect the offerings of the merchants and learn how you may secure votes for yourself or friend. Be sure to ask these merchants for coupons.

Those who do not understand the rules and regulations of this contest, can call at this office or write us and we will be pleased to go over the proposition with them.

EXTRA PRIZE OF $10 IN GOLD

The first count in the contest will be made on April 17, at which time $10 in gold will be awarded to the contestant having the the largest number of votes at that time. The prize is extra, in addition to the other prizes offered, and its winning will not bar the winner from securing the piano or any of the other prizes.

DO IT NOW and help someone reap the benefits of this liberal effort. Remember that many of the merchants of Oakland are interested in this contest and give a 25 vote coupon with every $1 cash purchase.

This contest is between individuals and no lodge or other organization will be permitted to enter. This also means that no lady will be permitted to stand as the candidate of any particular organization with the understanding if she wins the piano or other prizes it is to go to that organization. Such an arrangement would be manifestly unfair to the other contestants. Any candidate so detected, will be disqualified. Remember and have your friends trade with merchants who are giving coupons. The names of the merchants who are giving handsome prizes and helping to make this contest a big success are as follows:

Arthur Townshend.
Bolden, Brown & Weimer.
J. E. Harned.
H. C. Sincell.
Dixon & Kelso.
Thos. Little.
Gonder's Pharmacy.
G. C. Martin & Co.
J. W. Hart.
J. M. Davis & Sons.
Samuel Lawton & Sons.
H. Creutzburg.

This is the first voting contest The Republican has ever given and we propose to make a "howling success." We want new subscribers and a lot of them and these girls will get them for us by seeing their friends and inducing them to subscribe or renew for The Republican. We guarantee to make the paper well worth the money of every subscriber, and we expect to hold all these new subscribers for many years to come.

That is the only way we can make this contest make money for us.

The names of the young ladies who have already been nominated in this contest are given below. We want each one of them to call at The Republican office and get a book of receipts and copies of The Republican to work with and get busy. The one who does the best work is going to have that beautiful Obermyer & Sons piano, and the others are going to be handsomely rewarded by other prizes. In addition one of them is going to win an extra prize of $10 in gold, to be awarded April 17. Now, young ladies, it is up to you to get busy. A good start may mean a great deal, so get in the game early.

Telephone War to be Settled by State Commission.

The Garrett County Telephone Company has appealed to the Public Service Commission for relief from alleged embarrassment caused by arbitrary severance of a reciprocal contract which it had with the Western Maryland Telephone company when that company was sold to the Chesapeake and Potomac.

It is charged by the complainant that the Chesapeake and Potomac, after its purchase of the Western Maryland, opened negotiations looking to the purchase of the Garrett county company and that when the latter made a price it was refused and no counter offer made, though invited.

Then, it is said, the Chesapeake and Potomac stopped the exchange of calls which had been made at Lonaconing and Frostburg in an effort "to punish" the Garrett county company. The latter company states that this has worked a great hardship upon them and upon the public.

The Columbia county (N. Y.) Pomona grange has organized a legislative committee based on the Chautauqua county plan. Members of the committee (one from each subordinate grange) are now being appointed throughout the county. The duties of the committee are to keep in communication with the state grange legislative committee, keep informed on all legislation of interest to the grange at Albany, communicate such information to each local grange and also to watch carefully county legislation by the board of supervisors so far as it affects the farmers' interests. The executive committee will consist of the chairman, secretary and three other members appointed by the chairman. The good work done by the Chautauqua county grange legislative committee is an example to other county granges. If Pomona granges in other counties would organize such a legislative committee the influence would enhance the farmers' benefits greatly. For the information of others we give below the bylaws of the Columbia county grange legislative committee:

Section 1. This committee shall be known and designated as the grange legislative committee of Columbia county, N. Y.

Section 2. Its membership shall consist of one member from each local grange in the county, to be elected or appointed by each grange annually in August.

Section 3. Its officers shall consist of a chairman and secretary, to be elected annually at the September meeting of the Pomona.

Section 4. The duties of the committee shall be to keep in communication with the legislative committee of the state grange, keep informed of all legislation of interest to the grange, communicate such information to each local grange through its representative on the committee, consider all matters properly coming before it and report its proceedings to each session of Pomona grange.

Section 5. Regular meetings of the committee shall be held at each session of Pomona grange and special meetings at the call of the chairman.

Section 6. An executive committee shall consist of the chairman, secretary and three other members, to be appointed by the chairman.

Section 7. Necessary expenses of the secretary for postage and stationery may be presented in a bill for payment by Pomona grange.

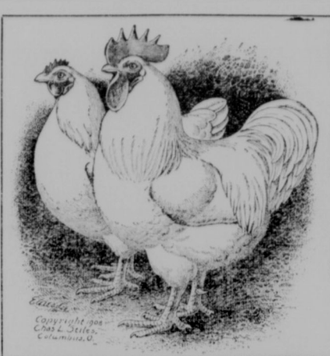
Section 8. Compensation of members may be such as each grange in its discretion may grant to its representative on the committee.

Section 9. In case of the absence of a member this committee shall have the power of substitution.

THE OLD AND THE NEW.

Farmers Must Co-operate if They Would Succeed.

The hardest rub for the farmers of today, says J. L. Bennett of Piscataquis Pomona grange, Maine, is that they are sending a good portion of their money to the west for flour and feed. If the farmer is going into the dairy business he ought to raise his feed, the most of it, in order to make his business pay. Our taxes are high, and we must live. The potato crop is all that has saved us. Many of the farmers could not have paid their bills without them. I can see only one way for the farmers to better their condition and that is to co-operate. The granges must combine and work for the benefit of the whole. If the farmers must have so much feed from the west, combine and send for it by the carload. It will pay. It has been tried. They have organized in Worcester county, Mass., and sent out west and bought their feed by the carload and they also sent to Kansas and bought a carload of flour and saved the grangers a dollar on a barrel. On the whole they saved the Patrons over $2,000 in six months. Patrons have been practicing co-operation at Houlton, the largest grange in the state, for a number of years with perfect satisfaction. Co-operation and associations are the needs of the hour.



GRANGE SCHOLARSHIP.

Ohio State Grange Offers One to the Winter Course In Agriculture.

Considerable interest is already shown in the scholarship contest now on among subordinate grange representatives in Ohio, who will compete for free tuition in the Ohio State university in the winter course in agriculture and homemaking. Each young man or woman contestant shall prepare and give an oration or essay on some subject relating to agriculture or the household and read or deliver the same at the subordinate grange not later than the 1st of November. The winner at each subordinate grange shall be entitled to contest at the Pomona grange, which contest shall be not later than the 1st of December. The winner from here must compete at the state grange, provided, however, that if there is but one contestant in a grange that one shall have the same standing as though there had been others and they had won from their respective granges.

We commend the idea to other state granges and suggest that at least three such scholarships should be awarded instead of one.

They do things in a liberal way sometimes in New Jersey. At a grange picnic and fair held the past summer it is estimated that 50,000 people were present. It took 500 chickens, 3,000 ears of corn and several quarters of beef to satisfy the hungry farmers and their families. The manager of the affair went out and bought a whole field of corn from a nearby farmer.

"The Newlyweds and Their Baby."

"Oh, for goodness sake!" Such a hilarious crowd of people never left a place of amusement as the one that will come out of the Maryland Easter Monday, April 8th, after the performance of "The Newlyweds and Their Baby." The expression quoted above is one that made Dan'l F. Murphy, and which puts the audience in the very best humor right from the start. Earl Knapp, who not only plays the part of Napoleon to perfection, but whose expert handling of the part of Major Knott Much causes the audience to rock in laughter time and again is undoubtedly the star attraction of the play.

The performers, 60½ in number, are greeted with glee throughout the play, while all the musical numbers are encored. The stage setting of the first act is that of a nursery, while the setting of the second act is more gorgeous with its colored lights, fancy arches, and lofty electric lit towers in the distance. Dan'l F. Murphy as the waiter, Adolph Nichol, makes a tremendous hit and his phase, "Oh, for goodness sake," becomes excruciatingly funny. The "Schnitzelbaum Blackboard song" brings down the house, and his attempts at playing the nurse are ludicrous. Chas. A. Morgan makes an ideal Mr. Newlywed, just as the cartoon pictures him, and is an able aid to the Countess Olga Von Hatzfeldt, who captivates the ladies as Mrs. Newlywed.

Two of the musical numbers strikes the fancy of any audience and they will not rest until they call the chorus out several times. "Every Baby is a Sweet Bouquet," and "Can't You See I Love You?" are the favorites.

The auspicious opening of the advance sale at the Gonder Pharmacy booking agents for the Maryland Theater for the engagement of "The Newlyweds and Their Baby" at this popular play house, places the seal of success upon this engagement. This 60½ people music show being founded on George McManus' cartoon by Aaron Hoffman Paul West. It is said to have the best grownd, singing and dancing chorus before the public to-day.

VIRGINIA SAVAGE HELD BY CORONER'S JURY.

Charged With Being Responsible for Death of Infant Thrown From Train.

Miss Virginia Savage, aged twenty-two years, who was arrested at her home a few miles south of Oakland last Wednesday night by Deputy Sheriff DeWitt on a warrant charging her with being responsible for the death of an infant thrown from train No. 1 Tuesday night preceding, and brought to Oakland where she was detained in jail until Friday, when she was taken to Cumberland, Allegany county, in which county it is alleged she committed the crime, is held in the Cumberland jail to await the findings of the grand jury, now in session, upon the charge.

The coroner's jury, which viewed the remains of the child on Friday prior to the arrival of Miss Savage accompanied by an officer from Allegany county, who came here earlier in the day to take her to Cumberland, rendered its verdict Friday afternoon, which, in effect, was that Miss Savage was responsible for the death of the child by throwing it out of the car window of passenger train No. 1 on the Baltimore and Ohio railroad Tuesday night.

In connection with the case State's Attorney Perdew of Allegany county received a telegram from Baltimore on Friday, signed by George Jones, superintendent of the Children's Aid Society of that city, stating that he "has important information relative to Virginia Savage and child, and that he is forwarding same by letter."

FAREWELL TO PASTOR HUDSON

Baptist Congregation at Loch Lynn Heights Adopted Resolutions.

The resignation of Rrv. Dr. C. W. Hudson, for five years pastor of the Loch Lynn Heights Baptist church, who departed for his new field of labor in Alabama a few days ago, is sincerely regretted by not only his own flock but by other denominations in the community as well. Prior to his leave taking the following preamble and resolutions were adopted by the congregation he has so ably served:

DEAR PASTOR:—For more than five years we as members of the Loch Lynn Heights Baptist Church have profited by your ministrations, and during that time it is superfluous to say that you and Sister Hudson have endeared yourselves to us by your Christian character and earnest devotion to duty and the interest you have manifested in our welfare. In the pulpit you have faithfully presented the precepts of our religion. In our homes you have been our sincere and sympathizing counselor and friend. In our hours of pain and sorrow you have spoken gentle and soothing words to our troubled hearts.

And now having made known to us the termination of your relation as pastor, we desire that you will accept the following resolutions as a testimonial of our esteem faintly expressed.

Resolved, That we, the members of the Loch Lynn Heights Baptist Church, assure Brother and Sister Hudson of our high appreciation of their work and labor of love. Coming among us when as a people we had no church home and but of a small handful of members, now we have a building that will compare favorably with any other of like purpose in the county, with a membership more than doubled; be it further

Resolved, That we assure them of our interest in their success in their new field of labor to which they go, and shall be glad to hear of the progress of the work of the Master through their ministrations.

Resolved, That while we could wish that the churches to which they go would have looked elsewhere for a shepherd, yet we cannot do otherwise than congratulate them on their choice, hoping that the relations between pastor and people may be as pleasant and profitable as ours has been.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be inscribed on the record of the church, also a copy be given Brother and Sister Hudson and that they be printed in the county press.

FREIGHT WRECK WEST OF OAKLAND

Fourteen Coal Cars Piled Up and Traffic Delayed Several Hours Saturday.

A frieght wreck on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad last Saturday morning at six o'clock practically put the road out of business for upwards of half a day, when a coal train composed of fifty cars was wrecked at a point half a mile west of the Big Youghiogheny bridge and fourteen of the cars were piled up in a heap—literally jammed together so that they occupied the space ordinarily required for much less than half the number.

In addition to wrecking the cars both tracks were completely wiped out, two or three of the rails being pushed clear of the roadbed and were resting some forty or fifty feet below along the river edge, while others were bowed and bent in such a manner as to resembled a shoe lace.

As soon as possible after the wreck occurred three wrecking crews were upon the ground and with the massive cranes proceeded to clear the way for the trackmen to replace the broken ties and rails, which was completed shortly after one o'clock and trains which had been held both east and west were allowed to proceed.

Train No. 3, west bound, was held at Mountain Lake Park and then sent to Piedmont with the expectation of having it sent over the tracks of the Western Maryland to Grafton, but after its arrival at Piedmont a wreck on the road near Gorman tied that road up completely and the train was sent back here and proceeded westward, leaving Oakland shortly after noon.

Train No. 2 was sent east over the tracks of the M. & K. to Connellsville and thence to Cumberland.

The cause of the wreck is believed to have been a broken wheel which climbed the rail and the truck becoming crossed the cars piled up on top of it. No one was injured in the wreck but the property loss to the railroad company has been placed at a pretty high figure.

CATCHING UP WITH ROOSEVELT

Taft Trying to Have Supreme Court Decision Recalled.

CHIEF JUSTICE IS WITH HIM.

Rotary Mimeograph Case Gives Special Point to the Colonel's Columbus Speech—Administration Wants Congress to Overthrow Court's Action.

On Feb. 21 Colonel Roosevelt delivered before the constitutional convention of Ohio an oration on "A Charter of Democracy," in which he denounced the doctrine of the infallibility of the courts as a grave danger menacing American institutions and advocated a simplified method for the recall of court decisions by the people. At once he was assailed by the representatives of big business and of monopoly as an advocate of virtual anarchy and a living threat against the safety of property.

Of course at the time he was speaking more particularly of state courts, but in less than three weeks, on March 11, to be exact, the supreme court of the United States handed down a decision, coupled with the dissent of three members, including that of the chief justice, vindicating Colonel Roosevelt's attitude in every particular. The supreme court caught up with Roosevelt. And the severe comments drawn upon himself from the advocates of special privileges ought now in all justice to be passed on to the supreme court and especially to Chief Justice White, for if ever a human being voiced a demand for the recall of a decision of the courts Chief Justice White did so in his dissenting opinion.

The case was that of Sidney Henry, et al, vs. the A. B. Dick company. The Dick company owned the patent on a rotary mimeograph. It sold one of the machines to Miss Christina B. Skou of New York under a stipulation that the ink, stencil paper and other supplies used with the invention must be bought from the Dick company. The Henry company sold Miss Skou ink for the mimeograph that was not Dick ink, and the Dick company sued the Henry company and Miss Skou for infringement of the patent on the mimeograph. On March 11, with only seven members of the United States supreme court sitting, four of them, constituting a majority, decided the case and held that when the Henry company sold the non Dick ink to Miss Skou and she used it, this constituted an infringement of the patent.

In a dissenting opinion, in which he was joined by Justices Hughes and Lamar, Chief Justice White denounced this extraordinary opinion in the most biting language. Stating that the patent did not cover the ink in any way, he demanded that the legislative department of the government amend the law so as to make it impossible for the precedent established by the decision to be maintained.

"Under this decision it is now the law," declared the chief justice, "that * * * the patentee has the power by contract to extend his patent rights so as to bring within the claims of his patent things which are not embraced therein, thus virtually legislating by causing the patent laws to cover subjects to which they could not reach, the result being to multiply monopolies at the will of an interested party."

The decision caused a laugh of derision throughout the national capital. The advocates of the doctrine of the infallibility of the courts were overcome with chagrin, while the supporters of Colonel Roosevelt inquired with sarcastic emphasis whether the people at the polls, so frequently denounced as a "mob" by the advocates of special privilege, could ever do anything worse.

In the meantime the attorney general and other administration opponents of Colonel Roosevelt fluttered about in flabbergasted haste to find some speedy way to recall the opinion, for if sustained this opinion will take the life out of some of the most spectacular trust busting suits the administration has in its incubator. The attorney general notified the defeated litigants that if they were game to try to secure a rehearing of the case before a full bench of the supreme court the administration would be glad to lend all the assistance of which the department of justice was capable. At the same time the attorney general commenced the preparation of a bill for the amendment of the patent law with the intention of setting congress loose at the supreme court. Other steps for the recall of the decision were inaugurated by the commissioner of patents, who also began work on a bill to be handed to congress.

Apparently every legislator in congress wanted a copy of the decision, some for the purpose of enjoying themselves and others to study it in the search for a way to recall it.

This is the second piece of sensational legislation perpetrated by the United States supreme court within a few months, but this later instance could not better serve as an indorsement of Colonel Roosevelt's plea for the recall of court decisions if it had been made to order for that purpose.

The supreme court has indeed caught up with Colonel Roosevelt.

"PASSING THE WORD ALONG."

Taft's Texas Manager Shows How Patronage Club Is Wielded.

MACGREGOR'S ADVERTISEMENT

It Warns Against an Expression of Independent Preference and Bids For Support of Taft, With Federal Patronage as the Alluring Bait.

Four years ago Congressman William B. McKinley of Illinois was managing the campaign of Joseph G. Cannon, then speaker of the house of representatives at Washington, for the Republican presidential nomination. Mr. McKinley was exerting himself at that time to the extent of his ability to prevent the nomination of Mr. Taft.

The Great Patronage Dispenser.

When he was appointed director of the national Taft bureau in Washington and placed at the head of the campaign for the renomination of Mr. Taft this year, he expressed the opinion to some of his friends that it would be a very much easier job than he had had in 1908, for the reason that all he would have to do now would be to "pass the word along." Mr. McKinley meant, of course, that it was only necessary to convey the information authoritatively to the thousands of federal officeholders throughout the country and especially in the southern states that the president desired to be renominated and that it was the wish of the great patronage dispenser that all the federal officeholders should cooperate in forcing the election of Taft delegates to the Chicago convention.

A concrete illustration of the method of "passing the word along" used by the Taft managers was furnished recently by Mr. H. F. MacGregor, the Taft manager in Texas. The Republican state committee of Texas is composed of men not one of whom holds a federal office. Colonel Cecil Lyon, the state chairman and also the Republican national committeeman from Texas, recognizing the unavailability of Mr. Taft as a candidate for the presidency this year, because of the great revolt of Republican voters against him, sent out a circular letter to Republicans of Texas asking for expressions of their individual preference for their presidential candidate.

A Threat and a Promise.

Mr. Lyon having been at the head of the Republican organization in Texas for several years, his recommendations had naturally had great weight in the selection of appointees to the numerous federal offices in Texas. The Taft managers affected to see in Colonel Lyon's circular an attempt to control the action of the federal officeholders in Texas with regard to the election of the delegates from that state to the Republican national convention. Thereupon Mr. MacGregor published his advertisement widely in papers that circulate throughout the Lone Star State.

This advertisement is both a threat and a promise. It brutally warns all persons concerned that they express an independent preference at their peril and at the same time it brazenly dangles the bribe of federal patronage for Taft support. Nothing like it has ever occurred in the history of American politics.

"Has Now No Influence."

This is a full copy of Mr. MacGregor's advertisement:

"To the Republican Federal Officeholders In Texas:

"The state chairman has notified you officially to send him money to defeat President Taft, under whom you hold a commission, and to file your allegiance to him within ten days. This is to notify you that the state chairman has now no influence in Washington and will not have if re-elected after President Taft's triumphant re-election.

"In some other southern states where complaint was made and where conditions were similar to those in Texas, the president had the Republicans of the state meet in conference and select a committee to make recommendations as to patronage, and you can rest assured that loyal Taft Republicans cannot be slaughtered by the state chairman.

"The recommendation of Taft Republicans will control the Texas situation in the matter of patronage and not the recommendations of those engaged in discrediting one of the best presidents the country has ever had and who are by their disloyalty endangering Republican success nationally.

"H. F. MACGREGOR,
"Taft Texas Campaign Manager."

ROOSEVELT THE REAL LEADER

Kansas Progressives See In Him the Hope of the Common Man In This Struggle.

The action of a small minority of the state central committee of Kansas in adopting a snap call for a state convention and refusing the demand of the progressive Republican voters of the state for an opportunity to express their preference as to the presidential candidate of their party through a primary, resulted in the prompt formation of a progressive Republican Roosevelt organization for the whole state. This organization was perfected at Topeka and adopted a platform which lucidly expresses the principle for which the Roosevelt progressives are fighting throughout the country. That platform is worthy of the careful consideration of Republican voters in every state. It says:

"We believe that Colonel Roosevelt stands for the constructive progressive policies of the country. We believe that his policies have given a new life to our party and new patriotic impulse to our country and a new hope to the common people. Our party had its birth in such an impulse given to it by the leaders who brought the party into being and who guided it to its high destiny. The torch of liberty that Lincoln bore Roosevelt holds today. He is the hope of the common man in his struggle for political independence as a means to economic freedom.

"The fight for these great things finds in Colonel Roosevelt an intrepid leader. We believe that under his leadership we can turn the tide of distrust and defeat which has been running so strongly against our party during the three years last passed.

"We congratulate our brother progressives in North Dakota upon their splendid fight and magnificent victory; though it was under the banner of another leader it was in the common cause. We point to the vote of that primary as justification of the need to rescue the party from the tyranny of a minority as exemplified by the success in other states of patronage politics under the convention system.

"We demand that our party be put upon a representative basis as it is in North Dakota. We believe that the percentage of progressive sentiment indicated by the North Dakota primary is found all over the nation and that it calls for a change of leadership in our party. We believe that the first duty of a party is to represent the people; that self government is the first end of a republic, and therefore we pledge ourselves to work in our counties for the direct vote at the primaries which shall set forth the preference of the people upon the presidency and shall indicate so far as possible the choice of the people of delegates to the Chicago convention from the several congressional districts."

REFORMATION OF CALLIOPE.

Love Conquers When the Power of the Law Is Impotent.

By O. HENRY.

[Copyright, 1907, by the McClure Company.]

Calliope Catesby was in his humors again. Ennui was upon him. This goodly promontory, the earth—particularly that portion of it known as Quicksand—was to him no more than a pestilent congregation of vapors.

Overnight Calliope had hung out signals of approaching low spirits. He had kicked his own dog on the porch of the Occidental hotel and refused to apologize. He had become capricious and fault finding in conversation. While strolling about he reached often for twigs of mesquite and chewed the leaves fiercely. That was always an ominous act.

At this stage Calliope generally began to drink. Finally, about midnight, he was seen going homeward, saluting those whom he met with exaggerated but inoffensive courtesy. Not yet was Calliope's melancholy at the danger point.

THAT FEARFUL, BRASSY YELL.

A quiet, amiable man was Calliope Catesby at other times—quiet to indolence and amiable to worthlessness.

At 9 the next morning Calliope was fit. Inspired by his own barbarous melodies and the contents of his jug, he was ready primed to gather fresh laurels from the diffident brow of Quicksand. Encircled and crisscrossed with cartridge belts, abundantly garnished with revolvers and copiously drunk, he poured forth into Quicksand's main street. Too chivalrous to surprise and capture a town by silent sortie, he paused at the nearest corner and emitted his slogan—that fearful, brassy yell so reminiscent of the steam piano that had gained for him the classic appellation that had superseded his own baptismal name. Following close upon his vociferation came three shots from his 45 by way of limbering up the guns and testing his aim.

But some four squares farther down lively preparations were being made to minister to Mr. Catesby's love for interchange of compliments and repartee. On the previous night numerous messengers had hastened to advise Buck Patterson, the city marshal, of Calliope's impending eruption. The patience of that official, often strained in extending leniency toward the disturber's misdeeds, had been overtaxed.

Buck Patterson had been expecting and awaiting in his little 10 by 12 frame office that preliminary yell announcing that Calliope was feeling blue. When the signal came the city marshal rose to his feet and buckled on his guns. Two deputy sheriffs and three citizens who had proved the edible qualities of fire also stood up, ready to bandy with Calliope's leaden jocularities.

"Gather that fellow in," said Buck Patterson, setting forth the lines of the campaign. "Don't have no talk, but shoot as soon as you can get a show. Keep behind cover and bring him down."

The polemetic Calliope, unconscious of retributive plots, was steaming down the channel, cannonading on either side, when he suddenly became aware of breakers ahead. The city marshal and one of the deputies rose up behind some dry goods boxes half a square to the front and opened fire. At the same time the rest of the posse, divided, shelled him from two side streets.

The first volley broke the lock of one of Calliope's guns, cut a neat underbit in his right ear and exploded a cartridge in his crossbelt, scorching his ribs as it burst. Feeling braced up by this unexpected tonic to his spiritual depression, Calliope executed a fortissimo note from his upper register and returned the fire like an echo.

And now Calliope met the enemy's tactics in kind. Choosing with a rapid eye the street from which the weakest and least accurate fire had come, he invaded it at a double quick, abandoning the unprotected middle of the street. With rare cunning the opposing force in that direction, one of the deputies and two of the valorous volunteers, waited, concealed by beer barrels, until Calliope had passed their retreat and then peppered him from the rear. In another moment they were re-enforced by the marshal and his other men, and then Calliope felt that in order to successfully prolong the delights of the controversy he must find some means of reducing the great odds against him.

Not far away was the little railroad station, its building a strong box house 10 by 20 feet resting upon a platform four feet above ground. Windows were in each of its walls.

Calliope made a bold and rapid spurt for it, the marshal's crowd "smoking" him as he ran. He reached the haven in safety, the station agent leaving the building by a window.

Patterson and his supporters halted under protection of a pile of lumber and held consultations. In the station was an unterrified desperado who was an excellent shot and carried an abundance of ammunition. For thirty yards on each side of the besieged was a stretch of bare open ground.

Standing near was a hand truck used in the manipulation of small freight. It stood by a shed full of sacked wool, a consignment from one of the sheep ranches. On this truck the marshal and his men piled three heavy sacks of wool. Stooping low, Buck Patterson started for Calliope's fort, slowly pushing this loaded truck before him for protection. The posse, scattering broadly, stood ready to nip the besieged in case he should show himself in an effort to repel the juggernaut of justice that was creeping upon him. Only once did Calliope make demonstration. He fired from a window, and some tufts of wool spurted from the marshal's trustworthy bulwark.

The marshal was too deeply engrossed in steering his protected battleship to be aware of the approach of the morning train until he was within a few feet of the platform. The train was coming up on the other side of it. It stopped only one minute at Quicksand. What an opportunity it would offer to Calliope! He had only to step out the other door, mount the train and away!

Abandoning his breastworks, Buck, with his gun ready, dashed up the steps and into the room, driving open the closed door with one heave of his weighty shoulder. The members of the posse heard one shot fired inside, and then there was silence.

At length the wounded man opened his eyes. After a blank space he again could see and hear and feel and think. Turning his eyes about, he found himself lying on a wooden bench. A tall man with a perplexed countenance, wearing a big badge with "City Marshal" engraved upon it, stood over him. A little old woman in black, with a wrinkled face and sparkling black eyes, was holding a wet handkerchief against one of his temples. He was trying to get these facts fixed in his mind and connected with past events when the old woman began to talk.

"There now, great, big, strong man! That bullet never tetched you—jest skeeted along the side of your head and sort of paralyzed you for a spell. I've heerd of sech things afore. Concussion is what they names it. Abel Wadkins used to kill squirrels that way—barkin' 'em. Abe called it. You jest been barked, sir, and you'll be all right in a little bit. Feel lots better already, don't you? You just lay still awhile longer and let me bathe your head. You don't know me, I reckon, and 'tain't surprisin' that you shouldn't. I come in on that train from Alabama to see my son. Big son, ain't he? Lands, you wouldn't hardly think he'd ever been a baby, would you? This is my son, sir."

Half turning, the old woman looked up at the standing man, her worn face lighting with a proud and wonderful smile. She reached out one veined and calloused hand and took one of her son's. Then, smiling cheerily down at the prostrate man, she continued to dip the handkerchief in the waiting room tin wash basin and gently apply it to his temple.

"I ain't seen my son before," she continued, "in eight years. One of my nephews, Elkanah Price, he's a conductor on one of them railroads, and he got me a pass to come out here. I can stay a whole week on it, and then it'll take me back ag'in. Jest think, now, that little boy of mine has got to be a officer—a city marshal of a whole town! That's somethin' like a constable, ain't it? I never knowed he was a officer. He didn't say nothin' about it in his letters. I reckon he thought his old mother 'd be skeered about the danger he was in. But, laws, I never was much of a hand to git skeered. 'Tain't no use. I heard them guns a-shootin' while I was gittin' off them cars, and I see smoke a-comin' out of the depot, but I jest walked right along. Then I see son's face lookin' out through the window. I knowed him at oncet. He met me at the door and squeezed me most to death. And there you was, sir, a-lyin' there jest like you was dead, and I 'lowed we'd see what might be done to help sot you up."

"I think I'll sit up now," said the concussion patient. "I'm feelin' pretty fair by this time."

He sat, somewhat weakly yet, leaning against the wall. He was a rugged man, big boned and straight. His eyes, steady and keen, seemed to linger upon the face of the man standing so still above him. His look wandered often from the face he studied to the marshal's badge upon the other's breast.

"Yes, yes; you'll be all right," said the old woman, patting his arm, "if you don't get to cuttin' up ag'in and havin' folks shootin' at you. Son told me about you, sir, while you was layin' senseless on the floor. Don't you take it as meddlesome fer an old woman with a son as big as you to talk about it. And you mustn't hold no grudge ag'in my son for havin' to shoot at you. A officer has got to take up for the law—it's his duty—and them that acts bad and lives wrong has to suffer. Don't blame my son any, sir. 'Tain't his fault. He's always been a good boy—good when he was growin' up and kind and 'bedient and well behaved. Won't you let me advise you, sir, not to do so no more? Be a good man and leave liquor alone and live peaceably and godly."

The black mittened hand of the old pleader gently touched the breast of the man she addressed. Very earnest and candid her old, worn face looked. In her rusty black dress and antique bonnet she sat, near the close of a long life, and epitomized the experience of the world. Still the man to whom she spoke gazed above her head, contemplating the silent son of the old mother.

"What does the marshal say?" he asked. "Does he believe the advice is good? Suppose the marshal speaks up and says if the talk's all right?"

The tall man moved uneasily. He fingered the badge on his breast for a moment, and then he put an arm around the old woman and drew her close to him.

"I says this," he said, looking squarely into the eyes of the other man, "that if I was in your place I'd follow it. If I was a drunken, desp'rate character, without shame or hope, I'd follow it. If I was in your place and you was in mine I'd say: 'Marshal, I'm willin' to swear if you'll give me the chance I'll quit the racket. I'll drop the tanglefoot and the gun play and won't play hoss no more. I'll be a good citizen and go to work and quit my foolishness. So help me God!' That's what I'd say to you if you was marshal and I was in your place."

"Hear my son talkin'," said the old woman softly. "Hear him, sir. You promise to be good and he won't do you no harm. Forty-one year ago his heart first beat ag'in mine, and it's beat true ever since."

The other man rose to his feet, trying his limbs and stretching his muscles.

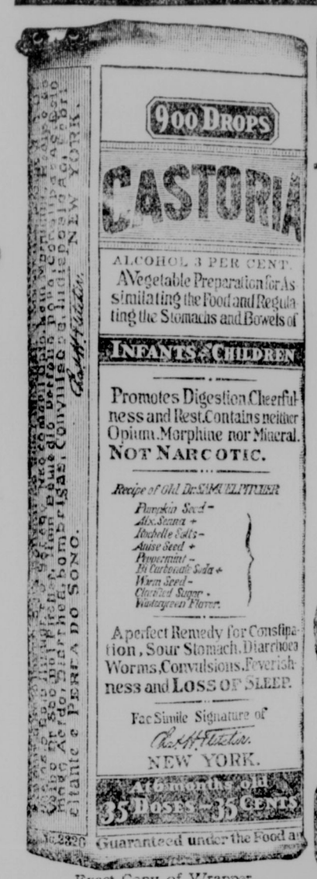
"Then," said he, "if you was in my place and said that and I was marshal I'd say, 'Go free and do your best to keep your promise.'"

"Lawsy," exclaimed the old woman in a sudden flutter, "ef I didn't clear forget that trunk of mine! I see a man settin' it on the platform jest as I seen son's face in the window, and it went plum out of my head. There's eight jars of homemade quince jam in that trunk that I made myself. I wouldn't have nothin' happen to them jars for a red apple."

Away to the door she trotted, spry and anxious, and then Calliope Catesby spoke out to Buck Patterson:

"I just couldn't help it, Buck. I seen her through the window a-comin' in. She never had heard a word 'bout my tough ways. I didn't have the nerve to let her know I was a worthless cuss bein' hunted down by the community. There you was lyin' where my shot laid you, like you was dead. The idea struck me sudden, and I just took your badge off and fastened it on to myself, and I fastened my reputation on to you.

"THIS IS MY SON, SIR."



I told her I was the marshal and you was a holy terror. You can take your badge back now, Buck."

With shaking fingers Calliope began to unfasten the disk of metal from his shirt.

"Easy there!" said Buck Patterson. "You keep that badge right where it is, Calliope Catesby. Don't you dare to take it off till the day your mother leaves this town. You'll be city marshal of Quicksand as long as she's here to know it. After I stir around town a bit and put 'em on I'll guarantee that nobody won't give the thing away to her. And, say, you leather headed, rip roarin', low down son of a locoed cyclone, you follow that advice she give me! I'm goin' to take some of it myself too."

"Buck," said Calliope feelingly, "ef I don't I hope I may"—

"Shut up!" said Buck. "Shes a-comin' back."

A DAMAGING REPORT OF FOREIGN MISSIONS

Present Teaching of Missions Merely Morals—Not Christ.

Religion Has Been Cut Out and Education Substituted—$30,000,000 Multiplied a Thousand Times Would Accomplish Little Respecting the Conversion of the World—Nothing Short of Christ's Kingdom Can Do It.

PASTOR RUSSELL

New York, March 31.—The International Bible Students Association secured the Hippodrome in which to hear the Report of its Committee on Foreign Missions Investigation. The spacious auditorium was crowded. Prof. F. H. Robison, Secretary of the Committee, announced that the Report had been submitted to the Association and was in the printer's hands, to appear in pamphlet form illustrated at the small price of five cents per copy, postpaid—free to the poor. The conclusion of the Report is in the nature of a Summary, which he read. Some of its salient points are:—

Christianizing endeavors seem pretty generally to have ceased! Present missionary endeavors are almost exclusively along the line of secular education and medical aid.

There is less need of Academic and Collegiate education, such as the missionaries forward, than for Common Schooling.

The Orientals are often perplexed at the Missionary competition and opposition between Christian denominations.

Orientals are not heathen-savages, but their educated classes include splendid specimens of noble manhood, the moral and intellectual peers of Europeans and Americans.

The very suggestion of the world's conversion is ridiculous to the peoples of the East—including the Missionaries * * * The interest on $30,000,000, or the principal multiplied a thousand times, would accomplish little except along the lines of secular education—nothing as respects the world's conversion.

Pastor Russell's Hippodrome Address.

Text: Ask of Me and I will give Thee the heathen for an inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth."—Ps. viii. 2.

This text has been before the Pastor's mind continually during his world's tour.

(1) Why call the people of India, China and Japan heathens, since they are not barbarians but civilized? We follow the Bible, which uses the word heathen, Gentiles and nations interchangeably, and applies these terms to all except the Jewish nation and the Christian Church. The reason for this is that only Israel spiritual and Israel natural have thus far entered into covenant relationship with God.

The Pastor's second question was, To what extent is our Western civilization superior to that of the East?

He admitted that much could be said on both sides; that in some respects each had superiority over the other. Now, however, the people of the East are tacitly admitting the superiority of the West by gradually adopting our standards for schools, government, etc.

The Pastor's third question was:—

To What Extent is Christian Civilization Blessing the World?

He considered it beyond question that a blessing had come to the world through the teachings of Jesus and the Apostles—to all who accept the Gospel message in truth and sincerity. These enjoy intelligently a peace of God such as others cannot know.

But aside from these footstep followers of Jesus, the Pastor queried whether the remainder of mankind under Christian civilization were happier than those under heathen religions, such as Buddhism. What he had seen of India, China and Japan led him to believe that the 700,000,000 of these lands are more contented, more happy than are the peoples of Europe and America, even though they possess little of the wealth of the world.

What Is the Reason For This?

Pastor Russell's answer is, It is because the teachings of Jesus and the Apostles, in line with the teachings of Moses and the Prophets, the teaching of human equality, begets a love of liberty and a contention for it. They get enough from Christ's teachings to arouse and awaken them, but not enough to sanctify them. This was the intimation of the Great Teacher, "Think not that I am come to send peace upon the earth: I tell you, Nay, but a sword."—Matthew x. 34.

"I Will Give Thee the Heathen."

At the beginning of this Age our Redeemer prayed for the Church, saying, "I pray not for the world (the heathen), but for those whom Thou hast given Me, that they may all be one." It has required this entire Age to find this elect company, and they will be made one by the glorious change of the First Resurrection.

Then will come the time when Jesus will pray for the world, as intimated in our text, and then the world will be given to Him. Since the sacrifice of Himself eighteen centuries ago, He has been gathering His Church, His Bride, to be His joint-heir in the Kingdom, which, according to Bible prophecy, will soon be established for the blessing of the world.—Acts iii, 19-21.

Warning to Natural Gas Customers.

Owing to the severe cold weather this winter and the ground being frozen deeper than usual and as the service lines from the street to the houses are not more than twelve or eighteen inches in depth, we find in several cases where the frost is deeper than the service lines there is more or less danger of the lines pulling part and causing leaks.

The Gas Company is doing everything possible to prevent any leaks of this kind and will take this opportunity to notify all customers of Natural Gas, to use every precaution against accidents and should they detect the odor of gas at any time, to immediately shut off the gas at the meter and notify the Gas Company at once. We particularly caution you not to look for a leak with a light.

RECENT SCENES IN CONGRESS.

Last week closed four months of Congressional work. As usual in presidential year, little legislation of national importance has been enacted.

The congressmen have not been idle. The garden seeds have been shipped on their insinuating mission of flattery to the citizen. A stream of visitors has been paraded to the White house. River and harbor and public buildings bills are marching on. The Congressional Record bulges with speeches of which the members heard only the opening periods.

But when it comes to those divisive issues on which new lines of cleavage are opening under your best barbed wire fences, a motion to adjourn is always most in order. conservative politics.

Some typical scenes are described by a friend just returned from the capital. One day Hayes of California, Republican, and Sisson of Mississippi, Democrat, were talking. The speeches were able even if partisan, the subject the tariff, was vital.

Yet only about 25 members felt called upon to listen while two populous commonwealths were in effect addressing the nation. Some would slouch down in their chairs and extend their nine size boots, bury their noses in newspapers, or drift languidly out of the hall, as if to express contempt for any contrary opinion. A few rooters would drift in to bang the desks in applause, leaving when the opposite party had their innings. And yet our statesmen wonder why they are not more venerated!

The income tax, "money trust," etc., have led to spirited debates, in which the growing unwieldiness of the House is more and more apparent. The incessant undertone of conversation is not much checked by the speaker's gavel. Short hand reporters find they must locate under an orator's sawing arms to catch his words correctly. Disorderly members have to be howled down by Champ Clark's big, bass voice.

Our statesmen cling to their luxurious arm chairs and desks, even though this necessitates a hall twice too big for orderly business. And still they keep adding to the size of the House!

BITTINGER.

On last Monday afternoon, Thomas B. Wiley, a much esteemed and highly respected citizen of this district, passed quietly to the bright beyond, after a painful illness extending throughout the entire winter.

Rev. L. L. Sieber, D. D., representing the cause of the Anti Saloon League of Maryland, made a tour of the churches in this neighborhood last Sunday, meeting with eminent success. The attendance at the several meetings were large, the addresses inspiring and the contributions eminently satisfactory. The free will offerings for the aid of the temperance work aggregated about three hundred dollars from the several churches, and were as follows: Glades Mennonite church, $67.33; Bittinger Lutheran church, $141.28; Meadow Mountain Lutheran church $77.32; North Glade M. E. church. $3.93.

The youngest child of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Bittinger, of Jennings, was buried in the Maple Grove cemetery last Sunday afternoon, after services conducted by Prof. J. C. Beahm.

Paul Davis, of Tissue, Pa., spent a day or two this week visiting old friends here.

Bub. Lininger, of Jennings, moved his family and household effects to Jennings Bros. farm, near here last Monday. Mr. Lininger succeeds Walter Hershman as manager of the farm.

Brenneman Bros. saw mill has been shut down for several days while the engine is being repaired.

Salas O. Wiley returned to his home here last Friday after spending some weeks in Akron, Ohio.

Henry B. Wiley lost another valuable cow last week, the second loss of the kind within a short time.

Prof. J. C. Beahm has a telephone installed in his residence and is in closer touch with the outside world.

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

Mr. W. H. Landon is putting a bath room in the residence of Mr. H. V. Leighton, Loch Lynn.

Last week a young plumber came to the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Landon.

Mr. James Anderson has moved into the small cottage in the rear of Briarbend.

Mr. Bowzer has moved from the Bowman house to the News building.

Mr. Lee N. Hayden has moved from the Hecking building to the cottage he occupied last summer in Cozy Row.

Mr. F. P. Arnold went to Rowlesburg this week where he has a contract to plaster two houses.

Mrs. F. P. Arnold went to Clarksburg yesterday on a week's visit with her daughter, Mrs. Jarboe, and her son Harrison.

Mrs. Busselle and daughter, Mis Fiasnell, of Parkersburg, arrived at the Park last week and are occupying the Thos. B. Davis cottage for the present but may take another cottage later.

Mr. Harrison Arnold, of Clarksburg visited his parents here Sunday.

Hon. Geo. C. Sturgiss was here Monday to rent a cottage for the summer. He will probably occupy the U. A. Clayton cottage.

Rev. J. O. Potts, the evangelist, who has been conducting the revival services in the Loch Lynn U. P. church for the past four weeks, left Tuesday quite ill from overtaxing his strength. Rev. Potts did a great work in this community and endeared himself to all our people of every creed. The meeting is still in progress under Rev. Bauman, who is assisted by Rev. Hall of Terra Alta and others. About fifty have been converted and reclaimed in these meetings and the end is not yet.

Rev. Dr. C. W. Hudson and family departed for their new field of labor in Alabama Tuesday morning very much to the regret of all the members of the several congregations which he has built up and served in the bounds of his field of labor in this neighborhood, and, indeed, to people of all denominations. During the past two weeks he added to his various churches between twenty and thirty members. A farewell reception was held in the Loch Lynn Baptist church Thursday afternoon of last week when many kind wishes were expressed for the success and happiness of Dr. and Mrs. Hudson in their new field of labor.

Dr. and Mrs. Shelton, who have spent most of the winter in Washington, D. C., arrived here Tuesday evening and were greeted by one of the worst snow storms of the season.

The M. E. Junior League will hold an exchange in Leighton & Harvey's store Saturday morning, April 6th.

Miss Carmichael, of Woodsfield, Ohio, who will again conduct the millinery store for Mrs. Hardesty, arrived here Tuesday.

Mr. Wiley Welling moved from the Park to Oakland last week.

Mr. E. F. Freeland was away Monday and Tuesday attending the funeral of his sister-in-law, a daughter of Mr. Joab Friend, of this county.

Mr. A. T. White is again in the store of Messrs. Leighton & Harvey and requests his friends to call and see him.

The Park Bulletin will be issued within a few days and will give the program for the coming season.

Mrs. E. L. Winchell returned to her home here yesterday after a long visit with her mother in Woodsfield, Ohio.

The sewer system of Loch Lynn is being extended to the southwest section of the town. Mr. Levi Hewett has charge of the work which is a sure guarantee that it will be well done.

Easter services will be held in the M. E. church in connection with the Sunday school. There will be special music, readings, etc. A general invitation is extended to all to be present.

Preaching in the M. E. church Sunday evening at 7.30 o'clock.

Barn and Contents Burned

The barn of Mr. Daniel Sweitzer, residing about ten miles south of Oakland near Eglon, W. Va., was struck by lightning Monday and the building with its contents, consisting of hay, grain, farming implements, four cows and two horses, was destroyed, entailing a loss of several thousand dollars. Mr. Sweitzer was confined to his bed by illness and could not assist in any way in saving his property.

DOINGS AT ANNAPOLIS, THE SEAT OF GOVERNMENT

Close Of The Session of 1912 With Little, If Anything, Accomplished.

STATE HOUSE, ANNAPOLIS, April 1.—With the close of the 1912 session of the General Assembly of Maryland probably closed also the rule of the Democratic party in State governmental affairs for a few years to come. The politics injected into really meritorious measures, the attempts to curtail the Governor's constitutional prerogatives for partisan purposes and to embarrass him in very many ways, and the exceedingly high tax-rate which will result from the wild and extravagant raids upon the State Treasury—these and other distasteful features of the proceedings and the natural sequence of injudicious discrimination in defeating some bills and railroading others though will have so firmly impressed themselves upon the sense of right and justice of the people of the State that they will be cind of the opportunity two years hence to give Governor Goldsborough a Legislature which will be in perfect harmony and accord with him and his policies of reform and economy. Starting out with a pretense of guarding the people's interests and the public funds, the Democratic majority in both branches of the General Assembly have little by little strayed away from this half-hearted policy until within the past two weeks even the assumed semblance of economy consideration has been boldly cast aside and the ways to the public crib made free of technical abstracts for the faithful horde of hangers-on who have patiently awaited the letting down of the bars. The result of all this will be an increase in the State tax-rate of between 8 and 9 cents on the $100 of assessable property in the State. This very large increase will cause the property-owning citizens of Maryland to look carefully into the situation and determine for themselves the causes for it, to analyze the proposition and arrive at a sound and logical conclusion, which will lead to the verdict overleting the Democratic party in Maryland of trifling with the people and squandering the State's money once too often. The people will have plenty to think about before the next State campaign comes along, and they can be trusted, not only to decide the matter satisfactorily to themselves but also the power of the ballot to prevent a recurrence by placing the Republican party in control in every department of the State government. In compelling a tax-rate of between 31 and 32 from 23 cents on the $100 the Democrats have over-reached themselves; and in denying to the people those changes of political control of the schools and election machinery for which the people voted Governor Goldsborough into office they have robbed them of their right to say when they want a change. Hence the voters—the people who "pay the freight"—will see to it that no repetition of the outrages of the 1912 Legislature take place when the time comes to choose a new power at Annapolis in the fall of 1913.

Garrett county has been exceptionally fortunate in its representation in the Maryland Legislature during the session just closed. In the House, Messrs. Lawton, Long and Weimer were industrious, energetic and thoroughly competent and able. The results of their labors speak for themselves. They have taken advantage of every opportunity to legislate good laws for their section, and they have with exceptional care and discrimination prevented much that would have proven detrimental to Garrett county from becoming operative in that locality. For whatever failure that may be charged to them, or in whatever line criticism of their official conduct may be directed, it can never be said honestly that they have been either negligent or indifferent toward any proposition which affected their county or their people. Personally they were popular among all factions and elements of both parties and they acquired a knowledge of legislative and parliamentary procedure which enabled them to accomplish by diplomacy and tact much in which they might otherwise have failed, and which could not have been achieved by less competent and watchful representatives. Messrs. Lawton and Long are among the members who have more beneficial and satisfactory legislation, and in matters of general propositions affecting the whole State they were particularly judicious and alert. Delegate Long kept close tab on his bill file and familiarized himself thoroughly on all the matters of general interest and concern, and his vote was recorded intelligently and knowingly on all the important measures, for none escaped his scrutiny. He kept a schedule of local measures for his own locality and knew each day where each particular bill was stationed and what progress, if any, it was making, and thus he was able to get behind every measure in which he was interested and followed it to its third reading and final passage in the House, then followed it to the Senate and to the Governor for his signature.

In the Senate, Senator Harvey J. Speicher is one of the few public officials who regard their duty to the people of first concern, and he has worked faithfully and conscientiously for which he believed to be right, and it will be found as time goes on that his judgment has seldom been in error. Perhaps Senator Speicher reached the climax of discernment in his attitude on the Local Option Bill—a matter which embarrassed more than one legislatureman, but which to the Senator from Garrett county was of no more importance than some other legislation; because he had given the matter careful and earnest thought and and had decided upon his course in advance, thus placing himself outside the possibility of influence and intimidation. Foreseeing what result of the fight on the State-wide Local Option Bill would be, he had prepared a bill for Oakland especially, giving to the voters of that town the right to decide by ballot whether they want the saloon or not, in order that whatever might happen to the State-wide bill he would still be able to give the "wet" territory of his county the privileges they would otherwise have lost. He introduced the Oakland Local Option Bill, passed it through the Senate under a suspension of rules, and sent it to the House, where it was referred to the Committee on Temperance. After waiting a reasonable time he went to the Garrett Delegation and after discussing the importance with them it was decided to go before the Temperance committee, get favorable report, which was done, and then to ask for a suspension of the rules. This was done in the Senate, and put it through. He met with opposition, however, from an entirely unexpected source. To suspend the rules in either House or Senate requires unanimous consent, and if any one member objects the rules cannot be suspended. When the bill had reached the stage for asking unanimous consent to suspend the rules and pass the bill, Delegate Weimer, who had been heretofore regarded as being in favor, through both policy and principle, of temperance legislation, made flat and emphatic objection, and served notice that he would object to a suspension of the rules which would mean the rules would not be suspended and the bill not report out. And right there is where it was, where it remained, and where it died. So that if Oakland is without a Local Option bill it is no opportunity to determine by their voting whether or not they want the saloon, it is no fault of Senator Speicher, who made this special bill the subject of his earnest attention. Delegate Weimer justified his course on the ground that Senator Speicher had attempted to pass legislation for his own town of Oakland without consulting him (Weimer) and he felt fully justified in holding it up, even to the end of defeating the effort to give Oakland a Local Option bill. The people, however, must be the arbiters in this controversy.

There have been numerous occasions on which Senator Speicher has come in for special and individual commendation and comment, but none more merited than on Saturday last when he so lucidly made clear his position on the Anti-Saloon League's Local Option bill, in explaining his vote upon the bill after it had been amended by exempting nearly all the wet territory, including Oaklaand, which the Senator had provided for in his special bill. Senator Speicher's remarks of this occasion were so important, and of so much moment, his vote practically being the deciding vote, which was 14 to 13 on almost every proposition, and the closest attention was paid to him by the large crowds that filled every foot of space on the floor and in the gallery of the Senate chamber, and for the first time his remarks in full are laid before the public. Senator Speicher said:

Mr. President and Gentlemen of the Senate:

In explaining my vote on this proposition I desire to say, first, I am a believer in putting all important questions before the people to say by their vote whether certain propositions should prevail. We have a number of State laws on the statute books of Maryland which affect the whole State. Some laws, eapecially the election laws of this State which have some exemptions, and which I have always voted against any such exemptions. For laws which affect the people of the State generally should in my judgment be passed without any exemptions.

Mr. President, this same or practically this same Anti-Saloon Law was passed for Garrett County four years ago, and, if I am correctly informed, the town of Oakland was exempted from the provisions of the Bill by the consent of the Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League, Mr. Anderson. This, however, was very displeaeing to the temperance people. We have the same law in effect that he assisted us in getting at that time, and under this law there is but one place in the county where intoxicating drinks are sold outside of the town of Oakland which was exempted from the law. And, Mr. President, I have a Bill pending before this body to give the people in the town of Oakland the right to say by their vote whether or not intoxicating drinks shall be sold there. If this Bill passes, which I hope it will, we will have practically the same law for my county as we would have if this proposed Local Option Bill passes and becomes a law, and the people are not desirous in my county to have any

Mr. C. A. Ashby, of Deer Park, owner of two imported horses, a Percheron and also a Clydesdale, was in the city yesterday when he contracted with this office to print a large lot of advertising matter setting forth the good qualities of the animals.

Capt. R. R. Sanner, of Oakland, has been elected principal of the Grantsville Normal, which will open on April 29th for a term of six weeks. Following the Grantsville Normal a like school will be opened in Oakland by Capt. Sanner and Prof. C. E. Bender.

Assemblyman E. A. Weimer and Senator H. J. Speicher returned to Oakland from Annapolis yesterday morning, the Senator later going to his home in Accident with Mrs. Speicher, who has been in Annapolis for some time. Delegate Lawton went from Annapolis to Philadelphia on business and is not expected to arrive in Oakland until later in the week.

Mr. and Mrs. Elmo Browning and little child, of Pittsburgh, arrived in Oakland Monday afternoon and will remain in this section for an indefinite period of time. Mr. Browning has just been discharged from a Pittsburgh hospital where he was being treated for injuries received early in the winter when he was run down by a train while crossing the railroad tracks. As a result of his injury he lost his right leg and for several weeks it was feared his arm would also have to be amputated.

DESERVED HONOR.

Oakland Young Lady Recipient of Distinguished Consideration.

At a meeting of Phi Beta Kappa Society of Cornell University held one day last week in Goldwin Smith Hall, Miss Mary Rebecca Thayer, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred. A. Thayer, of Oakland, was the recipient of great honors when she was elected to membership in the Society. The Phi Beta Kappa is the oldest fraternity in the world whose qualification is excellence in scholarship.

This organization numbers among its members almost all of the great intellects of this country, and the honor is seldom conferred upon graduates unless they have made some contribution to knowledge.

In the large graduating class there were but four who received the honor, Miss Thayer being the only woman.

THE DEATH RECORD.

THOMAS B. WILEY.

Ex-County Treasurer Thomas B. Wiley, of Bittinger, died at his home in that village last Friday after a protracted illness, aged seventy years. Mr. Wiley was an ex-union soldier, being a member of the 3rd Md. P. H. B. He saw considerable service in the Valley of Virginia. He was a member of the Lutheran church at Bittinger and was consistent in his religious belief. As a man he stood high in the estimation of his fellowmen and is survived by his widow and several children.

MRS. MARY HELBIG.

Death entered the home of one of the oldest and highest esteemed residents of Oakland on Tuesday evening at nine o'clock and claimed as its own Mrs. Mary Brinkman Helbig, wife of Mr. John Helbig, to whom the deceased lady was married on July 22nd, 1858, in Cumberland, removing from that city, then a country town, to Oakland two years later, where the couple continued to reside for more than half a century, and where they reared their family of six sons and four daughters to manhood and womanhood. The death of the wife and mother is the first to occur in the home circle of the devoted couple. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Helbig are John, Jr., Joseph P., Andrew W., Harry H., George, Edward W., Mrs. John W. Hart, Mrs. Charles E. White, Misses Agnes and Bertha, all residents of Oakland or its immediate community with the exception of the eldest son, Mr. John Helbig, Jr., whose home is near Frostburg, Allegany county. Mrs. Helbig is also survived by forty-eight grandchildren and two great grandchildren; and by one sister, Mrs. P. J. Rauch, of Lamar, Kansas. Three grandchildren died, two of them in infancy and one, Miss Mamie Hart, after she had grown to young womanhood. Mrs. Helbig was born in Germany on June 15th, 1835, and came to this country twenty years later, taking up her residence in Cumberland. Mrs. Helbig's life and work was devoted to her family and friends, her church and her creed; she was greatly loved by all who knew her or came under her influence, which at all times was for good. She was a member of the Catholic church in which edifice funeral services will be conducted Friday morning at 10.30 by her pastor, Rev. James E. Connell, with interment in the local Catholic cemetery. May her rest be undisturbed.

Oakland will be visited by Pittsburgh manufacturers, jobbers and wholesalers on Wednesday, May 22. On that date a special train of Pullmans and diners, bearing members of the Chamber of Commerce of Pittsburgh on their twelfth trade extension tour will arrive during the forenoon and remain 40 minutes. Besides Oakland, stops will be made at McKeesport, West Newton, Connellsville, Uniontown, Washington, Pa., Cumberland, Keyser, Grafton, Fairmont, Mannington, Clarksburg, Sistersville, New Martinsville, Wheeling, W. Va., and Marietta, Ohio. It will require four days to make the tour.

The Kind You Have Always Bought

Bears the Signature of Chas. H. Fletcher.

Just at this season of the year, when the weather is such as to make it almost impossible for householders to to even attempt to clean their yards and grounds surrounding their homes of the litter that has accumulated during the long winter months, it is a pleasure to contemplate the beauties of nature that will be shortly unfolded in the woods when plant life springs into being and the hundreds of beautiful wild flowers will put forth their blooms. In the interval, however, hundreds of people are flocking daily to the Weber hot houses near town and are lost in wonder and admiration at the thousands of flowering plants spread out before them. Some of these plants are rare to this section of the country, amongst them being the azalia, imported direct from Holland by the Weber firm just now in the heighth of bloom and of shades and colors the most delicate. Another just as beautiful and rare shrubs is the cultivated rododendron, in shades most entraeing.

AMISH COLONY LOCATING IN SOUTHERN ALABAMA.

Well Known Citizens of Elk Lick-Grantsville Section Going to Emigrate to the Sunny South.

According to a letter published in the Sugar Creek, Ohio, Budget, Elk Lick township and the Grantsville, Md., district, will in the near future lose several enterprising and highly respected Amish citizens. Val Bender of near Springs and C. J. Yoder from near Grantsville are among the prospective emigrants. Mr. Bender in his published letter, telling of his recent trip to Alabama, in company with Emanuel Hershberger and C. J. Yoder, says:

We arrived at Bay Minette, Dec. 20th and visited at the homes of Bros. E. N. Beachy, Ben Olich, Enos Swartzentruber and Jake Yoder.

Bro. Hershberger stayed but one week while Bro. Yoder and I stayed three weeks, and took a general view of the country. As we had a mule team for two days whose gate of travelling was two miles per hour we therefore had plenty of time to size up that part of the country.

We saw some very nice land and some was swampy and part of it consists of rounded elevations and depressions. From Bay Minette through Loxley to Foley the country is mostly nice and level, having some beautiful scenery.

We saw an orange orchard of 2 1-2 acres, trees being as full of oranges as any ladies apple tree I ever saw. They estimated the value of the oranges at $2,000 per acre and they had sold from one tree $65.25 worth of oranges. The orchard was from five to twelve years old.

They can raise any kind of fruits, with the exception of apples, which are not much of a crop.

Corn, sweet potatoes, Irish potatoes and the like are successfully grown, two crops in a year. They frequently raise 400 bushels of sweet potatoes to the acre in one crop. Last July, twenty-seven car loads of sweet potatoes were shipped from Foley, which were sold at $1.20 per bushel. I saw one sweet potato that weighed 15 pounds, and one weighed 10 pounds.

Sugar cane and upland rice are also very successfully grown. Have seen in the Land Agents' offices sixteen different kinds of hay raised in Baldwin county, Alabama. Saw one man who had 25 acres of Cassava on which he pastured eighty hogs; put it in October and expects it to last till May. The hogs are nice and fat, and were not fed on anything else.

We shook hands with one man 112 years old, weighed 80 pounds, and he walked to a post office nearly every day and back, 2 miles away.

Bro. Yoder and I each bought 40 acres of land at Loxley, and expect to move there in October and make it our future home, with some others and expect that a conservative church will be started there later. An Amish church (old order) has been started at Bay Minette.

We would all be glad to see some others come. I have been in fifteen different states and believe this is the "Garden Spot" of all. They have no snow and let their stock out in the fields all winter, which is almost like summer here. If any one wishes to have any questions answered I will be glad to do so.

At the meeting of the literary society, March 29th, the following officers were elected: President Robert White; vice-president, Hellice Rathbun; secretary, Ralph Sanders; recording secretary, Bernadette Hart; treasurer, Lulu Friend; Editor of Star, Walter Dawosn.

The program was well rendered and in the absence of Mr. E. H. Sincell, who was to have given us a talk, Mr. Augustine, of Accident, gave us some very good thonghts.

The High School will have, as holidays, Good Friday and Easter Monday.

On Tuesday morning Miss Arnold read an article on Nature Study, which gave an account of the way a class of boys conducted their work along that line.

A WORD FOR ELDER RUSSELL.

(By St. Garbouth, Pastor Christian Church, Bloomington, Ill.)

I have read a number of articles in the Christian Standard during the last few months concerning Millennial Dawn, or, as it is called by Elder Russell, the Pilgrim Teachings, and the writer of these articles has a pretty and comfortable position for the salvation of souls, there are those who have been led astray and confused by reading Russell's "Studies in the Scriptures," the first and fifth volumes more than once. I have read all the volumes and traced up and down his teachings as I could find. In not a single instance does the writer reply in the same Christian spirit which characterizes Russell's writings. In some instances the writer resorted to the only weapon left to the man without an argument—ridicule. Others either willingly misrepresent his teachings or do not know what he does teach. As a rule they do not touch upon the real subject matter of his "studies" but attack some minor subject that Russell himself would not hold as a matter of faith but as being of a more of less speculative characther.

The my mind, Elder Russell presents the most Scriptural, clear and soul-satisfying conception of the person of Jesus I have ever heard or read. The same is true of man, his creation, his experience with sin, God's plans for his redemption, the gospel of Jesus Christ and man's future destiny. Now if any good brother feels that Elder Russell's books are doing the church of Christ harm, let him read his books (all six studies) carefully, prayerfully, once or a dozen times if it need be, until he knows he has the author's thought, challenging every doctrine thought until it is proven by the open Book, then just as carefully, prayerfully, and with the Christian spirit shown by Elder Russell, let him take up his task, and, in a logical, Scriptural way, step by step, show his brethren that the teaching of Elder Russell is incorrect. Then will he have something worth while. But so long as Elder Russell is attacked in the present manner, no one who has read his "Studies" will be convinced of the error therein if error there be. Let no brother deceive himself into thinking that he can successfully thwart the teaching of the six volumes of "Scriptural Studies" in a few articles in the Christian Standard or even in a tract such as Haldemann's and others.

One thing Elder Russell's books will do if carefully read by any earnest, thoughtful Christian he will read and study his Bible more and more, he will lose his interest in worldly things. It will not be necessary to preach to him that he could not go to the theatre, play cards or dance, for he will have no desire to do those things, as well as many other things in which most Christian people indulged. It will not be necessary to solicit money from him for the Lord's work—it will be forthcoming without solicitation. It would seem that, until some brother is able to present the gospel and provide "meet in due season" that does this work as well as Russell's "Studies in the Scriptures" it might be well to look inward for the beam, not outwards for the mote and let his "Studies" continue to do that that which most preachers admit they are not able to accomplish. Give Elder Russell a square deal.—Paxton, Ills., Daily Record.

volved eighty or more defendants. Eight out of twelve defendants were convicted on one indictment after trial by jury and their conviction confirmed by the court of appeals, and thirteen criminal prosecutions are pending.

A brief review of the cases brought under the anti-trust law during the administration demonstrates clearly its value to the American people in their protection of that equality of opportunity which is declared by the platform of the Republican party to be the right of every citizen.

Reference to a few of the anti-trust cases brought by the Taft administration gives an excellent idea of the hardships some of these illegal combinations entail upon consumers. In the prosecution of a case against a number of individuals who attempted to corner all the free cotton remaining of the crop of 1903 it resulted in a raise in the price of that commodity to the spinners, prevented some from making any purchases and was therefore restraining interstate commerce.

In like manner the government took cognizance of the pooling in the wire industry, with the result that nine indictments were found in New York against eighty-three persons engaged in that business. It was an illegal restraint of trade, and when the court proceedings had been finished the various defendants were fined in amounts averaging $1,000 each, with the exception of the supervisor of the pool, who was fined $45,000.

One of the most outrageous cases of combination in restraint of trade and a notable violation of the Sherman law was that of the hand blown window glass industry. Practically all of the manufacturers (eighty-three in number) formed a company which controlled the entire output of hand blown glass. As a result the price was advanced 100 per cent within less than a year. The indictment of the men responsible, the imposition of fines and the restoration of the business upon its former lines were followed by a substantial reduction in the price of hand blown glass.

The federal government is prosecuting suits against the beef trust and the lumber trust with every promise of victory.

No Brass Band.

Brass bands and megaphones have not been needed to herald the accomplishments of the administration of President Taft. All of the great achievements for which the president is directly responsible have been accomplished quietly and without the slightest semblance of noise or bluster. The voters of the country displayed their faith in President Taft and his policies in 1908, and they are prepared to renominate and re-elect him.

Deserves Another Term.

Representative J. Hampton Moore, who is well known in many different sections of the country on account of his active interest in waterway improvements, in discussing the administration of President Taft has this to say:

"President Taft ought to be renominated and elected because he stands for stability. He should be nominated because it has been generally conceded by Republicans since the first day he entered the office that the same treatment would be accorded him with respect to a second term that is usually accorded to Republican presidents who have done well. There is no good party excuse for not nominating him. He should be elected because, while not a political president in the sense that he has played politics to the satisfaction of all elements of his party, he has in fact been a broad gauge president, conservative in all matters affecting the dignity of the office and the obligations assumed by him to sustain and uphold the constitution and the laws of this country."

Taft's Efforts For Peace.

Honesty of intention, stability of purpose and a firm faith in the principles of the party of Lincoln, Grant and McKinley are some of the characteristics of President Taft. Familiar with the horrors of war, as well as the enormous expense that it always entails, independent of the vast expenditures required to keep a great nation upon a constant war footing, the president has persistently sought to promote a worldwide peace of nations by international agreement. Any failure of accomplishment in furthering this worthy cause cannot be charged to the president.

DELEGATES FOR TAFT.

On Saturday, March 23, 1912, the number of delegates elected to the Republican national convention pledged to President Taft were as follows:

District of Columbia	2
Florida	12
Georgia	22
Indiana	4
Iowa	8
Michigan	4
Missouri	6
New Mexico	7
Oklahoma	4

TAFT'S RECORD AGAINST TRUSTS

Sherman Law Enforced Without Fear or Favor.

EXCELS HIS PREDECESSORS.

Both In Civil and Criminal Prosecution Taft Administration Breaks All Records—Legal Accomplishments of Five Presidents Compared.

TAFT'S ANTI-TRUST RECORD.

Under the last five administrations prosecutions under the Sherman anti-trust law have been brought as follows:

	Civil suits.	Criminal suits.	Total.
Under Harrison (three years)	4	3	7
Under Cleveland (four years)	5	2	7
Under McKinley (four and one-years)	Three bills in equity.
Under Roosevelt (seven and one-half years)	18	25	44*
Under Taft (two years and eleven months)	22	40	62

*One property seizure.

The ratio of prosecutions, allowing for length of time in office, of the Taft administration as compared with the records of its four immediate predecessors is approximately as follows:

Taft over Harrison	9 to 1
Taft over Cleveland	12 to 1
Taft over McKinley	30 to 1
Taft over Roosevelt	4 to 1

President Taft's administration has broken all records for prosecutions brought and won under the Sherman anti-trust law. Without fear or favor it has brought to the bar of justice corporations and persons engaging in illegal combinations in restraint of trade, the ultimate purpose of each combination being to create a monopoly and to raise the prices on its products. In two years and eleven months of his administration President Taft has caused to be brought four more civil suits and fifteen more criminal prosecutions than Mr. Roosevelt brought in the seven and one-half years of his administration.

Until Mr. Taft became the president the administration of Mr. Roosevelt held the record in both particulars. Thus has President Taft, who was Mr. Roosevelt's right arm during his last administration, kept his pledge to the American people to uphold and maintain the policies of his predecessors in punishing the criminals and undesirable element in the big business of the country.

In the Republican national platform of 1908 reference was made to the prosecution of evil trusts and monopolies as one of the great accomplishments of the Roosevelt administration, and the platform declared that the Sherman anti-trust law had been a wholesome instrument for good in the hands of a wise and fearless executive. In his speech of acceptance Mr. Taft pledged himself to the enforcement of this law and has kept his promise.

Problems Confronting Taft.

Stripped of controversy as to the exact meaning of certain language of the Sherman anti-trust act, the questions that had to be determined by those in administrative authority and those who judicially determine their acts were, first, how effective the law was to reach the great aggregations of formerly competitive producers and dealers, individual and corporate, who, through intercorporate stockholding mergers, consolidations and otherwise, had acquired so great a control over a particular line of industry as to enable them to dominate it and to exclude or admit competition as they might choose upon their own terms.

Secondly, to determine whether that construction of the law was correct which had been given to it by some of the judges of the circuit court in New York in the tobacco case and in the opinions of some of the justices of the supreme court in other cases to the effect that any combination which in any respect operated to restrain to any degree a pre-existing competition in interstate commerce was necessarily condemned by law.

In the three years of the Taft administration all of the sixteen cases left pending by the previous administration have been disposed of except two, which have been argued and submitted to the supreme court of the United States and are now awaiting decision. Of the remaining cases the Standard Oil case was argued early during the present administration and, after an appeal, decided entirely in favor of the government. The same was also true of the tobacco cases, with the ultimate result of the disintegration of that big trust into fourteen separate and distinct corporations. This, it is believed, will effectively prevent a continuance of the monopolistic conditions complained of.

Taft Anti-trust Record.

During the Taft administration up to February, 1912, twenty-two civil suits have been brought and forty criminal indictments found under the Sherman law, making in all sixty-two proceedings. As a result there were fifteen indictments, and eleven of these in-

DO TRADING AT HOME

Patronize Local Merchants and Eradicate Mail Order Fever.

WILL HELP TOWN'S PROGRESS

Look For Bargains In Home Stores and the Home Town Will Surely Continue to Develop and Prosper—Make This Year a Memorable One.

During the course of the new year there will be renewed, or, rather, continued, throughout the length and breadth of the United States the fight against the mail order menace. All indications point to a campaign of opposition in 1910 that will surpass in effectiveness any efforts heretofore put forth by the merchants and other business men of the smaller cities and towns and by such of the citizens not in business as have come to realize that mail order buying saps the life-blood of the community.

The campaign of education went on with lengthening strides during 1909. Communities which a year or two ago were on the verge of dissolution from anaemic exhaustion, blood loss through business loss, have been aroused to their condition and show unmistakable signs that they know what has caused their ailment and are going to try hard to overcome the cause.

While, as a matter of course, many towns still need to have the prod of the knowledge of the art of self preservation thrust into them up to the hilt, there is scarcely a neighborhood outside the great cities which has failed to experience some acceleration in the movement toward a revival or a retention of home trade.

The problem, boiled down to the bitter dregs, is this: So far as business is concerned, are the hitherto prosperous towns of the United States to become mere suburbs of the enormously overgrown cities?

That is exactly what the problem looks like to a man up a tree of observation. It really requires no climb to a high altitude to make the discovery.

The way to calculate is to calculate. If you have been a student of the spreading disease, pernicious anaemia, which has been afflicting the smaller towns of this country for about a dozen years past, due to infection from the microbe of mail order trading, you can calculate easily, without hiring experts, that unless somebody does something toward eradicating the germ the town community will continue to decline by slow exhaustion.

The main trouble with a great many of our towns is that they don't properly diagnose their own symptoms until the disease germ has got a strangle hold. The mail order menace is like the hookworm, which was exploited so widely in the press during the past year. The hookworm attaches itself to the vitals and hangs on, sucking out the vitality. One hookworm doesn't do much damage. The patient could stand one or a dozen or a score and never experience any vast discomfort or get that tired feeling which is said to make the hookworm victim careless whether school keeps or lets out before recess, but a hundred hookworms, all working at once on the same subject, are calculated to cause him to loaf on the shady side of the fence instead of hoeing corn.

One mail order buyer in a community isn't much of a menace. But when a hundred, a thousand, become mail order "bugs" the community is mighty likely to suffer that wilted feeling that comes to a cherry tree when some truthful George has skinned its bark with his little hatchet.

The trouble is that many of the Georges who are hacking away at their community tree with the mail order ax are not candid enough to confess it and promise not to do so again. They want to let the other Georges do it—to 'fess up and ask forgiveness, promising to go and sin no more. Many mail orderers send their orders secretly, and when the goods come they say nothing as to where they were bought.

This, by the way, is a good sign too. When a citizen becomes ashamed of himself for helping to sap the life-blood of his own town by pouring cash into the coffers of distant and opulent strangers it is an indication that the leaven of civic pride is working within him.

Who in this community is paying constant tribute to some gigantic corporation store in a city that cares nothing for this town save to get its money? It is a fine thing to put money in circulation, far finer than to let it rust in tomato cans or retired socks. But the citizen, man or woman, who has the interests of the home community at heart prefers to put the money in circulation around home. Like bread cast upon the waters, it will come back to you after many days if you cast it upon local waters. But if you cast your bread upon the ocean of the mail order trade it will get swept into the gulf stream and never come back.

Bargains are all right. All of us love to get a bargain when we trade. But if all of us should send our money to Chicago or Boston or New York or San Francisco for bargains when the home merchants are offering bargains also how long will the home merchant last and how long will the home town continue to develop?

The thing to do is to begin the new year right by getting into the "forward march" ranks of the home guards and get out of the crawfish brigade that puts our town on the backward crawl.

Let's all think it over in 1910.

ROBERTUS LOVE.

THE MAIL ORDER BUSINESS.

Its Progress Keeping the Local Merchants Struggling For Existence.

The marvelous growth of the mail order business in recent years is calculated to stagger humanity in local communities where general merchants or specialists in any sort of merchandise are struggling for an existence against the gigantic concerns in the big cities which have back of them the power of millions of dollars capital. A writer in the Saturday Evening Post says that in June, 1906, a large mail order house was reorganized. The concern's total assets were valued at $10,000,000. It issued preferred stock to that amount and common stock representing good will to the amount of $30,000,000.

To appraise the good will of a merchandising concern—which, in the nature of the case, could have no monopolistic advantages—at $3 for every dollar of its tangible assets seemed rather excessive. As a matter of fact, the common stock sold as low as $20 a share. But for some time it has been steadily rising, and it now sells at $120 a share.

A syndicate of shrewd capitalists intimately acquainted with the business is said to have bought a large block of it at a high figure. At current quotations, then, this concern's mere good will is valued at $36,000,000. Moreover, this house was founded not many years ago by men of small means, and the tangible assets of $10,000,000 at the time of reorganization were composed very largely of accumulated profits.

So we have a total value of about $45,000,000 created or built up within a comparatively few years in the business of selling at retail groceries, dry goods, furniture, and so on, to farmers, villagers and the residents of the smaller towns and cities throughout the country.

The local merchant finds himself up against a proposition that means a fight to the finish for self preservation. The lightweight as to capitalization is pitted against the heavyweight. If the townsmen and personal friends of the lightweight fail to back him in the ring there is a likelihood of a knockout in an early round. They can back him by giving him the cheerful aid of trading at home instead of increasing the advantage of the heavyweight by doing catalogue buying.

PAINTING THE RURAL HOUSES

Good Judgment Necessary In Selecting Colors to Make Town Attractive.

One of the principal things that goes far in the improvement of a town and which first attracts the attention of visitors is the selection of colors for painting the houses in rural communities. It is an easy matter for any citizen who has the welfare of his town at heart to select a color for his house that will harmonize with everything around his home. The safe colors for a house, besides red, are white, gray, yellow and brown. Yellow or gray, with white trimmings, suits many a plain pitch roofed or square colonial house. Grays and browns are good for ugly nondescript ones, the grays always being pleasanter on the yellow shades than on cold blue tones. White suggests the formal type again. It is a very good color for a country house, showing it up from a distance in fascinating glimpses, for it needs trees about it and flowers to sparkle against its walls. Such a house will be attractive when the leaves are gone from the trees, for the bare boughs will serve to soften the effect.

Beauty Without and Within.

"We are coming," says President Luther of Trinity college in the Chronicle of Elyria, O., "to understand that not only should our bridges be beautiful, but our public buildings must be beautiful, our river banks must be beautiful, the homes of the poor as well as those of the rich must be beautiful and, being beautiful, will be such as the poor as well as the rich can live in safely, profitably, wisely. As we clean and beautify and make splendid the cities and the towns in which we live, as we tie them together into more and more efficient corporate units, struggling for the common welfare of us all, we shall find that the unlovely things in human nature, in our own nature, the dishonesties, the foulness, the dishonors that have held back so long and so terribly the progress of mankind will be more and more impossible. A city materially beautiful will be spiritually beautiful also."

A Town Without Streets.

By common consent of its residents center walks have superseded sidewalks in Venice, Cal., a picturesque town by the sea, fifteen miles from Los Angeles. The innovation practically converts the many short streets leading from the ocean front into recreation grounds, where children may play in safety without fear of being dispersed or injured by passing vehicles. By mutual agreement between the property owners and the city officials all vehicular traffic is excluded from certain streets, the tradesmen and others being relegated to the use of twenty foot alleys which abut upon the rear of all lots fronting upon the cross streets. The streets were improved at the expense of the abutting property owners.

No Officers Necessary In This Town.

Civic righteousness has made a new record, and municipal, civil and criminal business is dull in Lake Arthur, La., with the result that the mayor has resigned and the town marshal's salary has been reduced to $1 a month. The mayor tendered his resignation to the city council because, he said, there was "nothing to do."

PROGRESS IN THE WEST

Annual Session of the Washington State Grange.

Some of the Important Items of Business Transacted—Almost Ten Thousand Members Now—C. B. Kegley Re-elected State Master.

One of the most progressive state granges in the Union is that of Washington, where C. B. Kegley is state master. The twenty-first session of that body was held June 1 at Ellensburg. Some of the more important items of business transacted were the following: A resolution was adopted demanding that the officers of the national grange make regular reports to the membership through state granges as to the status of the national grange official organ, now being published at Concord, N. H., under the direction of the national grange executive committee. No detailed report of the business of this paper has ever been made to the national grange. Another resolution asking for the appointment of a deputy to organize granges in the state from among the grange workers of the state was also adopted. There has been considerable criticism on the part of the far west granges in regard to the policy of the national master to send eastern organizers into the western territory.

Another resolution adopted called for the statement of the expenses of the national grange to the various state granges. Another asked for the appointment of a state matron to have charge of the juvenile work. A standing committee on good roads was appointed. A reform in taxation was called for in which the person who makes improvements on property should not have to bear the burden of taxation also. The grange recommended that the state adopt the plan of a regular tax levy for the support of state institutions. The grange opposed state aid roads as being a vehicle for "graft" and corruption. It urged that districts be allowed to elect their own supervisor. It asked that practical agriculture be added to the course of study in the common schools. During the year sixty-seven new granges were organized with 2,785 members. The total membership is now 9,132 in 181 granges. There are also thirteen Pomona or county granges and two juvenile granges. The sixth degree was conferred on eighty-eight candidates. C. B. Kegley was re-elected state master.

New Hampshire's Grange Lectures.

There is much interest in New Hampshire over the free public lecture course instituted and supported by the state grange in connection with the subordinate granges. There has been a lecture fund since 1905, when the state grange appropriated $1,000 for furnishing lecturers to subordinate granges, literature, etc. At the last annual meeting of the state grange $800 was added to this fund, and a course of free public lectures has been instituted. The expense of a course of three lectures is about $30, half of which is paid by the subordinate grange, if able, and the rest by the state grange. A hundred applications have been made for these lectures, and about one-eighth are wholly supported by the state grange.

A Prosperous Maine Grange.

Limestone grange, Aroostook, Me., has increased its attendance from a few to a strong organization largely through its business methods in cooperative buying and selling. A year ago this grange had hardly members enough for officers and attendance. They organized a grange store, got their members interested, and now their attendance runs from 50 to 100 each night. About 100 suspended members were taken back into good standing. Degrees have been conferred upon about fifty candidates recently.

Our Grange Cabinet Officer.

President Taft did well to retain Secretary of Agriculture James Wilson in his cabinet. Being first appointed by President McKinley, this Iowa farmer and member of the grange, thus breaks all records for length of service, being a member of the president's official family in four administrations. While not actively engaged in grange work now, owing to his official duties, Commissioner Wilson is nevertheless vitally interested in the work and progress of the Order.

National Secretary Freeman reports 189 granges organized and seventeen reorganized for the first quarter of this year. Michigan heads the list with thirty-two, followed by Washington, with twenty-eight, and New York, with twenty-five.

Hopewell grange, Illinois, is certainly going to sweeten up, as it has recently purchased 5,000 pounds of sugar. Perhaps the canning season is in view.

Union grange, Chautauqua county, N. Y., has donated $20 toward the education of teachers in the Chautauqua agricultural teachers' course this year.

To own a magnificent $400 Upright Piano will be the privilege of some lady in this section through The Republican's contest. To secure some of the other big prizes offered will be the privilege of other young ladies in the contest and work is required to win, that's all.

The Republican offers this great opportunity to its readers and friends. It's yours. Votes are coming in to this office by the hundreds and the contest is just two weeks old.

The keys to the ballot box, which is now installed in the sanctum, are in the hands of Mr. Henry Bauer who will have charge of the locking and unlocking the ballot box at the time of the count. The judges are honest men of good standing in the community, and will have charge of counting the ballots and awarding the prizes.

Nothing is more talked about in this community at present than the great prize voting contest inaugurated by the Republican and votes are in great demand. The town and country are being canvassed for them and the merchants who are giving prizes are continually being asked for coupons.

Many people are willing to help their friends in this contest, and are only waiting to be asked. The first candidate to ask, of course will be the one to get the assistance of friends. Those who desire to enlarge their count should get out among their friends and make their wants known.

The prizes that are offered are surely worth the small effort required. Let each contestant show the people that she has the determination to succeed in anything she undertakes and that she is out to win.

The list of prizes and rules and regulations will be found on another page of this issue.

First count in contest will be made Wednesday, April 17th, at which time $10 in gold we awarded to the contestant having the largest number of votes at that time.

The Republican has mailed letters, rules and regulations to all contestants to date, but if there are any who have failed to receive them if you will kindly call at the Republican office they will be supplied.

Those who do not fully understand the rules and regulations of this contest may call or write this office and we will be pleased to go over the proposition with them.

Remember to have your friends trade with merchants who are giving coupons.

Get busy and vote for your choice. The contest will be conducted squarely and no partiality will be shown to any one. Do it now and help some one reap the benefits of this liberal offer.

Watch every issue of the Republican for important announcements.

The following names have been suggested to act as awarding committee and count the ballots, and if no objections are offered they will constitute the committee:

change in the law as it now exists with the Bill that I have now pending to give them the right to vote in the town of Oakland which was exempted from the original law.

Now, Mr. President, while the fight was on in the House on this Bill, the advocates of the Bill being in a majority and every effort put forth by those in opposition to it to break in on the ranks of the "drys," I encouraged the members from my county to stand firm by their guns, vote against every amendment and for the Bill, and if Mr. Anderson would have stood firm and not yielded to this amendment I assure you that should the fight have continued up to this time on the other side of the hall, you would find the members from Garrett county as firm as ever, voting against every amendment that could have been offered.

I see in the Baltimore Sun of Saturday, March 23rd, that this amendment was suggested by the distinguished Senator from Montgomery County, and a wise choice did he make in choosing Mr. Cummings to run the bluff, in saying he had enough votes to defeat the Bill if these amendments were not adopted after they had been defeated by a vote of 67 to 32. I find in the same issue that the "drys," led by Mr. Maltbie, put the proposition up to Superintendent Anderson and he accepted it. The article continues by saying in its amended shape the effect of the Bill is practically killed as far as Baltimore City is concerned, because it is expected that it will go "wet," with the city-wide vote. This will probably be the result in nearly all of the other counties named in the amendment. In the same article a little further on I find something like this: "Friends of Senator Lee say that his amendment, by saving the day for the Baltimore City people, will make him stronger in Baltimore politics and make him many friends in a locality where he has been weaker than in other parts of the State."

Now, Mr. President, the Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League, knowing the effect of this amendment, and so agreeably accepting it, makes the whole situation look as if he were playing politics for the Senator from Montgomery. Mr. Anderson should have known that the Senator from Montgomery could never have taken the responsibility to kill this Bill in the House, and, having the votes to pass the Bill without any amendments, he should in my opinion, have ordered his men to stand firmly by their guns, and had the Bill met defeat at the hands of the Montgomery Delegation, then to let the defeat rest where it would have justly belonged.

Mr. President, I see in the Baltimore Sun of Sunday, March 24th, that Rev. Dr. J. Fred. Heisse, President of the Anti-Saloon League, said that the amendment allowing Baltimore City to vote as a unit on the Local Option Bill greatly weakened the Bill and was directly in opposition to what the local option in the City had been fighting for. So why, Mr. President, should we give them what they don't want? I also notice in the same issue where Mr. Anderson says Senator Lee broke in on their solid line and it was at his suggestion that the amendment was adopted, and now it is up to him to get it through the Senate. Sunday evening, March 24th, the Baltimore News had the following to say in regard to the placing of the responsible for the passage of the Bill. It quotes Mr. Anderson as saying, if the Local Option Bill is lost, the blame will be on the President of the Senate. But, Mr. President, and gentlemen of the Senate, I want to emphatically say to you that the President of this Senate is in no way responsible for my vote or my action on this Bill. You, Mr. President, and the gentlemen of this Senate with whom I have had the honor and pleasure to serve with during the sessions of 1910 and 1912, know my position on the temperance question. My record will show that I have supported every temperence measure that has come before the Senate and the Journal will show that not one single vote was ever cast by me against any temperance measure. You will remember during the session of 1910, when the Senator from Washington county had a Bill before this body to repeal the Anti-Saloon law for that county, I voted against the Bill, notwithstanding it was a local measure, and it is expected that each Senator will extend that courtesy to support all local measures as long as there are no party principles involved.

Mr. President, I want to say to this Senate, that I have always been on the temperance side of the question. I was raised within five minutes' walk from a town which always had license with the exception of about four years ago, and I never loafed ten minutes in that place in my life, and I can say what, perhaps, some of the advocates of this Bill cannot say, that I never was under the influence of liquor in my life and never took a drink of whiskey over any man's bar.

Now, Mr. President, my mind was thoroughly made up to support the State-wide Local Option Bill, and I told Mr. Mills two weeks ago that he could expect my support, but not to allow any any amendments to the Bill. On Friday night when the proposition was put up to the supporters of the Bill to accept Senator Lee's amendments, I served notice on them then, and I advised the Delegates from Garrett to vote against the amendments, and that, if the League agreed to accept the amendments they, in my opinion, would not be criticised if they voted against the Bill; and, Mr. President, since the League agreed to this amendment I am of the opinion that if they had turned it down the Bill would have gone through the House without a scratch. The fight was one by the League, and instead of calling the bluff that was put up to them, Mr. President, they yielded to the amendments after I told them I would not support it if they did so. I was opposed to any amendment. Since their agreement to accept amendments, I feel I am duty bound to grant to the members of this Senate who are asking for amendments those which I consider just and right.

Again, what do I find in the Baltimore Evening Sun, March 26th? This, which is given as a interview with Mr. Cummings: "What I did say was that I had bluffed Anderson and had made him take water, and I believe I am the only man who ever has this much." Now, Mr. President, I think every Senator in this body should know the wishes of his people in the county which he represents, and should he refuse legislation which a majority of his constitutents want, they will hold him responsible for his actions. For instance, Mr. President, take the distinguished Senator from Baltimore County; if I am correctly informed, in his election it was a fight for "wet" and "dry," and he was elected by a majority of over 1,000. I will now come closer home, Mr President, and refer you to the distinguished Senator from Allegany county, my neighboring County. He came here from that county, known as a "wet" candidate, by a majority of over 2,500 like which was never given any Senator in the history of the county, and I want to emphasize here that Allegany county can well feel proud of his record here as their representative. I might refer you likewise to the distinguished Senators from Baltimore City. They are supposed to know what the people of Baltimore City want, and should they fail to grant the people of that great City, (of which every Marylander should feel proud) the legislation they want, they alone will be held responsible for their actions. So, I might go all along the line Mr. President, but I will refrain from taking the time of the Senate. But, Mr. President, I feel that the Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League is by no means a Divine Being and should not be regarded as the only man to say what amendments should go to this Bill, and since he has so willingly accepted the amendments offered by the distinguished Senator from Montgomery county, he should also be as willing to accept the amendment offered by the Committee which is now before this Senate.

There seems to be a disposition on the part of the Anti-Saloon League manager, Mr. President, to place the whole responsibility on me should this Bill fail to pass, which I regard as unfair to me, as every other Senator who votes the same as I do, should be held equally responsible; but, Mr. President, knowing as I do that this Bill has plenty of time to go back to the House and for the House to concur in the amendments, should they be adopted, and feeling, as I do, that every Senator should and will be held responsible for legislation for his county and who I regard has as good right to say what amendments should to this Bill as has the distinguished Senator from Montgomery or the Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League. It has been my desire to help to give to every county legislation such as their representatives want, and in the few remaining days of this session I shall not depart from the rule of fairness and honesty that I have tried to mete out to colleagues, and this alone is why I vote as I do on these amendments.

And now, Mr. President, in conclusion, I have been reliably informed that a very close personal and political friend of mine received from the secretary or some member of the Anti-Saloon League a letter requesting him to "get me right" on the Anti-Saloon League Bill, and saying something like this: "It is assumed, whether correct or not, that Senator Speicher, being a close friend of your's, is guided largely by your influence, and it is up to you to get him right." Mr. President, I want to say to this Honorable Body that I am controlled by no one person and none other than myself should be held responsible for my action in this Senate. Again, Mr. President, I want to say it was my full intention to support the State-wide bill, should it come to us without any amendments, though not being pledged, but since the amendment granting the towns of Elliott City and Havre de Grace, the privilege and right to vote as a unit, I regard it just as fair for any other town that may so desire the same right, to be granted the same privilege.

Now a few words in regard to conditions in Garrett county: When I say I believe the people of my county do not want to open up this question over the entire county, I mean the majority of the people, and since this Bill gives to the dry counties all that it could be given Washington county, after Mr. Anderson agreed to accept the Lee amendment, and likewise the two wet counties of Carroll and Frederick will come in under the provisions of the Anti-Saloon League Bill the same as they could without any amendments, this is what the distinguished Senators want who represent those counties.

I want to tell this Senate, Mr. President, that Mr. Anderson said to me that they had to accept the Lee Amendment or get nothing—since that time I see in an interview with Mr. Cummings that he says he ran a bluff on Anderson and was afraid to call it. Now I am prepared to prove to the satisfaction of the people of my County and State, that it was up the Senate to accept the Committee's report or get nothing; the records will show that the most important Legislation is still hanging in the balance and should the amendments have been rejected, there would have been no more legislation this session, as the plans were laid and the organization effected, so I have been reliably informed to hold up everything else and talk the bill to death. And, taking everything into consideration, I am perfectly willing to let the people be the judge whether or not I acted wisely in not accepting the amendments. In addition to the holding up all pending legislation, the appropriations for the State roads, which is of vital interest to every county in the State, and the appropriation receiving State aid, as well as the confirmation of the several thousand appointments made by the present Governor.

In view of all these circumstances, Mr. President, I now vote aye on this proposition.

BIG POWER COMPANY FOR GARRETT COUNTY.

Four Million Dollar Enterprise To Be Built On The Youghiogheny.

At Annapolis Monday Governor Goldsborough waived all protest and signed a bill which means the establishment of a $4,000,000 enterprise in Maryland.

The bill in question amends the charter of the Youhiogheny Power Company, by which the daming of the Youghiogheny River at Friendsville and at a nearby point in the same river is made possible. The estimated horsepower of the electricity to be generated by the dam is 40,000. The big enterprise would have been a certainty by this time had not its charter of two years ago been in conflict with the act creating the Public Service Commission.

This obstacle has been removed and the way is paved for the beginning of the enterprise. By the provisions of the bill Baltimore is excluded as a market for the electric power to be generated.

Pittsburg will probably get it. The company shortly to begin construction is not to be confused with the company which two years ago offered to bring electric power from the summit of the Alleganies to Baltimore. As a matter of fact, it has been demonstrated that electricity for power purposes cannot be transmitted over 200 miles, and Baltimore is twice that distance from the field of operation of the new company. The power producing capacity of the new company is 40,000 horsepower, as compared with the 80,000 horsepower of the huge dam at McCalls Ferry, the source of the greater part of the supply of electricity for Baltimore.

A promise is made that the new company will attract large industrial plants to the vicinity of its operations. In addition the company will supply nearby towns with power.

It was an interesting group which gathered in the State House at Annapolis Monday to witness the signing of the bill. The onlookers included Mr. C. L. Pullen, vice president of the power company; Mr. R. S. Hubbard a Philadelphia capitalist; Col. John Bogart, of New York, well known as the engineer who designed the important power plants at Niagara Falls, and Mr. De Warren H. Reynolds, an attorney of Cumberland, who represents the power company and through whose indefatigable efforts the amendments of the charter were secured.

Mr. Reynolds spent two months at Annapolis during the legislative session advocating the bill and succeeded in overcoming all objections.

Senator Zihlman, of Allegany county, and Senator Speicher, of Garrett, and Mr. W. A. Smith, also of Garrett, who has recently been appointed fish commissioner for the Wertern Shore, and former Senator W. McCulloh Brown, of Garrett, were on hand to add their voices in behalf of the bill.

Governor Goldsborough and Attorney General Poe stated that there had been objections to the bill. Former Attorney General Isaac Lobe Straus said that all objections, as far as conflict with the Public Service Commission had been removed since the bill made the company's act subject to the approval of the commission.

Mr. Poe asked why the company desired the right of condemnation of land.

Mr. Pullen, who is vice president of the company, said that his company owned 10,000 acres, and that adjacent to these acres were 70, which were necessary to the development of the power company. He said this small area, which had cost the purchaser a nominal sum, was held at $50,000, an impossible price, hence the need of power to condemn land.

Colonel Bogart told of the immense possibilities of the development of the property. Senator Speicher and Zihlman and former Senator Brown and Dr. Ravenscrott added their requests that the bill be signed. On file with the Governor were numerous telegrams and letters from residents of Western Maryland urging the Governor to sign the bill.

Col. John Bogart, an eminent American Hydraulic engineer, will have charge of the construction of the plant at Friendsville.

Col. Bogart designed and superintended the power plant at Niagara Falls and is now engaged in constructing on the Tennessee river the second largest power plant in the U. S.

The company will also construct an auxiliary plant or station at Swallow Falls, below the confluence of the Youghiogheny river, Deep Creek and Muddy Creek to be used in connection with the large plant at Friendsville.

TAFT INSISTS ON AID TO FARMERS

Says Department of Agriculture Work Must Go On.

LABORS FOR CONSERVATION.

Farreaching Legislation Administered by Scientists of Rank Brings Good Results to Tillers of Soil—Food and Drugs Act Upheld to the Letter.

In his inaugural address President Taft called attention to the deficit then existing in the revenues and the consequent necessity for rigid economy in expenditures. However, the president singled out the department of agriculture as an exception. He said, to quote his exact words, "In the department of agriculture the use of scientific experiments on a large scale, and the spread of information derived from them for the improvement of general agriculture must go on." This view the president has steadily maintained, and repeatedly has urged appropriations for the work of the department.

In his comprehensive message on conservation President Taft said, "The feature that transcends all others, including woods, waters, minerals, is the soil of the country," and that all means at the government's disposal should be used to conserve the soils, adding, "a work of the utmost importance to inform and instruct the public on this chief branch of the conservation of our resources is being carried on successfully in the department of agriculture."

Reports made recently to Secretary Wilson of the department of agriculture by the heads of his bureaus justify this solicitude on the part of the president for the department. In calling for these reports the secretary asked that they be brief and that they mention notable achievements of the last five years only, inasmuch as that period is really the period of fruition in the department, the period during which, owing to the broad foundations previously laid by the training and grouping of many corps of scientific men, by securing farreaching legislation, by gathering together masses of statistics and other information, by providing scientific and other equipment, it has been possible to produce most marvelous results for the common good of the people.

Taft For Conservation.

In his conservation message President Taft emphasized the importance of the maintenance of the forests and urged their scientific treatment "so that they shall be made to yield a large return in timber without really reducing the supply," and in other messages he pointed out the necessity of reforestation. In accordance with these views much available work has been done in protecting the national forests and by researches in the laboratory of the department at Madison, Wis., and in the past five years the work of reforesting burned over areas has proceeded at the rate of 15,000 to 30,000 acres a year. The department takes justifiable pride in its forest work, considering the administration of 100,000,000 acres of land protected and managed for the public benefit a great achievement.

Since Jan. 1, 1907, when the food and drugs act went into effect, more has been done to provide a good, clean food supply than in all the preceding life of the nation. A wonderful change has also been effected in the character of the drugs on sale. The department has a trained force of inspectors and chemists doing excellent work in all parts of the country in behalf of pure foods and pure drugs. This salutary law, however, needs amendment, as the supreme court held in May, 1911, that its provisions, to quote President Taft's words in his vigorous message to congress a month later, "do not cover the knowingly false labeling of nostrums as to curative effect." The president added: "An evil which menaces the general health of the people strikes at the life of the nation. In my opinion the sale of dangerously adulterated drugs * * * constitutes such an evil and warrants me in calling the matter to the attention of the congress."

Work of Soil Mapping.

Of importance to the farmer has been the work carried on in the past five years of soil mapping and classification, so that now the area included is 407,000 square miles, or nearly 41,000,000 acres. The value of this work is incalculable.

Disseminating the valuable information acquired by the department has proved a wonderful work. Practically 200,000,000 publications have been distributed since Secretary Wilson assumed control of the department, and more than half (103,598,100) of that number have been distributed within the past five years.

Other work accomplished by the department includes a comprehensive system of weather warnings and forecasts, the meat inspection service in which 2,500 experts are employed, who see that every pound of meat sent interstate is fit for human food, protection of live stock, the checking of rodent pests, the destruction of noxious insects, the conservation of water supplies, the building and care of public roads and the policy for better farmhouses, so that every dollar expended in the prosecution of this work in its numerous phases has brought back a hundred fold to the people.

"It thirsts and burns for distinction; and, if possible, it will have it. Is it unreasonable, then, to expect that some men, possessed of the loftiest genius, coupled with ambition sufficient to push it to the utmost stretch, will at sometime spring up among us? And when such a one does, it will require the people to be united with each other, attached to the government and laws, and generally intelligent, to successfully frustrate his design.

"Distinction will be his paramount object, and although he would as willingly acquire it by doing good as harm, yet nothing left in the way of building up he would sit down boldly to the task of pulling down. Here then is a probable case, highly dangerous."

—From Mr. Lincoln's Speech before the Young Men's Lyceum, Springfield, Ill.

—From the Omaha Daily Bee, March 19, 1912.

TAFT MAKES GOOD LABOR PLEDGES

Administration's Record Squares With Its Promises.

MANY NEW LAWS ENACTED.

Postal Savings Banks, Workmen's Compensation and Employers' Liability Laws Passed—Eight Hour Law Upheld—Labor Recognized on Commissions.

From the day three years ago when it placed its interests in the keeping of William Howard Taft to this hour labor has critically scanned his every act, and with discriminating mind it is judging him as one who, without clamor or demonstration, has kept the faith. On Sept. 9, 1908, Theodore Roosevelt, then president of the United States, wrote a letter to Conrad Kohrs on the issues of the campaign and, addressing himself to the laboring men, said:

"If there is one body of men more than another whose support I feel I have a right to challenge on behalf of Secretary Taft it is the body of wage-workers of the country. A stancher friend, a fairer and truer representative they cannot find within the borders of the United States. He will do everything in his power for them except to do that which is wrong. He will do wrong for no man and therefore can be trusted by all men."

Mr. Taft Labor's Friend.

The workingmen of the country judged Mr. Taft in 1908 by a record of twenty-seven years as a statesman, administrator of national affairs and presidential adviser, and they helped to give him the magnificent majority which put him in the White House. During the three years he has been president his excellent record has been maintained so splendidly that the laboring men have been confirmed in the belief that they never had a better friend in the White House.

The establishment of the postal savings banks, which was recommended by President Taft, was one of the things that organized labor favored. The $16,000,000 now on deposit in these depositories represents the savings of the wage earners.

Taft's Personal Interest.

President Taft approved a law on May 30, 1908, to compensate workmen for injuries received while in the employ of the United States. After the passage of this act a number of workmen in the employ of the federal government were killed, and their families, not being familiar with the provisions of the law, failed to file affidavits within the specified time. The secretary of commerce and labor had no power to set aside the provision of the law and was therefore obliged to disapprove the claims.

The matter was taken up by the president, and he satisfied himself that justice was not being done to the families of the men who had been killed. He sent a special message to congress recommending that a general act be passed allowing all such claimants compensation if their claims were otherwise meritorious. This was an instance that proved the president to be broadminded and anxious to aid the workingmen in any way that he could.

An employers' liability act approved June 11, 1906, was on January 8, 1908, held to be unconstitutional. Another of this sort was passed on April 22, 1908, which as yet has not been tested in the courts. Through the efforts of the president a commission was appointed to make an investigation of the subject of "employers' liability and workmen's compensation."

Labor Men Appointed.

The report of the commission, the evidence taken before it and the draft of the bill prepared as a result of the findings of said commission have been transmitted to congress, accompanied by a special message by President Taft, in which he recommends the passage of the proposed measure. In their deliberations the members of the commission had the benefit of frequent consultations with the president. It is believed the act will stand the test of constitutionality.

In order that the commission might have the benefit of the experience of a practical man President Taft appointed as one of its members Daniel L. Cease, the editor of the Railroad Trainmen's Journal, the official organ of the railroad trainmen. Mr. Cease has devoted the best years of his useful life to the cause of labor. The president also appointed experienced labor men as inspectors under the locomotive boiler inspection law. They were John F. Ensign of Colorado and Frank McManamy of Oregon for chief inspector and assistant chief inspector respectively.

The defects in the present eight hour law have not escaped the attention of President Taft. He has recommended to congress amendments which will make it really effective by "providing that public works shall be construed to include not only buildings and works upon public grounds, but also ships' armor and large guns when manufactured in private yards or factories."

Thirty Years' Service.

With regard to the high cost of living, which increases the burden of the wage earners, President Taft has already taken the initiative that will result in a worldwide inquiry into this problem. He has advocated the assembling of a world's congress to discuss its varied phases and to suggest remedies.

This unparalleled record of thirty years' service to the cause of all the people is deserving of consideration. No charge of broken faith or of broken promises can be made, no hint of departure from the plain path of duty can be laid at the door of William Howard Taft, who without ostentatious display has wisely and fearlessly administered the trust imposed upon him in 1908, when he was elected to his high office by the votes of laboring men.

THE DISPATCHER AT ERIE.

He Had the Makings of a Hero In Him.

By HADLEY F. FREEMAN.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

"Sarah, I have finished Harvard, and my father will obtain for me the second vice presidency of the Great Central lines. You know I love you and you only. Will you marry me?"

"Henry," she said, "let us not discuss it here. Come with me into the conservatory." Once seated there, Henry, impetuous and quick tempered, burst out: "Sarah, you would not refuse me? Have you deceived me? Do you love another? Would you"—

"Henry," she interrupted, "be quiet. I love no one but you, but I will never marry a man who has not proved his ability."

"But I do not need"—

"Do not need! True, not now, but if a crash should come or your father should die what would you do? What could you do? What work have you ever done? Do something to prove your ability."

"Sarah, you are right. I have never done anything. I have been quite useless, but I will show my worth."

The effect on Henry was remarkable. The next day bright and early

RUSHED TOWARD THE BIG ROUNDHOUSE.

he entered his father's private office. The elder Sherlock greeted his son with a pleasant "Good morning."

"Dad," Henry stammered, "I want to talk things over with you."

"What's wrong now?"

"Everything."

"And in particular?"

"Sarah won't marry me until I do something."

"And you intend"—

"To throw up the vice presidency, start in at the bottom and work up."

"Very well. When do you wish to begin?"

"Tomorrow."

"All right. I'll see to the job."

That night his father said quietly: "Report to the dispatcher at Erie, O. Leave here at 2:30 a. m. It's fortunate for you that telegraphy was one of your youthful whims. Just as soon as you learn the job you will be given a responsible berth."

"Good night," said Henry and turned in.

And the next morning found him on his way from New York to Erie without having seen Sarah. Happy in the thought that he was to prove himself, he spent most of his trip composing a letter to her telling all and explaining his departure without seeing her.

The next afternoon he reached Erie tired and sleepy. From supper he went directly to bed in the home of one of the dispatchers, where he had secured room and board, and at 6 the next morning he began work.

He soon found that train dispatching was not easy. During the first weeks of his work he was assisted and watched by the dispatcher whose place he was to take. Then began the night shift. As far as population was concerned, Erie was hardly on the map, but as a railroad point it was most important. It was a division point of consequence, as several branches of the main line converged there.

Henry was given complete charge of a branch which boasted but four trains, so it was easy for him to take care of the wire and the train sheets.

How could he keep awake? The station with its cozy fire was almost homelike except for the feeling of loneliness.

He worked on, continually cheered by his letters from home and Sarah and by his own satisfaction at doing something well. And the first pay day—could the bank hold his first four weeks' wages, his $30? Then he was given a really important desk.

But soon he began to be discouraged. Nothing happened. There seemed to be no way to prove himself. And then the test came.

In the middle of February came probably the meanest and most severe storm ever known to that region. The rain, chilled by the lower air and falling on the colder objects below, froze and formed one continuous ice sheet enveloping everything below. Down went trees, fences, wires and bridges—work, work night and day for the repair gangs.

With the wires down, the railroads resorted to the old schedule system of dispatching. But trains were late and the tracks slippery. After six hours of herculean labor a single line was run along the afflicted district of the Great Central lines and limited communication resumed.

On the night of the 16th Henry was sitting drowsily by his little stove.

In these dreams was he engrossed when suddenly and unexpected came the call for Erie—Er. er. Answering, Sherlock received the awful message: "Rocky cut bridge down and the National limited has passed here. Signed, Springdale."

Springdale was the first night station east of Erie and thirty-two miles away. Rocky cut was a mile and a half from Erie in the same direction and spanned by an old wooden railroad bridge. What should he do? Quickly he thought and quickly formed his plan.

On went his hat, coat and gloves, and out the door he tore and rushed toward the big roundhouse. On a nearby siding with steam up stood a switch engine, into which he sprang after opening the switch on to the main track.

He pulled the reverse lever and backed out of the siding on to the main track. With all possible haste he reset the switch, re-entered the cab and opened wide the throttle.

Never before had he gone so fast, never before had he attempted to run alone. In fact, his largest experience in running had been acquired on his father's private train. Now he seemed to stand still. Yet the cut soon opened before him. He braced himself, jammed on both brakes, and as the engine stopped on the edge of the bank he swung to the ground, slipped on the ice and snow and finally sank down in a heap.

He tried to rise. He could use but one foot—he had broken his ankle. How, with only one leg, could he cross the river? Yet he crawled down to the edge, hoping to make his way over on the ice. But the river, contrary to his expectations, was open. He wavered, almost backed out, then thought of Sarah and his opportunity—and plunged into the icy flood.

Hindered by his useless leg, he seemed to make but little progress. Would he never reach the other side? He was fast becoming exhausted when he struck firm ground and crawled out of the water. Painfully he made his way up to a section shanty, where were kept torpedoes for just such an emergency. He grasped several and hurried as fast as possible up the track. He must give the warning far enough from the bridge to allow the racing train time to stop.

And now his iron constiution, which won him collegiate sporting fame, served him well.

But he must go faster. He had but little time. He tried to walk on his broken leg, but it would not support him. He must crawl again. Oh, if he could only run, even for a minute or two! But hark! Even now in the distance he hears the whistle of the approaching train. Disappointed, he stops his mad race and fixes the torpedoes securely to the track.

Now he waits, but not for long. The train reels around the curve. Suppose the torpedoes should fail! But his fears are groundless. As the train passes, one torpedo after another explodes with a deafening roar, the brakes are slammed on, the engine and coaches groan, creak and come to a standstill. The train is saved!

Exhausted and no longer upheld by the intense excitement, he sank down unconscious. In this condition he was found by the trainmen. From letters in his pockets his identity was established and became known throughout the train. "Henry Sherlock!" cried a young woman who rushed out of a car.

She hurried down the track to where they were taking the unconscious man into a sleeper and immediately assumed command. After he had been carefully placed in a berth she sought to soothe him with endearing words and loving caresses. In the meantime a brakeman went through the car for a surgeon. One speedily came, and together they set the broken ankle, bound it and made splints to hold it in position.

Again the doctor examined the man and then shook his head ominously.

"He has developed pneumonia and will need the most careful nursing."

"Oh!" cried Sarah.

"He had best be taken to a hospital as soon as possible. Will you attend to it?"

The limited was detoured over another railroad, and when they reached Toledo, the first large city, Henry, still unconscious, was removed from the train and carried to a hospital.

With her father and mother Sarah had been on her way to California. After the accident she refused to go further, but determined to stay in Toledo with friends. Brave she tried to be, yet the strain was terrible. It was because of her he had gone away. If he were to die it would be her fault! Thus she worried. Would he never recover?

Then on a sunny and summer-like day in early March, with the warm breeze blowing through the window, the recovering patient was allowed to see one visitor.

"Whom shall it be?"

"Sarah—Miss Greene."

And when she rushed into the room and to the bedside, weak though he was, he was strong enough to clasp her tightly to him, while he asked the unnecessary question about his ability and was answered by the dearest girl in the world with a look, a kiss and the one word "Yes."

COMING INDIANS.

FROM the wise and learned doctors
Who have studied up by gaslight
Comes the cheering information
That by reason of the climate
We shall very soon be red men
Like the Indians primeval,
Hiawatha's little brothers,
For by reason of the sunshine
All the blonds are due to vanish,
It's skiddoo to every towhead,
The brunettes will be the people.

When the proud and pink Caucasian
Has been here sufficient summers,
So the rain and wind and weather
Of the climate can get action,
He will then, instead of being
William Jones, the haughty banker;
Thomas Brown, the bill collector;
Peter White, the sausage Maker,
And those other folks familiar,
Be a chieftain proud and haughty,
Yellow Dog or Flying Gopher,
Swinging-in-the-Hammock Charley
Or some other gaudy creature,
With a lot of paint and feathers,
Hiawatha's little brother.

Though we may not like the prospect,
We can only grin and bear it.
Man may sail upon the ocean,
Run the noisy locomotive,
Spread his wings for favored breezes,
Handle the electric current
And perform some other marvels,
But he cannot for a minute
Make the weather change its notions,
Cannot monkey with the climate.

If the wise and learned doctor
No mistake for sure is making
We may bow and ask quotations
Of the wholesale rate on feathers.

Taking Advantage.

It may be that the fire horse crawled under his chain and unlocked the oat bin, helped himself and crawled back; it may be that the bird with a broken wing came and tapped on the window of a surgeon; it may be that the dog that broke the plate took the pieces out and buried the evidence.

We cannot say as to these things. They are a sample of the stories we are getting just now, but it looks to us as though some nature fakers were taking advantage of the absence of a certain gentleman to overwork their specialty before he returned and put a stop to it.

Had Heard of One.

"What is an expert?" asked the teacher of her brightest pupils.

It was a poser for awhile, when one of them raised a hand.

"Do you know, Willie?"

"Yes'm."

"Then what is an expert?"

"A good baseball player."

Just the Difference.

"How do rawnchers do out in this country?" asked the visiting Englishman of the friendly westerner who was showing him about.

"No good," replied the cow puncher.

"Really, I heard they did well."

"Rawnchers don't, but ranchers do."

Uncertain.

"Friend of that family?" asked the stranger of the man who was hanging around near a picnic party.

"I don't know that I could say that."

"You know them?"

"Slightly. You see, I am just the husband and father."

Too Many.

When counting moons at midnight
And four you plainly see
It's time to quit the habit
Of going on a spree.

Doesn't Say So.

"She has her husband trained so he will eat out of her hand."

"Yes, but he does it with a mental reservation."

"On what point?"

"That his mother's cooking was better."

Hadn't Heard of the Earth.

"What is the baby crying for?"

"He wants the moon."

"Is that all? His father will be ashamed of him when he hears about it."

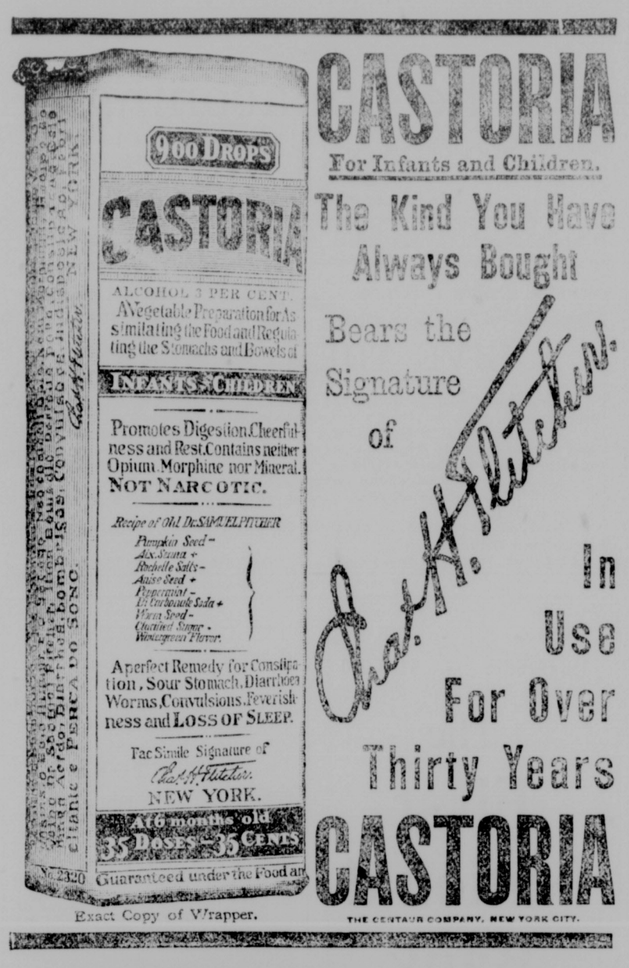
Can Use a Dozen.

When you stand in need of backing
And the talk is loud,
Then it is that you discover
There is not a crowd.

PERT PARAGRAPHS.

There is a difference of opinion as to whether angels are men or women, but out of a large experience we have concluded that they are neither.

Next in abomination to the "I told you so" man is the "why didn't you" man.



A diplomatic individual never knows any fat people, no matter how many stout, robust persons he may have on his calling list.

A poor excuse that is accepted is much better than a good one that is rejected.

You can't be accredited with good intentions if you really know that they are only intentions and never will be anything else.

The Mother as a Character Builder

By
REV. D. L. REID,
Pastor of Crellin M. E. Church,
Crellin, Maryland.

The following sermon was recently preached in the Crellin M. E. Church by the pastor, Rev. D. L. Reid, the occasion being "Mother's Day" services, the outcome of the birthday of Mrs. William Ashby, which was celebrated on the 23rd of February, when she passed her eighty-eighth milestone:

"I call to remembrance the unfeined faith that is in thee, which dwelt first in thy grandmother Louis, and thy Mother Eunice; and I am persuaded that in thee also." 2 Tim. 1:5.

In an eastern city the mothers met to discuss the interests of children and the home. They talked of the best time to begin to train children. One mother got up and said: "I commence with my children at six years of age." Another said: "I begin with mine at five." Another said: "We ought to begin when our children are only four years old." Another said: "I think we should begin at three." An old gray-headed mother got up and said: "I will tell you when you should begin—twenty years before the birth of the child, on its mother, and then you need not worry about its training. God's greatest and best gift to a little child is a good mother. She unconsciously impresses her character upon the lives of her children," God has imprinted on her very features, "The Divinity of Infancy," and impart to her voice a sweetness and pathos that makes her almost omnipotent for good. From the time she first takes her little one into her arms and clasps him to her bosom, to the day when he becomes independent of her guidance, or, it may be, like Washington, directs the destiny of millions, her smile, her word, her wish, is an inspiring force. The remembrance of a praying mother's hand, laid on the head of her child, has power in after years to hold him back from sin and lead him to Chirst.

Some one has said: "That a Mother is both the Morning and Evening Star of life. The light of her eyes is always first to rise, and often the last to set upon man's day of trial." Nothing can take the place of a mother's love. The is no influence so potent in the formation of character as that of a the christian mother. Some one has said: "If I could mother the world, I could save the world. The hand that rocks the cradle, is the hand that rules the world."

"Blessing on the hand of woman,
Angels guard her strength and grace,
In the cottage, palace, hovel,
No matter where the place'
Would that never storms assailed it,
Rainbows ever gently curled;
For the hand that rocks the cradle,
Is the hand that rules the world."

In all the christian world none can deny the influence which the mother exerts over the lives and destinies of her children, whether in the quiet surroundings of her influence in childhood and youth, or when the boy has gone from home and is a restless wanderer tossed by the ocean's waves, or scorches his feet in the desert's sands, or is alone in the mountain wilderness, or has lost his way on the planes of the west; ever in his loneliness and sorrow there comes to his mind that maternal love that watched over his helpless infancy. The earnest yearnings of the spirit, the weary, aching void of the heart, the restless, unsatisfied affections, ever seeking one object of true materal love, made sacred in ones innermost longings, by the hallowed emotions of our hearts, as the vision of the grass-grown mound in the quiet grave yard inspires a reverence and love, which is akin to idolatry, as our thoughts go upward to the glorified spirit among the redeemed of Heaven, and the soul cries out in its yearnings, "There is no love like a Mother's!" Its endearing tenderness transcends all other affections of earth. Not only will she glory in the success of her children and increasing fame; but when troubles and misfortunes come, they are dearer to her heart than ever. When sin, shame and disgrace causes their friends to turn against them and the whole world to cast them aside, she will, with God like affection, love them to the end! The reckless sinner, even in his hardened career, remembers the songs and prayers of a devoted mother, and through the purity of her love and by the influence of her holy life, will find his way back to Life and upward to Heaven. It has been truly said: "Her love glows in her sympathies and reigns in her thoughts and deeds. It never cools, never tires, never dreads, never sleeps, but ever glows and burns with increasing ardor, and with sweet and holy incense upon the altar of home devotion. And even when she is gone to her last rest, the sainted mother in Heaven sways a mightier influence over her wayward child, than when she was present. Her departed spirit still hovers over his affections, over shadows his faith, and draws him by unseen cords to herself in Heaven.

Rev. Sam P. Jones, the great evangelist, whose mother died when he was eight years old, said: "Thank God for a precious mother in Heaven. If ever I get to Heaven, and the angels congratulate me on getting there, I will say: 'Hunt up my precious mother, who took me by the hand and led me along until I was eight years old, and then took me by the hand and said: I can never come back to you; you can come to me.' Ah! there is something in a mother's love sweeter than the lullabies of the skies, sweeter than an Aeolian harp."

George Washington's mother was a simple-hearted, strong-minded, pious, good woman, and she gave to this country a man whom we honor with the title of "Father of his Country." John Wesley's mother was a sensible, religious, painstaking, good woman; and she gave to this world one of the greatest characters we ever had.

It is just as true that a wicked, godless mother will impress her character indelibly upon her children; and their posterity may deluge the world in blood and crime. Nero's mother was a murderess and she gave to the world the most cruel man of the ages. He danced and fiddled over burning Rome and the slaughter of Christians. Lord Byron's mother was a proud, intellectual woman; and she gave to the world one of the most profligate, intellectual autocrats of modern times. Herodias, one of the most wicked and impure mothers the world has ever known, gave her own daughter to dance the voluptuous dance before the drunken, licentuous Herod and his drunken guests, and asked as a reward, the head of John Baptist, because he had reproved her for her impure and unfaithful life. Her direful influence still lives in the Salome dances that degrades womanhood and corrupt the race. One of the greatest curses of this age, are the many unnatural, secretly criminal, sinful mothers, who make criminals of their children they permit to live, and out-Herod, Herod himself, in the "slaughter of the innocents."

Mothers: your responsibilities are great, but your opportunities are greater. If for God and the good you live, you live forever! Bishop Marvin, of Missouri, a most saintly man and preacher of great spiritual power, said of his mother: "When I was a little boy, four years old, lying on my mother's lap while she was singing: 'Loving Jesus, gentle Lamb; In thy gracious hands I am: Make me, Savior, what thou art; Live thyself within my heart.' All at once my mother stopped singing and broke out shouting; and, as she clapped her hands a tear dropped from her eye and fell on my cheek, when a delightful sensation crep over me; and I believe I was born to Christ at that moment."

There is a legend that an Angel was once sent to earth for the most beautiful thing in this world. He first plucked the most fragrant flower that could be found and started back to Heaven, but as he flew past worlds and stars the flower withered and died.

He returned, and searched again for earth's greatest beauty, and saw an innocent baby smile; catching the smile the Angel went back to Heaven and was about to enter the gates of Paradise, when, behold, the baby smile had vanished.

Disappointed, the Angel returned once more to earth in search for the most lovely thing in all this world. When, at last, he saw a christian mother praying, he drew near; and he wondered and admired, a tear fell from her eye. Believing this to be the most heavenly of all things he caught the tear and on swift pinions of delight he winged his way to the City of God; when he entered the Palace Beautiful, he looked, and, behold, the mother's tear had turned into a shining pearl, symbol of purity and innocence; and he carried it to the King of Glory, who placed it in the "Crown of Righteousness" that was awaiting the coming of the faithful, praying mother!

Warning to Natural Gas Customesr.

Owing to the severe cold weather this winter and the ground being frozen deeper than usual and as the service lines from the street to the houses are not more than twelve or eighteen inches in depth, we find in several cases where the frost is deeper than the service lines there is more or less danger of the lines pulling part and causing leaks.

The Gas Company is doing everything possible to prevent any leaks of this kind and will take this opportunity to notify all customers of Natural Gas, to use every precaution against accidents and should they detect the odor of gas at any time, to immediately shut off the gas at the meter and notify the Gas Company at once. THE REPUBLICAN,
Oakland, Md.

THURSDAY, APRIL 11, 1912.

OH! OH! OH!

The Maryland Legislature has adjourned; but not before it managed to soak the people for about $200,000.00 for the three months of its well nigh worthless life. Think of it! $200,000.00 for THAT Legislature, when it would have been mighty dear at thirty cents!

Well, what is to be done about it? Oh, nothing, nothing. We just mention the matter as a sort of interesting reminiscence, in view of the fact that this Legislature was going to be so furiously economical, you know. Everyone was so disgusted with Mr. Gorman's "riot of extravagance" at Annapolis, that nothing like THAT could ever be tolerated again. Certainly not, to be sure. Whereupon this Legislature started off with an allowance of $150,000 for its expenses. The first month it spent about $40,000; the second month it spent about $45,000; then came the third month, and the last call for dinner; the "extras" must be worked in then or never. AND THEY WERE WORKED IN ALL RIGHT. This last month the Legislature spent nearly $100,000.00—and its bill would have been even greater but for some good work on the part of the Governor, which saved about $20,000.

But pshaw, why dwell on a little matter like $200,000 for Legislative EXPENSE when one thinks of the Legislative APPROPRIATIONS, running into ten or twelve millions and DOUBLING THE TAX RATES. But we shall have more to say on these lines as the weeks go by and our space permits. Meanwhile, however, let us ask if anybody heard of the Legislature protesting against the everlasting voting away of money, protesting against the burden of taxation that is pilling up on our State beyond endurance, protesting against robbing the people of their hard earnings for the promotion or enrichment of every scheme or schemer who knows how to "work" a Legislature? Wouldn't it be refreshing just once to have somebody at Annapolis stand up on the floor and speak for the "folks at home" whose taxes have to pay all these enormous expenses and appropriations? But somehow we never get that. Something in the atmosphere of Annapolis seems to turn a a man into a public spedthrift and makes him think his solitary business is to vote away money from the people's pockets.

D. J. LEWIS IS BOOMED FOR VICE-PRESIDENT

Garrett County Friends of Maryland Congressman Active for Him.

A dispatch from Washington says:

Garrett county has joined in the Sixth Maryland district's boom of Congressman David J. Lewis for the Vice-Presidential nomination. H. E. Felty of Mountain Lake Park, writes friends in Washington that serious effort is to be made to have the name of Mr. Lewis presented to the Baltimore Convention, and that steps in that direction are being taken, a preliminary organization for the furtherance of the movement being formed. While Representative Lewis is not inclined to take the matter seriously his friends in the Sixth district declare the proposition to advocate him for second place on the national ticket is far from being a joke.

While the House Committee on Interstate Commerce has repoted out the bill fixing express charges it was stated today that this would not interfere with the consideration of the bill advocated by Representative Lewis providing for acquisition of the express companies by the Government. This bill will be favorably reported to the Committee next Tuesday.

A Narrow Escape.

Ashford Warnick, of Garrett county, barely missed being killed by the afternoon passenger train on the C. & P. Tuesday. Mr. Warnick was crossing the tracks at Perkin with a hay wagon drawn by a pair of horses. The wind was blowing furiously at the time and Mr. Warnick did not hear the train coming down until it was almost upon him. He backed off the track just in time to save himself, but one of his horses was injured.—Lonaconing Corr. Cumberland Times.

Will Conduct Exchange.

The Ladies' Aid Society of the Presbyterian church will conduct an Exchange in the dining room at the Hinebaugh restaurant each Saturday afternoon from two to five o'clock, during the month of April. Bread, pies, cake, home-made candy and other good things to eat will be on sale and you are invited to call.

Colonel Roosevelt's Visit To This Section As Seen By A Democrat of the Old School.

To the Editor of The Republican:

Good Friday opened in Keyser emphized by the unusual, a happening apt to make that opening memorable regardless of a divergence of opinion as to the actual goodness it may bring to the day.

On the previous evening news circulated about hotels, public resorts and streets that, at an early hour the next morning ex-President Roosevelt, on a homeward bound, would give a breathing moment at Keyser for a twenty minutes address from the rear end of his railroad coach. All classes, creeds and parties acted in good will upon an opportunity for seeing the most widely acknowledge curiosity, and in many respects the most richly equipped student among leaders of men, ever seen in the lime light of this town's history.

An hour in advance of the scheduled arrival, the ample grounds curbing the front of the railroad building showed a continuous jam of spectators sober in its desire to see what it had never seen, that and that alone. After much waiting the train steamed gracefully down the long stretch in the bright sun shine of a perfect spring day. Before the pause of the panting engine, from the steps of the hindmost car, a man of a thickly built, muscular frame wearing glasses, could be seen gesticulating in strenuous efforts to make himself heard by the circle of humanity along the track. We looked at the "Man of Destiny," twice president of the Republic, reaching the third time, in defiance of established custom, for the reins of supremacy and the hero of a famous battle of "Wind Mill" actualities; and then in bewilderment to the motionless line of people reflecting, perhaps, every shade of popular thought today visible in this campaign of presidential election. If that vast gathering was either a compliment or an endorsement to the distinguished visitor who had worn the highest honors the greatest people of the world could confer, the fact was strangely hidden. No lifting of hats, no clapping of hands nor stamping of feet—simply a gratified gaze upon that they were there to see.

The ex-President strikingly resembles his pictures in papers and publications that have been seen for years over the land. His dress was that of the modest taste of the average business gentleman. While his face may exhibit more of the bluff man than of parlor refinement, it often lightened with suggestions of good fellowship and of an all round man, ready to lend a smile or repel a thrust. His neck is short and large, the shoulders broad and firmly set over a stout body, while the glasses and gold chain impress you as much a part of the face as is the nose or chin. His voice defied his concentrated strength to make it carry beyond the few immediately about him; it was weak and husky from over strain.

Through anxious to catch the drift of his address, I could, from my distance, clearly hear only this declaration made with an extended hand and an up-lift of the form: "I care not how good a man may be, if he lacks the courage of his convictions he is not worth his salt." This I interpreted was a broadside discharge from the Roosevelt artillery against the fortifications of President Taft. Personal pronouns were the glittering sparks flashing in fast succession throughout the brief speech, as if designed to show the American public how silly it has been in seeking a way to rescue ex-presidents from oblivion, and to give the world at large a modern meaning to the epitaph written by an ancient people upon the tomb of its greatest chief: "Alexander is not dead; he is living beyond the stars." A DEMOCRAT.

Mr. Weimer Makes his Position Plain on the Proposed Local Option Bill as Applied to the Town of Oakland.

To The Editor of The Republican:

The writer of the article in last week's issue of THE REPUBLICAN, under the caption "Doings at Annapolis, the Seat of Government," seeks to hold me responsible for the defeat of Senator Speicher's local option bill for Oakland.

I have not yet found the man who knows much about this bill. It is supposed, however, that it was introduced so late in the session that it could not get through—as a subterfuge to fool some people into the belief that he (Mr. Speicher) was really in favor of temperance legislation when his actions in the Senate proved the contrary. As soon as I heard the bill had been introduced I asked the Senator for a copy of it and he refused to give it to me. A little later on I asked him again with the same results. I went to the bill room several times but could not get a copy as none had been delivered by the printer so I have never yet seen the bill or a copy of it.

The writer of the article was misinformed as to the facts when he says that the Senator came over to the Garrett Delegation and discussed the importance of the bill with them. In fact when asked about the provisions of the bill he admitted that he did not know as he had not read it carefully. The only thing he seemed to know about it was that it was some sort of a local option bill for Oakland. It came over to the House and was referred to the Temperance Committee late Friday night or Saturday, two days before the close of the session. The Committe did not report the bill and so far as I know no effort was made to have it reported. There was no effort made to suspend the rules and if there had been it would have required only two-thirds of the members present and not unanimous consent. The bill never reached the stage where it was necessary to ask for suspension of the rules.

About the only thing in the article referring to me that approached the truth was the intimation that I criticised the Senator's action in trying to put through legislation for Oakland without consulting the members from Oakland. I did criticise him for that and would do it again under similar circumstances, but that would not cause me to oppose legislation that I considered good.

I want to take this opportunity to say that when ever I consider it necessary to herald my own virtues, or to try to besmirch the reputation of another I will do so over my signature and not try to hide behind an innocent reporter.

With this statement I am satisfied for the people to be the arbiters, as suggested by your correspondent.

Yours very truly
E. A. WEIMER.

Oakland, April 8, 1912

Superintendent Anderson Challenges Senator Speicher and Wants to Meet Him In Joint Debate.

To the Editor of The Republican:

I am in receipt of copy of The Republican containing the full text of a statement made by Senator Speicher, and as I am sure it is your desire to do exact justice to everybody and get at the truth, I enclose you copy of a challenge sent to Senator Speicher, with a request that you publish it in full in a position as advantageous and as likely to attract attention as the Senator's own statement.

We consider that Senator Speicher has not only treated the Anti-Saloon League management badly, but that he has betrayed his own constituents. It is not profitable to undertake to answer all this at long range, though I am sure your sense of fairness would give me an equal amount of space if I wanted it. But it will be more satisfactory to everybody to have the two statements made together, and if Senator Speicher does not accept this challenge I expect to come up there anyhow.

Yours very truly,
WILLIAM H. ANDERSON,
Superintendent.

Baltimore, Md., April 9, 1912.

Mr. Anderson's challenge to Senator Speicher follows:

Hon. Harvey J. Speicher, Accident, Md.:

Dear Sir—From the protection of the Senate floor and evidently for public consumption without thinking you would be called to account, you challenged the truthfulness of my statement that your people had a right to expect you to support the Local Option bill.

I therefore challenge you to a joint discussion, to be held either at Oakland in the open air or in the largest auditorium in the town, or else in the Auditorium at Mountain Lake Park, at which time I will undertake to make good my statement to the satisfaction of your constituents.

You will remember that on Thursday, March 28, I confronted you in the presence of two witnesses, one of them a Senator, with the fact that the liquor men had been after you that day, which you admitted. At this time I will undertake to prove that they got you, notwithstanding the fact that you were bound to support the Local Option bill by everything that an honorable man should hold sacred.

I will also undertake to prove that your attempt to escape responsibility because the House amended the bill is a flimsy pretext and that your individual vote prevented the passage of a meritorious measure which would have given your county everything included in the orignal bill, and also that the little local bill introduced by you was a palpable fraud designed to fool your people.

I suggest that the discussion be held some time between June 15 and July 15, subject to the prior right in the selection of date of Senators Price and Moore, the Democratic liquor Senators from "dry" counties, with whom you lined up for reasons best understood by yourself.

I also suggest that we each take an hour's time, I to have the privilege of using 20 minutes of my time in rebuttal, since I have the burden of proof.

In view of your statement, when I went to you in a friendly manner to advise you against making a blunder on this question, that you would be able to satisfy your people, I assume that you will welcome this opportunity to get at it promptly.

Yours respectfully,
WILLIAM H. ANDERSON,
Superintendent Anti-Saloon League of Maryland.

Representative Lewis Has Some Agricultural Records for Distribution.

To the Editor of The Republican:

I have been able to secure a small number of copies of the Year Book of the years 1906, 1907, 1908 and 1909. These books are not the latest issue, but just as useful, practically speaking, as these books are all reports of scientific discoveries in farming methods, and the older issues as good for use as the later copies. I can give my farming friends in Garrett county their choice of 100 copies of each date—400 in all. Will you kindly print an item in THE REPUBLICAN to this effect, so that any of your readers in Garrett county who wish may write me, naming the year they want, and I will gladly send them one copy of any date they please, so long as the books last?

Thanking you for your many courtesies, I am Yours very truly,
DAVID J. LEWIS.

A large crowd of voters, a few ladies and quite a number of boys who aim to be voters some day, gathered at the station here last Friday to see Col. Theodore Roosevelt, who was a passenger bound eastward on train No. 2 that morning. The train was running about two hours late, but notwithstanding this fact the trainmen gave out the word that the Colonel was still in bed, having had a strenuous day on Thursday in his Kentucky campaign and was resting. Had the Colonel appeared it is hardly probably that he would have addresed the crowd as the train tarried a very short time.

The Glade Run Coal and Coke Co. has employed Tom Fleming, their former superintendent, to take charge of their mines at Schell and he now has men at work cleaning out the old mine and making repairs about the dump preparatory to putting out coal. Mr. Fleming informs us that they will likely have him make another opening soon and they will likely extend their plane up the hill to the four foot seam where they already have an opening, and work it also. The Upper Potomac Coal Co. two miles below, are making arrangements to put from fifty to one hundred men to work in their mines.

The municipal well located in the Oakland Hotel grounds, which failed some time ago to produce its usual quantity of water, has been brought into service again, the cause of the trouble having been located and remedied after an investigation by the city authorities, who found that a large rock had become loosened and had fallen into the well below the casing effectually plugging it. The rock was forced down to the bottom of the well, a distance of more than a hundred and fifty feet and in a very short time the well was again full and the pumping apparatus was started. No further trouble is now anticipated.

Dr. Henry Morris, one of the foremost medical practitioners in Philadelphia, spends his summer vacation each year at Brookside, near Oakland. He usually opens his cottage in June, and remains the entire summer. Latterly, since he assumed the duties of Professor of Anatomy in a Philadelphia Medical College, he has found it essential to return to his Philadelphia home in September, on account of the lecture course beginning in that month. Dr. Morris is now at Brookside, having come up to Oakland on Good Friday to spend the Easter holidays in Garrett County. He knows of no section of the country that is equal to this region in point of healthfulness. His delight in the summer is pedestrianism, often walking from Brookside to Oakland, and other points in Garrett county.

THE DEATH RECORD.

THOMAS BENTON WILEY.

Thomas Benton Wiley was born on the Holmes Wiley homestead, about five miles north of Bittinger, December 20th, 1842, and departed this life at his home at Bittinger, Monday, April 1st, 1912, aged 69 years, 3 months and 12 days. His last illness extended over a period of more than five months, and the conseqnent physical suffering was borne with the same brave Christian fortitude which exemplified his character throughout life. He was one of the few survivors of the Holmes Wiley family and his father was one of the pioneer settlers in the northern end of the county. The deceased was a faithful and consistent member of the Evangelical Lutheran church for a period of nearly forty years and died strong in the faith. He served his country nobly as a volunteer in the Civil War, and later discharged the duties of County Treasurer honorably and at all times served his neighbors well as a true friend and trusted counsellor. He was ever in the foremost ranks in promoting and supporting all good works and was ever frank and fearless in his disapproval of all that was ignoble. In this taking from us of an active and noble citizen the community suffers a great loss, and his family is deprived of a kind and wise father and a faithful loving husband. Thomas Benton Wiley was twice married. Of the first union there survive four children, namely, Silas O. Wiley, former deputy sheriff of this county; Mrs. J. B. Emory, of Bittinger; Miss Mary Wiley, of Westernport Md., and Miss Fannie Wiley, of Honolulu, Hawaii. The wife of the second mariage survives with four sons and three daughters, Harrison, Charles, Dewey, Thomas, Myrtle, Bertha and Leanora. He is survived also by two brothers resideng in this county, Alexander Wiley, of Bittinger and James P. Wiley, of near Jennings.

A fitting tribute might be written above the last resting place of this good man, in these words; "Here lies one in whom no man lost an enemy and all mankind a friend".

Though we miss a father's counsel,
And the parting is hard to bear;
We will hold him still in memory,
Till we meet him over there.

Though departed still he's with us—
Living deeds of noble worth
Follow father's patient footsteps
Leading Heavenward from earth.

TAFT CAMPAIGN ON THE VERGE OF COLLAPSE

Reactionary Leaders Now Admit He Could Not Be Elected if Nominated.

NEW YORK SUN TELLS TRUTH

In a Carefully Prepared Article This Representative of the Interests That Are Supporting Taft Frankly Declares That His Renomination Means Defeat In the November Election. The Secret Scheme Uncovered.

That President Taft cannot be elected if nominated is conceded by the New York Sun in a carefully prepared article published Sunday, March 31, and sent by the Sun for simultaneous publication in all the newspapers throughout the country which subscribe to the Sun news service.

The undeniable importance of this statement by the Sun is due to the Sun's attitude of opposition to all progressives and to Theodore Roosevelt in particular, as well as to the recognition given it as a representative and spokesman of the great business interests which center in New York and of the political organization in New York which recently manipulated the fraudulent and farcical primaries held in the state.

It adds to the significance of the Sun's statement that its article, although ostensibly the result of careful investigation, was withheld until after the organization bosses had put through the fraudulent primary election of delegates, in which they carefully refrained from instructing a single one of the men they claim to have elected for Taft.

The investigation upon which the article is based had been completed and the article actually prepared before the primaries were held, showing apparently that at the time the New York bosses were engaged in stifling public sentiment in order to prevent the election of Roosevelt delegates there was what the Sun declares to be a general agreement among the reactionary political leaders that Mr. Taft's candidacy had become a virtual impossibility.

It is now apparent that the sole purpose of the machine bosses and the special privilege interests, to whom Mr. Taft is looking for a renomination, have abandoned all idea of supporting him and that their only purpose is to prevent the nomination of Roosevelt, so that a compromise candidate favorable to the special privilege interests and in harmony with machine purposes may be selected at Chicago.

Although still friendly to Taft, the Sun declares that the time has arrived when the possibility of electing a candidate has become a "subject for serious consideration on the part of Republicans who believe their party to be of vastly more importance than any man in it, no matter how exalted his station, and who place party loyalty above personal fealty. These Republicans declare that they will take any reasonable step which would seem to insure their party's victory at the polls in November next.

"The Republicans who expressed these views," the Sun says, "are believers in season and out of season in the policies of their party. Among this class of Republicans are merchants, importers, business men generally and professional men and the rank and file of small Republican shopkeepers and workingmen."

The Sun then says:

"Several months ago influential Republicans, some of them very close to President Taft, declared beneath their breath that the president if renominated could not be re-elected. While expressing this opinion they hadn't the remotest shadow of a doubt that the president, through the power of federal patronage, could force his own renomination."

Among the reasons given by the Sun why President Taft cannot be re-elected the Payne-Aldrich law is cited as of greatest importance. Respecting this the Sun says:

"The Republican national platform of 1908 called for an immediate extraordinary session of congress in the event of Taft's election to revise the tariff. In obedience to his party's platform President Taft called the extraordinary session of congress, which produced the Aldrich-Payne law, and the president's troubles and his party's complications have grown and become more entangled from the day he signed that law. That law gave the progressives substantial footing for their opposition to the Taft administration and afforded them grounds to go before the people on the question. In addition there have been a myriad other troublesome complications, all intended to weaken the president and to bring about bitter discord in the ranks of his party.

"It has been this discord, these complications, that have led Republicans entirely friendly to the president to declare that, while he could force his own renomination, it was exceedingly doubtful if he could be re-elected."

The Sun adds:

"With the assembling of congress in Washington in December last the declarations that the president could not be re-elected if renominated took on a more emphatic tone."

The Sun declares that leading Republicans, by which the Sun obviously means leading reactionaries, frankly admit that they do not know and have no means of knowing the full extent of the Roosevelt strength in the different states. The same leaders, the Sun says, express doubt if Mr. Roosevelt himself could persuade his followers to support Taft.

It is known that what the Sun points out with such clearness is the real belief of all the reactionary leaders both in Washington and those throughout the country.

The fight has ceased to be one for the renomination of President Taft and has become one solely to prevent the voters of the nation from controlling the convention and forcing the nomination of Theodore Roosevelt.

This is a concession to the rapidly increasing strength of the Roosevelt movement, which indicates the desperation to which the machine bosses and the special privilege interests are reduced.

BIG BUSINESS BRAVES LAW TO HELP TAFT

Tries False Pretenses to Secure Contributions to the Campaign Fund of its Candidate.

CIRCULAR TO WALL STREET OUT

More Than Two and a Half Billions Represented by the Signers, Who Appeal For Help on the False Pretense That Colonel Roosevelt Has Attacked the Supreme Court and Menaces the Fundamental Principles of Government.

One of the means adopted by the representatives of big business behind President Taft to notify other representatives of big business that more money is required to carry on the Taft campaign is described by competent lawyers as a violation of section 1200 of the penal code of New York.

A few days ago a confidential circular letter was sent out from Wall street to a number of the most wealthy people in New York and perhaps elsewhere asking for immediate financial assistance for the Taft campaign. The language of the letter was plainly intended to convey the warning that Colonel Roosevelt seeks to establish the popular recall of the justices of the supreme court of the United States and of their decisions, thereby nullifying the constitution of the United States and menacing the fundamental principles of the government. Having used his falsehood as a scare, the letter then asks for a contribution to "bring these facts before the electorate and to insure the renomination of President Taft. Checks should be made payable to Robert F. Huse, care Redmond & Co., 33 Pine street."

Inasmuch as Colonel Roosevelt has never advocated the recall of the justices of the supreme court of the United States nor the decisions thereof, but has distinctly confined his statements of belief in regard to the recall of decisions and judges to state courts and then only under certain circumstances, this letter is pronounced by so able and competent a lawyer as Amos R. E. Pinchot of 60 Broadway, New York, to be a direct attempt to secure money under false pretenses and therefore a violation of the New York penal code.

The letter bore at its head as its sponsors a list of nineteen of the principal operators in big business in the Wall street section of New York, including Benjamin F. Tracy, Chauncey M. Depew, George Sheldon, Otto T. Bannard, Edgar L. Marston, William Berri, Andrew Baird, R. Ross Appleton, Hendrick S. Holden and others almost equally well known in big business. The letter in full follows:

"Colonel Roosevelt is endeavoring to secure a nomination for a third term, contrary to a widely established precedent, on a platform favoring the recall of judges and the recall of judicial decisions, which, in the opinion of thinking men, would nullify the constitution and menace the fundamental principles of republican government.

"We believe that President Taft by reason of his wise, conservative and efficient administration is entitled to renomination by the Republican party.

"To bring these facts properly before the electorate and to insure the renomination of President Taft a vigorous campaign is essential. We earnestly solicit your support and ask you to contribute to the necessary expenses of carrying on the work. Checks should be made payable to Robert F. Huse, acting treasurer, care Redmond & Co., 33 Pine street."

To show who is so interested in the renomination of President Taft a brief study of the financial connections of the men behind the letter is well worth while. The entire list is too long for reproduction here, but taking a half dozen or so of them in alphabetical order shows their Wall street connection as follows:

WHY CHRIST AROSE FROM THE DEAD

What His Resurrection Proved and Guarantees.

Pastor Russell's Easter Sermon Delivered In Academy of Music Before a Congregation of 2,500—Shows Some Inconsistencies of Present Beliefs.

PASTOR RUSSELL

Brooklyn, N. Y., April 7. — Pastor Russell of the Brooklyn Tabernacle preached in the Academy of Music today to nearly 2,500 hearers. His topic was, "Why Christ Arose from the Dead." His text was: "If Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain and your faith also vain; yea, and we are found false witnesses of God. * * * Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." (I Cor. xv, 14, 15, 18.) He said:

The faith once delivered to the saints by Jesus and the Apostles in respect to the resurrection of the dead has been very generally lost. Christian people profess a belief in the resurrection, because they find it stated in the Bible, yet they are continually in difficulty in their endeavor to make the Scriptural teaching on the subject square with some of the unscriptural theories received into the Church and incorporated into many of the creeds.

St. Paul warned the Church against these human philosophies, and called them "science, falsely so-called," which make void the Word of God. These errors have been instrumental in dividing the faith of God's people into 600 different denominations, with 600 different professions. If God's people could all come back to the simplicity of the Bible's teaching, all of these differences would speedily disappear. God's Word would be seen to be beautiful and harmonious and satisfactory to the consecrated intellect.

The Bible Resurrection Reasonable.

Really the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead has been repudiated by all denominations, not willingly, not intentionally, but perforce, as it were. An opposite theory received and entrenched in the minds gives no place for the doctrine of the resurrection as the Bible presents it. Consequently we have twisted the doctrine of the resurrection and recite, "I believe in the resurrection of the body."

Yet, even this perverted view of the resurrection is not satisfactory to those who hold it. They wish many a time that the doctrine of the resurrection was not in the Bible, so much difference does it cause. For instance, how inconsistent it seems that they should say, "I believe in the resurrection of the body," and then say, as many do, Dying is but going home, getting rid of the mortal flesh, and being freed from its limitations. If it is a blessing to die and get free from the limitations of the body, how could it be a blessing to be reincarcerated in the body, and be obliged to keep it through all eternity?

There is nothing inconsistent in the Bible presentation of the resurrection. Not from the Bible, but from men, comes the suggestion of the resurrection of the body. The Bible invariably refers to the resurrection of the soul. It is the soul that dies; as we read, "The soul that sinneth it shall die." Adam was created a living soul, but his living soul came under the death sentence because he disobeyed God. It was his soul that was redeemed from death, not his body. "I will redeem thy life (look up the word life to see if it is from the Hebrew word meaning soul, and if so, add the word soul after the word life, in parenthesis) from destruction.—Psalm cii, 4.

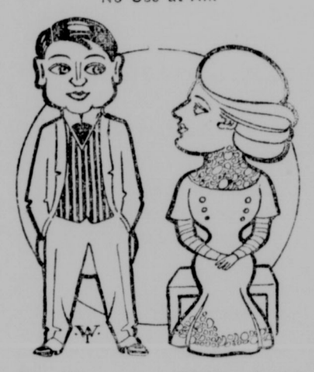
To accomplish this redemption we read that Christ Jesus "poured out His soul unto death." He made "His soul an offering for sin." Moreover, we are particularly told that it was the soul of Jesus that was raised from the dead: "I will not leave Thy soul in sheol." St. Peter quotes this statement as prophetical of the resurrection of Jesus that His soul was not left in hades. With what body do they come? is a totally different question. Some of the dead souls, in the resurrection, will come forth with spirit bodies, and others with human bodies, according to the Bible. But the important point is that it is the soul, the being, that comes forth. If the soul dies, as the Bible declares, then manifestly the soul should be resurrected.

Bible Made Void by Tradition.

The difficulty with us has been that we "have made void the Word of God" by our "traditions." We received from the Grecian philosophers a tradition which Socrates and Plato both advocated, namely, that when a human being dies he does not really die. The soul, it is claimed, cannot die, but whenever the soul gets out of the body, the body dies. How strange it seems that we all accepted this philosophy without a word of Scripture, but with hundreds of Scriptures to condemn it!

It behooves us to take a decided stand either with the Grecian philosophers and their theories, or with the Bible. The two are in conflict and whoever attempts to hold both is in confusion. If the dead are not dead, then no human being is dead; and if no one is dead, how could there be a resurrection of the dead?

LITTLE JOHNNIE'S FEARS.



Where we use' to live we had
A fireplace, big an' wide,
An' all that Santy had to do
Was hold his breath an' slide
An' squeeze hisself until he fit
The hole an' then jest drop!
An' he knowed where the stockin's was,
'Cause that was where he'd stop.

Where we use' to live it was
No trick for him to climb
Up to the chimbly on the roof
An' find us Christmas time.
But now I'm worryin' for fear
He won't know where he's at
Or mebbe can't get in at all!
We're livin' in a flat.

We're livin' in a flat, an', say,
You mus' be mos' polite
Or else the janitor he'll go
An' lock you out at night!
There ain't no no chimbly to our house
Where Santy Claus can slide—
There ain't no fireplace—just a pipe
About two inches wide.

They heat our flat with steam; that's why
I'm 'fraid he can't get in
With all his toys an' drums an' things
Unless he's awful thin.
An' how's he go' to wriggle out
When he gets in? Gee whiz,
There's such an awful little hole
There where the sizzle is!
—Chicago Record-Herald.

No Use at All.

She—What are you thinking about so solemnly?

He—I'm thinking that all of my economizing for Christmas won't do me any good. I'll be broke afterwards anyway.

Retort Sarcastic.

A young man and a young woman lean over the front gate. They are lovers. It is moonlight. He is loath to leave, as the parting is the last. He is about to go away. She is reluctant to see him depart. They swing on the gate.

"I shall never forget you," he says. "And if death should claim me my last thoughts will be of you."

"I'll be true to you," she sobs. "I'll never see anybody else or love them as long as I live!" They parted.

Six years later he returns. His sweetheart of former years has married. They meet at a party. She has changed greatly. Between the dances the recognition takes place.

"Let me see," she muses, with her fan beating a tattoo on her pretty hand, "was it you or your brother who was my old sweetheart?"

"Really I don't know," he says; "probably my father!"—Tit-Bits.

Upward Revision.

One evening at family prayers the head of the house read that chapter which concludes with "And let the wife see that she reverence her husband." After the exercises had closed and the children had gone to bed he quoted it, looking meaningly at his wife. "Let us see what the revised version says on that subject," said she. "I will follow the new teaching, if you please." The revised version was produced, and her chagrin may be imagined as the head impressively read, "And let the wife see that she fear her husband."—New York Evening Post.

Helpful Thought.

"Alas," sighs the moody man, "there is no gladness for me in this joyous season!"

"Tut, tut!" says the optimist. "Surely there is a ray of sunshine for you, as there is for all of us if we but look for it."

"No," replies the moody one, "I have not a single friend and no relatives with whom I am on speaking terms."

"Cheer up, then," advises the other, with a shade of envy in his tone. "Can't you be glad because you will not have to buy any Christmas presents?"

A Pre-Christmas Plan.

"I simply will not quarrel with any of my young men friends until after Christmas," said the first damsel. "We'll have peace till then anyhow."

"But that idea is exploded, dear," asserts the second. "Of course if you don't quarrel with them they will send the usual remembrance at Christmas. But don't you see if you do quarrel then they'll send something twice as nice as a peace offering!"

Prefers to Wait.

"You should buy all your Christmas gifts now."

"That's what they say, but I'm not so sure of it. You see, I've made up my mind to give several of my friends a dozen eggs apiece—no matter what they cost—and I hate to think of buying 'em now."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Referred.

"Have a drink, old man?"

"No; I've cut it out."

"Aw, be sociable."

"Well, my companion here will have a drink with you. He's my social secretary."—Kansas City Journal.

DADDY'S MOTORCAR.

It's got the biggest, dandy wheels and rubber tires so firm and fat.
You couldn't put a dent in one if you hit it with a baseball bat.
It's most as long as our front yard, and all the seats are leather too.
Its cushions are the reddest red, and all the rest of it is blue.

In front it's got four great big lamps like searchlights on a battleship
And a tank that carries gasoline to last you for the longest trip.
You never have to crank it up like you were trying to wind a clock.
Just pull a little handle back, and, zippy, you're around the block!

There's lots of room to ride inside and not be crowded up at all.
Though daddy's got so many kids, he sometimes says he'll hire a hall.
It's trimmed with brass so fine and bright you'd think that it was gold,
And right in front it's got its name in letters big and bold.

Oh, daddy's car's a dandy one—the best, I think, they ever made!
When it gets out upon the road 'twill put all others in the shade.
Nobody in this town has got one half so fine as that, I bet—
I saw it in a magazine. My daddy hasn't bought it yet.

Infantile Affection.

SPECIAL BONUS OFFER

It Holds Good Until the First Count on Wednesday, April 17, When Votes Will be Counted and a $10 Gold Piece Will be Awarded to the Lady Having the Most Votes.

The big prize voting contest is attracting more attention every day so as an incentive to all contestants we have decided to give the following special bonus votes:

For every seven new subscriptions 4,000 extra, making a total of 8200. These subscriptions need not be for one party for seven years, but must be new subscriptions for seven years, and must be handed in all at one time.

For every seven renewal subsciptions 3,000 extra, making a total of 6,500. These may be for seven different people or all for one, but must be all renewals and be handed in all at one time.

For every seven back subscriptions 2,000 extra, making a total of 4,800.

The above special offer will hold good until the first count on April 17, at which time the votes will be counted by the judges who will award the $10 in gold to the contestant who receives the largest number of votes up to the first count. The ballot box will close promptly at 7.30 p. m. on April 17th.

Remember the $10 in gold to be given to the contestant having the highest number of votes on April 17 is a special prize offered by The Republican. It will in no way effect the standing of the standing of the winner of the contest.

A few contestants thought that the winning of the $10 would effect their votes on the piano. It will not. All votes found in the box on April 17th will be included in the final count, which will decide the winners of the piano and other prizes.

Remember that each subscription you receive—either new, renewal or back—will get a certain number of votes with each year and these votes with an extra bonus vote also.

All votes to be counted must be in by 7:30 o'clock Wednesday evening, April 17th.

The judges in this contest are:

Mayor H. W. McComas, Mr. G. A. Fraley and Mr. R. E. Sloger.

BITTINGER.

By some means an error was made in our report of last week, relative to the amount of money pledged for the support of the Anti-Saloon League at The Glades Mennonite church near here. The amount subscribed at that place was $105.95, and at the Jennings Lutheran church $67.33.

After several days of delightfully warm and spring like weather, we were visited by a snow flurry on Easter Sunday, followed by considerable freezing.

Jacob Wiley, a B. & O. engineer, of Keyser, W. Va., visited his aged parents at this place last week.

Sap has begun to appear in the sugar water and old sugar makers are of the opinion that the season is nearing an end.

Miss Laura Fazenbaker returned to Clarksburg, W. Va., last week, after a few days' visit at her home here.

We learn that Simon Orendorf is thinking of locating in this village, of which we are very glad.

As there has been some irregularities in the appointments at the different churches in the charge Rev. Shull wishes it announced that there will be services in the Fort Hill church on next Sunday morning at 10:30 o'clock and at Meadow Mountain at 2:30 the same day.

EXPLAINS HARPER OR PRESIDENTIAL PRIMARY LAW

Mr. Straus Who Drew Measure Tells Of Its Operations.

The Presidential Primary Election law, which was passed by the last Legislature and been approved by Governor Goldsborough, has become a leading subject of political interest throughout the State, because of the fact that under it a spirited battle is expected to be waged by both parties for control of Maryland's delegations to the National Conventions. The act was drawn by former Attorney-General Isaac Lobe Straus, who also drew four of the five other election bills passed by the Legislature. The measure was presented by Senator Harper, of Queen Anne's county, and is generally known as the Harper law.

Mr. Straus drew the Presidential Primary bill as the only practical measure of the kind that could get through the General Assembly. Mr. Straus Saturday explained the main provisions and features of the law under which the coming Presidential primaries throughout the State, must be held.

First, with respect to the manner in which candidates for the Presidential nomination must enter the primaries in this State. The law provides that within 15 days before the primary election day, candidates for the Presidential nomination of the Democratic or Republican party must file with the Secretary of State of Maryland a certificate of their candidacy in form and substance like the certificate of candidacy required of candidates for the nomination for the office of Governor, and at the same time must make the payment required of candidates for the nomination of Govenor, which is $10 for each county and legislative district of Baltimore city, being $270 in all.

Primary elections this year will be held on the first Monday in May, which falls on the 6th. In these, candidates for the Presidential nomination, or for the vote of the Maryland delegates in the National Conventions, run as candidates, not throughout the State at large as a unit, but in each county and each legislative district of Baltimore city as the units.

In each county and in each legislative district of the city delegates are nominated and elected to a State Convention. The candidate for the Presidential nomination who receives the highest number of votes in the primaries of his party in any county or legislative district becomes entitled to the whole delegation as a unit from such county or legislative district in the State Convention.

The certificate of election from each county and legislative district must indicate plainly which candidate for the Presidential nomination received the highest numher of votes in the party primaries and these certificates stand as the instructions of the county or legislative district to the delegation therefrom in the State Convention. In accordance with such instructions the delegation must vote in the State Convention for the choice of its county of legislative district as long as in their conscientious judgment there is any possibility of that choice obtaining a majority of the votes of the convention and as long as that choice it votes for by the delegates of nine counties, each legislative district of Baltimore being taken as the equivalent of a county.

After taking such number of ballots in the State Convention as may be necessary to ascertain the majority for any one candidate for President, the chairman of the convention is required to announce that the majority is the choice of the voters for candidate for President.

The State Convention selects delegates to the National Convention and these will be bound to vote as a unit for the candidate for President so selected as the choice of Maryland. They shall continue to vote for that person as long as in their conscientious judgment there is any possibility of his being nominated.

Delegates from the counties and legislative districts of the State Convention must be elected by direct vote of each of the political parties. Names of candidates for the nomination for President are to be arranged and the ballots shall be prepared, marked and cast as in a gubernatorial primary, except that there is no preferential voting as to the first and second choice.

If no person files a certificate of candidacy for President the State Convention may instruct the delegates to the National Conveution for such candidates as it may see fit or may send an uninstructed delegation. It is also provided that the ballots must bear the line, "For an uninstructed delegation" and in the square opposite this a voter may make his mark if he wishes the State delegation to go to the National Convention without instructions. It might happen that only one candidate for President would enter the primary and a number of voters might object to him; under this provision they will be able to vote against him by voting for an uninstructed delegation. If there is a majority in any county or legislative district for an uninstructed delegation the delegates from that unit shall vote in the State Convention for an uninstructed delegation to the National Convention as long as in their conscientious judgment it shall appear to them that there is any possibility of a majority of the members of the State Convention voting for an uninstructed delegation. If it shall appear to any delegation that there is no such possibility, they shall vote in their discretion for instructions upon the part of the State Convention for such person for the candidate of their party for President as they may deem wisest.

The number of delegates-at-large and of district delegates, together with alternates, who shall represent the respective parties in the National Conventions shall be determined by the State Central Committees not later than April 15, but it may bedone by the State Convention.

Besides selecting delegates to the National Convention, the State Convention is required to nominate candidates Presidential electors. The chairman of the State Convention much certify the results of the convention to the executive officers of the National Convention.

The Big Hit of the Dramatic Age "Paid In Full."

The greatest of all New York successes will be seen here on Tuesday, April 16th, 1912, at Maryland Theatre, when Mr. Eugene Walter's masterpiece will undoubtedly be greeted by the usual capacity business. That this popular drama still retains its hold on the public is most remarkable from the fact for two years five seperate and distinct companies have toured the country, yet the public clamor for return engagements. Those who have already witnessed its performance being the most insistent on its return.

ROOSEVELT CAMPAIGN ORGANIZED IN GARRETT CO.

County and District Officers Chosen at a Meeting Held Saturday.

Col. Theodore Roosevelt's campaign in Garrett county was launched last Saturday when a well attended meeting of workers and leaders in the Republican party was held and a committe to have charge of the campaign was chosen.

The committee is composed of Messrs. Louis Littman, James W. Friend, Edward E. Sollars, E. A. Weimer and Benj. H. Sincell. District committeemen were appointed as follows: Julius Littman, James W. Friend, Charles Youkin, Dr. H. M. Kemp, Asa B. Friend, A. Clyde Smith, J. L. Echard, Elliot C. Harvey, Samuel P. Specht, Robert L. Crowe, Jonas Bittinger, Daniel Wilson and Bert C. Scott.

Within the next few days a call for a meeting of the district committeemen will be sent out and the work of the campaign will be formally begun.

With the Board of Election Supervisors certificates of the following to be voted for as delegates to the State convention, have been filed: Julius Littman, Fred. A. Thayer, James W. Friend, E. W. Kelso, Samuel P. Specht Andrew Shartzer and D. E. Bolden. From this list four delegates to the State Convention are to be elected. A majority of the candidates have pledged themselves to the support of Colonel Roosevelt.

The Democrats who have filed certificates are Thomas J. Browning, Richard T. Browning, Thomas Little, Luther J. Brown, Wade H. Hinebaugh, Chas. A. Deffinbaugh, Dr. E. H. Bartlett and Edmund Jamison.

Mr. Arthur Naylor left Oakland, Monday for Johnstown, Pa., where he has secured a position with a plumbing establishment, and where he expects to be located permanently.

THE BRADLEY FARM SOLD.

Will Be Divided Into Small Tracks and Sold at Auction.

The Dixie Realty Co., of South Boston, Va., has just purchased the Bradley farm, consisting of four hundred acres. This valuable farm adjoins the town of Oakland and is considered one of the finest large tracts of land in Garrett county, and its close proximity to Oakland adds greatly to its value and attractiveness. We are reliably informed that this property is to be subdivided and sold at auction in small farms and villa sites. Mr. Howard L. Edmunds, President of the Dixie Realty Co., is in town looking after the development of this property, and the surveyors are busy laying it out into desirable small plots. We understand that this company purposes to hold their sale the latter part of May. The Dixie Realty Co. have been very successful in exploiting sales of this kind in Maryland during the last two years. One of the unique features of their sales being the famous Dixie Twin Auctioneers, who cry the same bid on the same lot at the same time in the same tones of voice and selling a lot a minute. A great deal of interest is manifested in this real estate movement by our local people as there is a great demand for small farms close to Oakland.

Received Too Late.

Yesterday afternoon an article from the pen of Mr. J. J. Robinson, our recent Annapolis correspondent, relative to the controversy existing between Senator Speicher and Delegate E. A. Weimer, was received, but too late for publication in these columns today. It will appear in full in our issue of next Thursday.

Mr. Albert Ashby of the Ashby Lumber Company, went to Pittsburg Monday where he expects to remain on business until the latter part of the present week.

PRIMARIES ARE TO BE HELD MAY 6TH

Voters Will Elect Delegates to State Convention.

Primaries will be held in the several districts in Garrett county May 6, for the dual purpose of electing delegates to the State conventions, which in turn will elect delegates to the National conventions to nominate Presidential candidates, and also for the purpose of electing delegates to the Congressional conventions to nominate candidates for Congress for the Sixth Maryland District.

The primary will be under the same conditions of the primary last fall, when delegates were elected to the State conventions to nominate candidates for Governor. Both the Republican and Democratic primaries are held on the same day, and at the same polling places but with different ballot boxes.

All candidates, to get on the official ballots, filed their applications Monday, the candidates for President with the Secretary of State, and the Congressional candidates with the local election supervisors, are those of Gist Blair, of Silver Sprinps, Montgomery county, and Charles D. Wagnaman, of Washington county, Republicans, and David J. Lewis, Cumberland, Allegany county, Democrat.

The voter votes direct for his choice for president, and the delegates elected will be required to vote for such a candidate in the State conventions which elects delegates to the National convention. The same condition prevails as to the congressional candidates.

The applicants for places on the official ballot in the different counties of the State, must file a certified check for ten dollars for each county, with the Secretary of State, and the candidates for Congress a check for twenty-five dollars, with the election supervisors, in the different counties in the different Congressional districts.

SYNOD OF WEST VIRGINIA FORMED

A Newly Organized Body Adjourned After Two Days' Work.

Lutheranism of Western Maryland and the State of West Virginia, was in evidence at Fairmont Tuesday and yesterday when twenty-five ministers and and laymen, representing the church and congregations of the two States, met and organized the Synod of West Virginia, by the election of Rev. L. K. Probst, president; Rev. A. F. Richardson, secretary, and Mr. W. T. Mitchell, of Wheeling, treasurer.

A provisional constitution was also adopted at this meeting of the Synod, which will be amended and so made as to meet with the requirements of the new Synod and finally adopted at the first regular meeting the which is to be held in Grafton, W. Va., in October.

A Man of Mystery.

Died in the Strickler hospital, Kingwood, on Friday morning, April 5, 1912, Theos Helios Cozine, a gentleman of the old school and a "man of mystery." He came here last fall and worked in the Argus office and for the Journal more or less all winter. He had been a good printer and was a fine writer, but was in poor health and getting up in years, perhaps 70 years of age. He was taken to the hospital on Sunday before he died and rapidly grew weaker and passed peacefully away. He was born in Teheran, Persia, but claimed Kentucky as his home. He had no communication with his friends and refused to allow any of them notified during his last illness. He was buried on Saturday evening in the Kingwood cemetery, with no services of any kind, as this was his last request. The burial was attended by a few friends connected with the printing offices of the town. He was an unique character and every effort is being made to find his friends and more about him, and later on we hope to be able to give a more full history of the man. His death was caused by cirrhosis of the liver.—Kingwood Argus.

TAFT REFORMS POSTAL SERVICE

Government's Biggest Business Now Run on Modern Basis.

PENNY POSTAGE POSSIBLE.

Economy and Efficiency In Administration Under Hitchcock Make Cheaper Postage Rates Imminent — Policies Should Be Continued.

In thorough accord with the policy of economy and efficiency of the Taft administration, Postmaster General Frank H. Hitchcock has put an end to the annual deficit in the postoffice department and made possible the serious consideration of further reforms and improvements, not the least important of which is the imminent possibility of penny postage. Many other reforms that have the support of President Taft will be inaugurated this year. Another term of the Taft administration would place this $240,000,000 business institution completely on a business basis.

At the beginning of the present administration the postal service was in arrears to the extent of $17,479,770.47, which was decidedly the largest deficit on record. Last year the revenues exceeded the expenditures by $219,118.12.

The wiping out of the deficit has been accomplished without any curtailment of facilities. On the contrary, there have been established 3,744 new postoffices, delivery by carrier has been provided in 186 additional cities, and 2,516 new rural routes, aggregating 69,679 miles, have been authorized. Meanwhile the force of postal employees has been increased by more than 8,000, and last year the total amount expended for salaries was approximately $14,000,000 greater than two years ago. The average annual salary has been increased from $859 to $967 for rural carriers, from $979 to $1,082 for postoffice clerks, from $1,021 to $1,084 for city letter carriers and from $1,168 to $1,183 for railway postal clerks. Thus a marked extension of the postal service and increased compensation for its employees have gone hand in hand with a vanishing deficit.

Postal Banks Great Success.

By persistent effort the present Republican administration secured the passage on June 25, 1910, of the act creating the postal savings system, which is now in operation at practically all the 7,500 presidential postoffices. Preparations are being made for its extension to 40,000 fourth class postoffices. It is confidently anticipated that the deposits at the close of the present fiscal year will aggregate $50,000,000 and that the income of the system will be sufficient to pay all operating expenses.

Under President Taft the postoffice department has engaged in an aggressive crusade against the fraudulent use of the mails. Last year the inspectors investigated many cases involving the sale of worthless stock in imaginary mining companies and other fictitious concerns. There were altogether 529 indictments and 184 convictions, with but 12 acquittals. The other cases are pending. The convicted swindlers had defrauded the people of many millions of dollars.

Sunday service by employees has been reduced to a minimum, with little objection from patrons.

Reforms Under Way.

Many other improvements have been made in the postal service during President Taft's term of office, such as the shipment of periodicals in carloads by fast freight, which has reduced the cost of transportation and expedited the handling of first class mail, and the consolidation of the star route and rural delivery services, so that it has been possible to establish many new routes and to serve thousands of additional patrons on existing routes with little or no increased cost. But the Taft program of postal reform and progress is not yet completed. The president is urging congress to adopt legislation for the readjustment of postage rates on a basis of cost, which will eventually permit of a 1 cent rate on letter mail. A project also is under way for giving to village communities the same free delivery of mail that is now enjoyed by cities and the rural population.

The establishment of a domestic parcel post has received the earnest consideration of the president. In some branches of the delivery service, notably the rural and city delivery routes, the equipment now necessary is sufficient for the additional transportation of considerable merchandise with little or no increase in expense.

President Taft, accordingly, has urgently recommended to congress the adoption of the necessary legislation, and to present the issue clearly, three items of $50,000 each have been included in the estimates of the postal service by Postmaster General Hitchcock, two to cover the initial expense of introducing the parcel post on rural routes and in the city delivery service, respectively, and the third to meet the cost of an investigation looking to the final extension of the service to the railways and other transportation lines.

DANGER AHEAD.

TAFT DEFEATS RAILROADS.

Prevents Increase In Freight Rates by Vigorous Action.

President Taft's method of doing his work as president without seeking to achieve personal notoriety from his good works was never better illustrated than in his ultimatum to the railroads of the country which prevented a general increase in railroad rates just prior to the adoption of amendments to the railroad rate law two years ago. The president served notice upon the railroads that if they anticipated the new law they would be haled into court and as a result of subsequent conferences the railroads agreed to postpone their action until the new law was passed.

In the new law of congress President Taft assisted in inserting a provision which transferred from the shoulders of the shipper to that of the railroads the burden of proof in establishing the reasonableness of a railroad rate. Prior to that time the practice had been just the opposite, with the result that many shippers who were or had been suffering from discriminatory rates or practices, were unable to prove their cases without great expense or long litigation or both. Under this new law the railroads subsequently made application for an increase in their rates and the interstate commerce commission, not being satisfied with the showing of the railroads as to their reasonableness, denied them. Thus one of the great achievements of President Taft came to pass, an achievement which affected every man, woman and child in the country, but it was done so quietly that it has almost been forgotten by many who were benefited.

MINERS' WELFARE CAUSE OF TAFT

Bureau of Mines Marks Great Step Forward.

SAVES HUNDREDS OF LIVES.

Discovery of Danger of Coal Dust Important — Handling of Explosives Made Safer — Government's Experimental Coal Mine.

The saving of many lives annually—the lives of miners throughout the United States—will be one of the splendid results that will follow the establishment of the bureau of mines, one of the great achievements in the interest of labor of the administration of President Taft.

The excessive and unnecessary loss of life in the mines of this country was one of the primary causes for the creation of this bureau. For years hundreds of miners were killed in mine disasters, and practically nothing was done to check the terrible loss of life.

Spurred on by President Taft, an act creating the bureau of mines was passed by congress and became effective on July 1, 1910. John A. Holmes of the United States geological survey was appointed as the first director. Mr. Holmes was reputed and certified to be the best trained man for the place obtainable in the United States. The chief experimental station was established at Pittsburgh, where the investigations of the problems intrusted to the bureau have been prosecuted so successfully for nearly two years.

In the year 1907, the most disastrous of all years in the American coal mines, 3,125 miners lost their lives. This represented 4.86 of men killed for every 1,000 employed. In coal mines in Europe less than two miners are killed out of every 1,000 employed. As a result of the work conducted by the bureau of mines and the wise use of an appropriation of $150,000 made by congress, the death rate has been already reduced to practically one-half what it was in 1907.

One of the notable achievements of the bureau of mines was the demonstration of the fact that coal dust in a bituminous mine is more dangerous and deadly than gas. It had been the belief heretofore that gas or fire damp was the greatest menace to the miners, and little attention was given to the accumulation of coal dust. The bureau of mines proved to the satisfaction of the miners as well as operators that coal dust would explode and, unlike fire damp, carried no warning with it. The keeping of dusty mines wet, as recommended by the bureau of mines, was found to reduce materially the chances of explosion of coal dust.

The number of deaths in the mines has been greatly reduced as a result of the testing of explosives under the direction of the bureau of mines. In the year 1908 the coal mines in the United States used 2,000,000 pounds of short flame explosives, and at present nearly seven times that quantity is being used with greater safety, due to the co-operation of the coal operators and the bureau of mines.

The establishment of an experimental coal mine at Brucetown, Pa., twelve miles from Pittsburgh, is still another notable achievement of the bureau of mines. It places the United States in advance of other nations with respect to this research and experimental work in mines. Numerous tests are made at this experimental mine, from which many excellent results are obtained.

Still another important work which is conducted under the auspices of the bureau of mines is the rescue of entombed miners. Since the creation of the bureau many hundreds of lives have been saved. At the big mining disaster in Ohio one of the rescue corps of the bureau of mines arrived at the scene thirty-two hours after the disaster. Three men were rescued who had been given up as dead and allowed to remain in the mine. At another time one man was found alive among 150 dead, and today he is the sole survivor of that terrible catastrophe due to the splendid work of the rescue corps.

Before the bureau of mines was made possible by the interest of President Taft, which was followed by the necessary legislation for its establishment, there was no organized effort in saving the lives of entombed miners. Time and again men have sacrificed their lives in vain attempts to rescue their companions. This unnecessary sacrifice of life has been stopped by the co-operation of the state authorities with the federal rescuers attached to the bureau of mines. An investigation of the fuel resources of the United States is also being made with a view of checking the waste and increasing the efficiency with which fuel is used. This latter phase of the work is a part of the practical conservation policy of the Taft administration.

Dr. Wiley Supports Taft.

Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, who recently resigned as chief chemist of the department of agriculture, when in Cincinnati several days ago made the following statement:

"President Taft is the one man who stood between me and destruction at Washington. When efforts were being made to 'assassinate me' Taft proved my only protector. He stood by me, and I am grateful to him. I hope he will be re-elected president."

Humor and Philosophy

By DUNCAN M. SMITH

CHANCE TO PRACTICE.

ACCORDING to the head guesser of a celebrated eastern bughouse, tea and coffee do as rough work with the delicate female system as alcohol does with men.

After they have lingered over the breakfast cup for a number of years their nervous organizations begin to look like western ranch buildings after a cyclone has dallied with them. Now will the women put the cup away as resolutely as they have been telling the men they would shun the flowing bowl if they were the male portion of the world?

It is such a fine opportunity for them to put some of their pet theories into practice that they can hardly fail to embrace it. Watch them.

Confession.

My desk—say, I wish you could see it!
You'd see, I assure you, a fright.
I wonder how some people manage
To keep a desk straightened out right.
'Twould give a good housekeeper fidgets
To gaze on the tangled debris,
And one who to slang was addicted
Would shudder and say, "Hully gee!"

To speak of confusion confounded,
A babel in papers and trash,
Would just in a measure describe it.
A jumble of newspaper hash—
Duns, clippings and letters unanswered,
And postals from friends far away,
And efforts from poets submitted,
And badges from last Labor day.

I hear that the diggers discover
In ruins of Egypt and Rome
Rich treasures to sell to collectors
Or send to the loved ones at home.
I wonder if some priceless relics—
Checks, due bills or samples of art—
I'd find if I went through the rubbish
And patiently took it apart.

I think as I come in the morning
And clear a space where I may write
I'll certainly find a few minutes
To straighten things out before night.
But when in the evening I finish
My labors and hasten away
I look with dismay on the chaos
And put the task off till next day.

Of a Kind.

Some young men go west and go broke, while others more sophisticated stay at home and grow old on their dads' hands.

Unnecessary.

The suburban husband had shut the fox terrier inside the gate with care and started down the street with a last wave for little wifey standing in the doorway, when he just happened to think—

"By the way, dear," he called, "if by any misfortune I can't get home to dinner I'll send out a note by the messenger and"—

"It's quite unnecessary, dearest," wifey answered sweetly. "I've already found that note in your coat pocket."

Truth Comes Home Slowly.

"I guess," said the wise old codger, "the public must be satisfied that I've been nothing but an old fossil for the past twenty years or so."

"What led you to that conclusion?"

"The fact that I'm just beginning to realize that I'm not as young as I used to be."

Most Ticklish.

"It's funny how ticklish women are, isn't it?"

"Yes. Now, I brought a feather home the other night, and it nearly tickled my wife to death."

"Why, how did that happen?"

"I gave it to her. It was an ostrich feather."

Then He Did.

Miss Wearyun ((11 p. m.)—I like to see a graceful man—

Mr. Borum (interrupting)—Hem! Am I not graceful?

Miss Wearyun—Yes, and, as I was saying, I like to see a graceful man bow himself out of my presence.

One of a Few.

"My wife seems to possess the bargain counter instinct."

"So?"

"Yes; she can tell at a glance whether a forty-nine cent article has been marked down from 50 cents or up from 48.

The Mercenary Creatures.

"Why don't you like Charlie?"

"He doesn't know anything."

"That isn't any reason."

"Isn't it?"

"No; the question is, Can he make money?"

Amenities.

"What is that detective's greatest achievement?" asked one member of the police force.

"Getting people to think he's a detective?" answered the other.

Cause and Effect.

Said the married man, with a sigh,
"I've got a good mouth for pigh,
But I get pains and aches
Eating those my wife maches,
And that is, believe me, no ligh."

Popular Song.

"What is the hen making all that fuss about?"

"She is simply piping her lay."

WAY TO SOUTH JOHNSVILLE.

Story of a Young Man, a Girl and an Automobile.

By ALLAN P. AMES.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

"For downright chuckleheaded meanness," said King, "this town has everything in central New York pushed off the map."

"O-oh! Is that so-o?" said Zeb Williams, the town constable.

"I—I suppose you heard what I just said?" stammered the youth as he collided at the store door with a pretty girl. "I fear that in my haste I was too general. I didn't mean to include the whole town."

"You needn't explain," she said quickly. "I know how they treat people in automobiles."

King murmured something about its being of no consequence and had started toward his car when, to his surprise, she followed. "If you want to go to South Johnsville," she said, with friendly assurance, "I'll show you how."

"Somehow or other I've a notion you live in that big brick house back in the trees by the four corners. Get in and I can set you down at your door, and you at the same time can point out which road I'm to take."

Then the girl surprised him again. She accepted the invitation.

In the seat beside him, she showed intelligent interest in his valves and levers, and the conversation during the brief but swift run to the crossroads was mainly technical in its nature.

"Let me take you around the square and finish the lesson," he said. "It's only four or five miles, and I've all afternoon to get where I'm going."

"I should just love to," she replied, with a frankness he had learned to expect. "But I'm getting all dusty. Will you wait until I run up to the house and get a coat?"

"I HEREBY ARREST YE IN THE NAME OF THE LAW."

"I'd wait—forever," asserted King.

Suddenly he felt a heavy hand on his shoulder and a triumphant shout in his ear:

"Quick, boys! I've got him! Here, you young squirt—no use tryin' to git away from me!"

King made a hard fight and with superhuman effort got the better of his opponent. Re-enforcements, however, deprived him of his advantage, for two brawny young farmers, arriving on the run, tore his grip loose, and Zeb, stepping to the ground and throwing back his coat to reveal a shining metal badge attached to his left suspender, announced:

"I hereby arrest ye in the name of the law fer exceedin' the speed limit."

"Thought ye'd show off before the squire's darter, didn't ye?" taunted one of the youths who had rescued the constable. "When her pap comes back ye'll have a chance to tell him all about it. He's justice of the peace, he is, and he's death on city scorchers."

"The squire won't be ter home till tomorrer," announced Zeb Williams. "But, with the help of these here bracelets, I guess we kin take good care of ye. Hey, boys?"

As he spoke he drew from his pocket a huge pair of antiquated iron handcuffs.

"Oh, see here," protested King, "you don't have to do that. I'm ready to pay my fine, but you have no right to put me in handcuffs."

"Guess I haven't been constable of this town fer twenty years without knowin' my rights," retorted Williams. "Hold him tight, boys."

Compared with the struggle that then ensued the previous bout between King and the constable was a mere sparring match, for as Williams advanced with the handcuffs extended King glimpsed a slim figure in a long gray coat emerging from the house, and the thought of appearing ridiculous in her eyes lent him the strength of two. But his assailants were three, and plow and shovel had made their muscles as hard if not as supple as the bat and racket and oar had rendered King's. And as the girl, quickening her pace at the unexpected sight, reached the gate an ominous double click announced that the irons had locked about his wrists.

Hampered as he was, King still fought, with elbows, with shoulders, with knees, with feet—fought as primitive man might have battled blind with rage against overwhelming odds—while the body of the car lurched on its excellent springs as if traveling over a hummocky road. But the three villagers were gradually crushing him, him into submission and in a few seconds more he must have yielded, a breathless and humiliated captive, when help came from an unexpected quarter. Fully occupied with the struggle, none of the four men noticed that the silent spectator had advanced beside the car. She leaned forward, avoiding with difficulty their thrashing bodies, and suddenly from the throbbing motor shot a series of those violent, unmuffled explosions so alarming to uninitiated ears.

The effect upon Zeb Williams and his two panting aids was instantaneous. With smothered ejaculations they simultaneously let go the prisoner and straightened up to gaze in alarm at the hooded motor which seemed on the point of tearing itself to pieces. Then, before they had a chance to recover their wits, the car started forward with a jolt that threw all three over the mud guards into the road.

On being released King also had started to rise, but the jerk of the car only sent him sprawling back into the seat next the driver's. There his right shoulder came in contact with a gray clad arm stretched out to the steering wheel, and, twisting about, he found the seat he had formerly occupied filled by a young lady with flushed cheeks and tousled hair intent at that moment on checking the machine's advance into the fence. He had not seen her jump in, but he realized that she must have performed this hazardous feat in the extremely brief interval that had intervened since his antagonists had lurched out of the car.

By the time he had raised his manacled hands to help her the girl had already brought the automobile back on the road. Then he let his hands drop on his knees as he noted the skillful manner in which she manipulated the levers and sent the car skimming along at a speed that quickly placed them beyond hearing of the frantic commands of the constable. For a quarter of a mile Williams and his assistants kept up the hopeless pursuit. Then a bend in the road hid them from sight, and King saw them no more.

"And you let me think I was giving you your first lessons," said King, speaking for the first time.

The girl deftly brought the machine to half speed before she replied, and then she did not answer his implied question. "We ought to reach South Johnsville in fifteen or twenty minutes," she announced. "Whose house there shall I take you to?"

"Oh, look here," exclaimed the young man, all at once realizing his position, "I can't let you get into trouble on my account. Isn't there some blacksmith nearby where I can have these things filed off?"

"No; it was my fault," she asserted. "I got you into this scrape, and I'm going to see you through. You needn't worry about me. My aunt, Mrs. Applewaite, lives in South Johnsville, and she'll see that I get back home all right."

"Mrs. Applewaite, did you say?"

"Yes," responded the girl without meeting his gaze. "Do you know her?"

"Know her!" cried King excitedly. "I should say I do. Why, it's her house I was bound for. Her son, Joe Applewaite, is one of my best friends, and I'm going there to stay over Sunday. "Say," he went on joyfully, leaning forward the better to see her face—"say, you aren't Emily Verone, are you? For if you are we're as good as old friends already. I've heard Joe talk about you and your family ever since I knew him. In fact, the chance of seeing you was one of the inducements he offered in connection with this visit."

"Of course I'm Emily Verone," she replied. "Do you mean to say Joe never told you what I look like?"

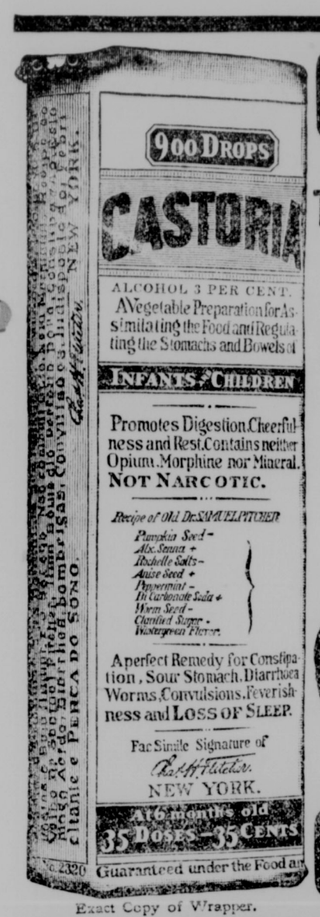
"Dozens of times. But—well, he always spoke as if you were a little girl with pigtails, and, besides, he never half did you justice."

"You might have suspected something when I was so ready to ride with you. Girls don't generally accept such an invitation, you know, from any stranger that happens along. Why, I knew who you were the minute you said South Johnsville."

For a moment King could think of no defense. But his crestfallen expression and the incongruously helpless figure he made, sitting disheveled and handcuffed by her side, dispelled Miss Verone's swift April anger more effectually than anything he could have said.

Suddenly she laughed aloud. "Won't Aunt Margaret and Joe be surprised when I come honking up to their door with a captive in chains?"

"Yes," agreed King with restored cheerfulness. "They'll wonder why you thought chains necessary."



Miss Verone regarded him severely. "A man in handcuffs shouldn't make speeches."

"Very well," he answered, unabashed. "I'll reserve the rest until we reach the Applewaites'."

"The rest?"

"Yes. There are lots more things I might say. But haste isn't always wise, even for a man in an automobile."

"There is no reason why we shouldn't go faster," said Miss Verone as she reached for the speed control.

TEDDY BEAR.

My Teddy Bear, I gave you Bill
To treat with a right good will—
As well as other things I left;
My policies were on the shelf.

Endorsed them should have been your lot
And made your term hot shot.
You heeded not the people's will
And now no doubt the fight's up hill.

You gave my Teddy Bear a kick,
Sent it to Aldrich for to lick.
While Pinchot is a noble man
To Ballinger you gave the van.

The laments of my Teddy Bear
Have roused the people in the air.
The cry comes from the Western soils
As well as from every soul that toils.

I hear the cry—I cannot rest,
It comes from North, South, East and West.
Your Teddy Bear again is found—
Don't let Bill kick it all around.

—ALBERT ASHBY.

Warning to Natural Gas Customesr.

Owing to the severe cold weather this winter and the ground being frozen deeper than usual and as the service lines from the street to the houses are not more than twelve or eighteen inches in depth, we find in several cases where the frost is deeper than the service lines there is more or less danger of the lines pulling part and causing leaks.

The Gas Company is doing everything possible to prevent any leaks of this kind and will take this opportunity to notify all customers of Natural Gas, to use every precaution against accidents and should they detect the odor of gas at any time, to immediately shut off the gas at the meter and notify the Gas Company at once. We particularly caution you not to look for a leak with a light.

THURSDAY, APRIL 18, 1912.

PROGRESSIVE POLICIES LAID DOWN BY COLONEL ROOSEVELT.

Our aim is to secure the real and not the nominal rule of the people.

We propose to do away with whatever in our government tends to secure privilege.

We believe in securing for the people the direct election of United States Senators.

We believe in securing for the people the right of nominating candidates for office, from the President down, by direct primaries.

We believe in securing for the people the exercise of a real and not merely a nominal control over their representatives in office.

Our object is to give the people control and to have the people exercise this control in the spirit of the broadest sympathy and broadest desire to secure social and industrial justice for every man and woman.

We stand for the adequate control of all big business and especially of all monopolistic big business where it proves unwise or impossible to break down the monopoly.

Prosperity can only permanently come to this country on a basis of honesty and of fair treatment for all.

The keynote of the progressive campaign in 1912 was sounded by Col. Roosevelt in his Louisville, Ky., speech on April 3. At that time Col. Roosevelt made plain the issues which the voters of the country are called upon to decide at the polls; made plain that there can be no middle ground between the rule of the people; the rights of the many against special privilege; right against wrong and honesty against dishonesty.

At the outset Col. Roosevelt shattered the claims of Mr. Taft to be called a progressive, showing that Mr. Taft has failed to carry out the policies to which he pledged himself before he entered the White House; that he has been won over to the "special privilege," and allowed the reactionaries who fought him three years ago to dominate his administration.

In one of Col. Roosevelt's own sentences may be summed up his stand in the present fight. He said:

"We who stand for the cause of progress, for the cause of the uplift of humanity and for the betterment of mankind, are pledged to eternal war against tyranny and ring, by the few or many, by a plutocracy or by a mob."

Col. Roosevelt stated that the nation is facing one of the greatest crises in its history. He declared that a victory for the progressives means the placing of human life above the dollar, the government control of "big business," the conversion of natural resources, and the restoration of power to the people themselves. Victory for the reactionaries, headed by Mr. Taft, however, he stated, means the control of the government and the courts in the interest of "big business" and a return to that condition when commercial corruption in league with the political allies, seized the most valuable of the country's properties.

While severely arraigning Mr. Taft for his dilatory tactics, Col. Roosevelt was sufficiently charitable not to charge him with anything more than timidity and lack of comprehension.

"Every man who, directly or indirectly upholds privileges and favors the special interests, whether he acts from evil motives or merely because he is puzzle-headed or dull of mental visions, or lacking in social sympathies, or whether he simply lacks interest in the subject, is a reactionary.

"The man is a reactionary, whatever may be his professions, and no matter how excellent his intentions, who opposes these movements, or if in a high place, takes no interest in them and does not earnestly help them forward."

"We are in a period of changes; we are fronting a great period of further change. Never was the need more imperative of men of vision who are also men of action. Disaster is ahead of us if we trust to the leadership of men whose hearts have withered and whose eyes are blinded, who believe that we can find safety in dull timidity and dull inaction."

Dr. R. A. Ravenscroft arrived in Oakland last night and went from here this morning to his home in Accident, where he will spend the week-end.

CHARLES D. WAGAMAN,

Republican Candidate for Congress Sixth District of Maryland.

Charles Dahlgren Wagaman was born in Washington county, Maryland, on the 25th day of January, 1864, at Beaver Creek, the son of John Wagaman and Cordelia H. Gantz.

His educational advantages were obtained in the public schools and the High school of Washington county. Circumstances closed the doors of a higher education to him. He taught for a time in the public schools of Washington county and devoted his evenings and his vacations to the study of law under the direction of the late Judge Stake. After his admission to the Bar he applied himself with untiring zeal, energy and industry to his profession until he won for himself a place amongst the leaders of the Bar in Maryland.

In politics Mr. Wagaman has always been a consistent and active Republican, a firm believer in the soundness of the political doctrines of Lincoln, Grant, McKinley and those other exponents of the Republican creed represented by its line of distinguished Presidents.

Coming up from the ranks of the people, without wealth or friends in high places to push him into prominence, he stands a representative type of the self made man who has won his way to the front.

He is the kind of man that the people, regardless of class or condition, can trust, for no one knows or appreciates the people's wants and needs better than he. A close student of the law and of his fellow man as well, a member of the Christian church and an humble follower of that greatest leader of men, he has all the elements in him that go to make up a true representative of the people.

(Published by authority of A. C. STAITE, political agent.)

THE WICKED ROOSEVELT.

As Seen by Charles J. Bonaparte, Ex-Attorney General.

An intelligent, well-informed and absolutely impartial stranger, attempting to understand American politics of today, say a "Man from Mars," if the Martians exist, have these characteristics and might visit our earth, would be probably much perplexed when he compared what he saw in Trustowned and some other newspapers about Theodore Roosevelt and the notorious facts of the latter's history. The supposed observer would read that our ex-President was incredibly bloodthirsty and all aflame with the lust of conquest. In a wild diatribe, now going the rounds of the press, and attributed (we may hope unjustly) to a judge, he is said to contemplate a vast conscription of all our young men, doomed to perish in bloody wars of aggression, which this Moloch, if restored to power, will promptly wage against nearly all the rest of mankind. But when he held the office he seeks again, he stopped civil war in Cuba, prevented it in Panama, diminished its area and evils in Santo Domingo, and, through his meditation between Russia and Japan, a mediation which no other Chief Executive in the civilized world ventured to undertake, brought to a close one of the most sanguinary and most costly wars of our day. What other ruler of his generation, what other American President, of any generation, has a better or as good a record as a peacemaker? Foreigners showed what they thought of him by awarding him the Nobel prize; some of his countrymen show what they pretend to think of him by hysterical vituperation, which would be extravagant if applied to Attila or Tamerlane. It is true that he had an honorable, although very brief, military career; but to say a man is unfit for or unworthy of the Presidency merely because he has served his country creditably in arms would be, in the words of Sam Weller, "coming' it rayther powerful" in defiance of patriotism and common sense, even for the worst fanatics among the peace people.

Again, our visitor from a sister planet would see furious denunciation of Colonel Roosevelt's "insatiable ambition," an ambition leading him to seek a third term in the Presidency, when all our most honored Presidents, with Washington at their head, have refused this. But it is none the less true that he did refuse a third term when he might have had one without turning two fingers, nay more, when it was no easy matter to resist the many and sternous attempts made to force one upon him. Moreover, as was pointed out in a recent article of this series, he is the only President who refused a third term avowedly because he thought no President should hold office continuously for more than eight years. Washington did so because he was old and tired of public life; Jackson, because he was yet older and ill beside; no other President could have had a third term had he wished one. It is true that, if we may believe the press dispatches, the Democratic Representatives were aroused to great enthusiasm on February 22 when they read the passage of Washington's Farewell Address, wherein he "speaks of the dangers of a third term for any President:" inasmuch however as there is no such "passage" nor one word on the subject in the Farewell Address, this report shows only how intelligent are the Representatives or how truthful are the chroniclers.

The hypothetical Martain would next learn that Colonel Roosevelt had been guilty of "ingratitude"—of "the blackest ingratitude"—toward President Taft. He would find "ingratitude" defined in the Century Dictionary as "a state of unthankfulness for benefits conferred," and he might then inquire what were the "benefits" which President Taft had "conferred" on Colonel Roosevelt. He would probably be told that Roosevelt "conferred" the Presidency on Taft, but if Taft has "conferred" anything of moment on Roosevelt the public doesn't know it. Now, no friend of Roosevelt accuses the President of "ingratitude," although he has on several notable occasions taken official action which he could not fail to know must be distasteful and even painful to his former backer. As Colonel Roosevelt has himself said of Secretary Stimson, on whose behalf he made such herculean efforts in 1910 and who now supports his rival:

"Neither Mr. Stimson nor any other man whom I have supported for public office owes me gratitude for doing so. I support a man, not to get his gratitude, but because I believe he will render good service to the people, and I ask nothing from any man in return expect that he render such service to the people and I judge him accordingly."

Finally the wanderer through stellar space would hear the ex-President charged with "treachery" and "perfidy" in entering the lists as a candidate because, in November, 1904, when he learned he had been chosen President, he said he would not accept a third term "under any circumstances" and because again, in June, 1911, he said he could not support President Taft for nomination but would not be himself a candidate in 1912. There is an old French proverb which warns one against saying: "Fountain, I will not drink of thy waters," and this is very good advice for our public men, but those who first give it knew nothing of American journalism. When the enterprising reporter of the Daily Paul Pry cheerily "buts in" with, "Mr. Victim, the No-Matter-What-Ship may become vacant within your lifetime: will you try for it? If V. replies, "I have never thought on the subject," or "I don't know," or I'll think of that when the time comes," or "I have nothing to say," or "It's none of your business," or, in short, if he says anything except "No," without qualification or reservation, the Paul Pry has "scored," for it can publish, "Mr. Victim doesn't deny that he may try for the office," and this may well cause him to be "headlined" a receptive candidate" from one end of the country to the other; although, in fact, the idea of running for the place may have never even dawned on his mind. It is in no wise surprising if those constantly exposed to such treatment are sometimes less guarded in their denials than the uncertainty of human life and purpose makes wise for a philosopher.

If we admit, however, that Colonel Roosevelt has, in fact, done what seven years or even seven months ago he thought and said he wouldn't do, how does this fact show him to be "perfidious" or "treacherous," or show anything except that his foresight is not always as good as his hindsight? He tells us that in 1904 he thought and spoke only for the third consecutive term and that last year he didn't expect or intend, as he never desired, to seek the nomination this year, but he became convinced later that it was his duty to do this. Except for those who think everything he says must be false and everything he does must be base and wicked, these statements bear the marks of obvious truth. If, however, it were clear in both cases that he had, in truth, changed his mind, would this involve any moral obliquity? A mere statement of expectation or present purpose is not a promise; a man who says "I shall go to New York tomorrow" does not break his work because he stays in Baltimore. Moreover, supposing that he had really promised some definite person not to serve his country again as President "under any circumstances," it is at least an open question whether such a promise would not have been contrary to good morals and public policy, and therefore, one which it was his duty to disregard. To discuss this question, however, were merely childish, as the facts stand, for the pretended "promise" was made only to the circumambient air.

Indeed, the attitude of Colonel Roosevelt's critics toward his supposed indelicacies of conduct is so absurdly incongruous with their own behavior that the whole outcry would be ridiculous were its subject matter of less moment to the public. The writer received within the last few days an abusive anonymous letter, mailed in Washington, wherein he was reproached with supporting one who, in its words, "has done a thing which would not pass in any court of honor." That a coward, afraid or ashamed to sign his own name to offensive words he has writen, should talk about "courts of honor" is no whit more preposterous than that men who write as they are ordered for papers owned by unscrupulous "interests" should presume to speak of the motives, the customs or the obligations of gentlemen.

The first lap of the Republican voting contest, which closed last night, should not in any manner dampen the enthusiasm of the contestants. It is yet time for those lagging behind to make a good record. Through the efforts of those now in the contest the subscription list of this paper has been appreciably augmented.

By advertisement printed elsewhere in this paper today the registration officers for the various election districts, will sit for the purpose of registering newly qualified voters and making other proper entries on the registration books on Tuesday the 30 inst. That he may attain this honor is the wish of his brethren of the local lodge.

INJURIES PROVED FATAL.

E. C. Garrett, Hurt at Deer Park, Died on Way to Keyser Hospital.

E. C. Garrett, aged about thirty years, son of the late John J. Garrett, died on board train No. 14 Saturday afternoon as he was being taken to the Hoffman Hospital at Keyser, suffering from injuries received earlier in the day at Deer Park, where he was engaged as track forman by the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company.

Mr. Garrett was engaged with his force of men in making some needed repairs to the tracks of the Company and passed in the rear of a freight train which was going eastward to the opposite track when he was struck by a helping engine descending the grade from Altamont. His injuries were of such nature that it was impossible for him to recover and in consequence first aid only was rendered by Dr. Broadwater, of Oakland, to whose office he was brouget by trainmen. Both legs of the man were cut off and his abdomen was crushed. After being treated here he was placed on train No. 14, the objective point being the Hoffman Hospital in Keyser, but death occurred as the train was going down the Seventeen-Mile grade. To the end Mr. Garrett retained his faculties. He is survived by his wife and one child. His funeral took place at Deer Park Monday.

Hon. Julius Scherr of Morgantown was here Monday on business. Mr. Scherr is employed by the tax Commissioner of the state as one of the accountants. He has been at work on the audit of the Ohio county sheriff for the past two months-and has a months work there yet. He was here to look over the books of the county officials and to instruct them in the methods of keeping them. He found the work here in good shape. Mr. Scherr is one of the state's trusted employees and is one of the capable attaches of the tax commissioner's office.—Kingwood Journal.

The Board of County Commissioners, in session last week, closed the levy Thursday morning after this paper had gone to press. The levy is published in full in these columns today. The rate for county pusposes is 88 cents on the $100 valuation with a State rate of 23½ cents. An act of the recent session of the Legislature exempting personal property to the amount of $300 from taxation, whice cut down the taxable basis more than a quarter million of dollars, and an additional appropriation of more than $13,000 for the support of the public schools are two items that contributed greatly in making the rate seem out of proportion when the increased taxable basis as made by the new assessment is taken into consideration. Other items of county expense have been provided for by the Commissioners which will no doubt lower the rate for county purposes next year at a time when the state rate will be increased almost fifty per cent.

Second Spray For Fruit Trees.

To the Editor of The Republican:

Now that the season is passed for dormant spraying, fruit growers should prepare for the treatments that improve the fruit.

Apple trees should be sprayed just as the blossoms fall with concentrated lime-sulfur mixture, diluted one gallon to forty of water, to which should be added 2 pounds of arsenate of lead to 50 gallons of spray, to prevent injury from Codling Moth and various diseases.

Peach and plum trees should be sprayed just as the calyxes or shucks are falling, with a solution made by using 2 pounds of arsenate of lead and 2 pounds of lime to 50 gallons of water.

Tomato plants should be sprayed in the bed when they have their third leaf, with Bordeaux mixture, 4-5-50 formula, and 2 pounds lead, to prevent leaf blight and lessen attack from flea beetles, etc.

All persons interested in these treatments should write at once to the Maryland Experiment Station, College Park, Md., for bulletin No. 164, now ready for distribution.

THE DEATH RECORD.

ALBERT HENRY BUSH.

After an illness of but one day, Albert Henry Bush died at his home on the West Side Tuesday evening of acute Bright's disease and convulsions.

Monday evening Mr. Bush was taken suddenly ill, and so serious did his condition become that the family was greatly alarmed. Physicians were summoned, and did all within their power to give him relief, but the disease had fastened itself on the victim with such tenacity that nothing could be done to save him. Mr. Bush was in apparently good health Monday morning, and his sudden taking away greatly shocked his family and friends.

The deceased was born 53 years ago at Elgon, W. Va., He engaged in the lumber bussiness with his brother, the late Theodore Bush, some thirty years ago at Valley Falls. Later he settled in Grafton, and continued his residence here until his residence here until his death, being engaged all the time in the lumber business. During recent years he had been cutting out a tract of timber on Sandy Creek up the Valley river.

Mr. Bush was a member of St. Paul's Lutheran church, and always took great interest in the work. Today (Thursday) the funeral was held at the residence, conducted by Rev. Richardson, of the Lutheran church, and interment was made in Bluemont cemetery.—Grafton Leader.

Mr. Bush was the youngest and only surviving brother of Mr. Louis Bush of Oakland.

O. H. S. Notes.

On Monday evening the guitarist, Johnson Bane, delighted an audience at the High School with his superb playing. He was assisted by Miss Hellice Rathbun, of the High School, who sang charmingly; also by Mr. Bender in an impersonation of Robert Browning's poem "Herve Reil." Owing to the rain the audience was not as large as it would have been.

We always enjoy hearing good music, and more so when we have the privilege of listening to one of the students. On Monday morning Eleanor Hinebaugh favored us with two selections.

The Sophomore class of the Domestic Science department, with their teacher, had their picture taken on Friday. Harry Weimer was the photographer.

TAFT A PROGRESSIVE SURE ENOUGH

The Roster of His Supporters Furnishes Legal Proof.

SOME OF THE MEN BEHIND HIM

Corporation Lawyers, Standpat Senators, Trust Organizers, Machine Politicians, Are All Working For Taft.

A respected member of Mr. Taft's cabinet has been circulating a pamphlet containing a speech written by himself to prove that Taft is a progressive. That ought to settle it, especially as Mr. Taft himself says he is a progressive. The best proof as to Taft's progressiveness, however, lies neither in the pamphlet of the cabinet member nor the statement of Mr. Taft, but in the list of progressive American statesmen who are leading the fight for Mr. Taft in the United States and who have declared Mr. Taft's progressiveness as the only genuine brand which they were willing to invest in or indorse.

As a nation of lawyers—for that, it seems, is our chief magistrate's conception of the American people—we are entitled to the best evidence—to legal proof. And the best legal proof of what Mr. Taft is and what Mr. Taft stands for is to be found in who the men are and what the men stand for who are leading the fight for his renomination. They know him better than the average citizen, for they are daily working with him and for him.

Here is a small list of the main Taft enthusiasts who have put the brand of "progressive" on the Hon. William Howard Taft and are now booming him for four more years of "progress." It is not a complete list, and the reader is at liberty to add to it from the store of his own political knowledge. It is arranged for convenience by states.

New York.

The Hon. William Barnes, Jr., whom Taft made chairman of the Republican state committee, boss of Albany county, recently charged, in vice report now before the New York legislature, with protecting gambling and prostitution; old guard dictator in the legislature; implacable foe of Roosevelt, Hughes and direct primaries, and leader of the combination between Tammany and the Republican machine.

J. B. Duke, who recently promised Taft his support, head of the tobacco trust, whose "dismemberment" as a result of Wickersham's prosecution has simply amounted to an immunity bath and a license to continue its dishonest warfare against competition at a profit already of more than $100,000,000. Mr. Duke is also head of the southern water power combine.

Chauncey M. Depew, ex-railroad senator, officer in seventy corporations and trusts, lieutenant of the late Thomas C. Platt.

The Hon. James Wadsworth, stock raiser and ex-congressman, who lost his seat in congress as the result of his fight against Roosevelt's meat inspection bill.

Washington State.

Richard A. Ballinger, late secretary of the interior, forced from office by public opinion in spite of President Taft's determination to keep him, supporter of the Morgan-Guggenheim-Cunningham Alaska interests.

Jacob Furth, representing the Stone and Webster water power, electric railway and electric light corporations throughout Washington and other western states.

The Hon. Wesley Jones, standpat senator, supporter also of Senator Lorimer.

Minnesota.

Ex-Congressman James A. Tawney, Taft leader of Minnesota, principal lieutenant of Cannon, the man who helped Cannon in his fight to oppose Roosevelt's pure food and drug law, the chief representative in congress of the lumber interests and one of the strongest opponents in congress of progressive legislation, supported by Mr. Taft, Mr. Cannon and the cabinet in his unsuccessful fight for re-election to congress.

James J. Hill, the most active friend of corporate privilege and foe of progressiveness in the west, who recently called upon the president and gave public assurance of his support of Taft's candidacy.

Iowa.

Ex-Senator Lafe Young, an old fashioned reactionary politician, who succeeded Dolliver through Taft's influence.

Massachusetts.

The Hon. Murray Crane, boss of Massachusetts Republican politics; one of the largest individual holders of General Electric, Bell Telephone and Western Union securities in the United States; deeply interested in the New England textile industry and in the water power enterprises in the west and south; also one of the most powerful influences in the J. P. Morgan merger of New England's steam railways, electric railways and steamship lines; since Aldrich's retirement the most powerful friend of corporate privilege in the senate.

Oregon.

Ex-Senator Fulton, made famous by Heney's land graft prosecutions. Mr. Taft offered Senator Fulton the positions of minister to China and federal judge.

California.

Pat Calhoun, boss of the ring of San Francisco and traction magnate. Mr. Calhoun at a recent dinner in Boston sat by President Taft, spoke in his support and denounced Roosevelt's progressive policies.

William F. Herrin, who is counsel and political boss for the Southern Pacific political machine and who in this capacity dictated the choice of both Republican and Democratic nominees throughout the state until Governor Hiram Johnson put the Southern Pacific out of Republican politics in California.

Idaho.

Senator Heyburn, arch standpatter and reactionary, who agreed to help the Cunningham claimants get their patents. He has always been a strong special interest man and a clamorous enemy of conservation in congress.

New Hampshire.

Senator Gallinger, the representative of the New York, New Haven and Hartford system; for many years chairman of the District of Columbia committee in the senate and who during this time has opposed every measure to control the public service corporations in the District of Columbia, also an active opponent of self government in the District of Columbia.

Rhode Island.

Nelson W. Aldrich of the rubber trust, ex-boss of the United States senate, the framer of the Aldrich tariff bill, the man who more than any other made the senate an instrument of special privilege and a body unrepresentative of the people of this country. Supported and publicly praised by Taft for putting over the Aldrich bill.

Senator Henry F. Lippitt, who succeeded Aldrich. The man who wrote the cotton schedule of the Aldrich tariff bill for Mr. Aldrich.

Delaware.

Senator du Pont, political boss of the state of Delaware and head of the powder trust.

Wisconsin.

Senator Isaac Stephenson, lumber baron and lumber interest representative in the senate.

Colorado.

William G. Evans, gas, water power, public service and political boss of Colorado.

Senator Simon Guggenheim of smelter trust and Alaskan fame, the henchman and representative of the Evans interests.

Bob Speer, mayor and boss of the city of Denver.

Utah.

James F. Smith, president of the Mormon church, a political, religious and financial oligarchy which controls Utah and which has promised to throw its support to Taft. Smith is not only president of the Mormon church, but director in the Union Pacific railway and president of the Utah Sugar company, whose stock is controlled by the sugar trust and the Mormon church jointly.

Senator Reed Smoot, one of the twelve apostles of the Mormon church. A sugar and wool senator and now leader of the reactionaries in the senate.

Pennsylvania.

Senator Boies Penrose, one of Mr. Taft's closest advisers, boss of the state of Pennsylvania.

"Divine Right" Baer, president of the Philadelphia and Reading railway and head of the anthracite coal trust; the man who during the hard coal strike in 1902 promulgated the theory that Providence had placed the anthracite coal in the hands of the hard coal trust and given to him and his friends "the divine right" to dispose of the hard coal for what price they saw fit.

Montana.

The Amalgamated Copper company, a corporation organized by H. H. Rogers and William Rockefeller and controlled at present by Standard Oil, is the political and financial boss of the state. Taft's strength in Montana is due to the all powerful political ring which is owned by Amalgamated Copper.

Illinois.

Joseph G. Cannon, reactionary ex-boss of house of representatives, whom Mr. Taft unsuccessfully supported for re-election as speaker.

William B. McKinley, Cannon's first lieutenant in house, the traction magnate of Illinois. Manager of the Taft campaign and strong opponent to government by the people.

William Lorimer, now on trial by the senate on the charge of buying his seat and who hopes to win through Mr. Taft's support.

Wyoming.

Senator Warren, head of the Warren ring in Wyoming, Washington representative of the combination between the wool producers and wool manufacturers, the man who helped the Union Pacific Coal company to acquire the coal fields of Wyoming, which operation is spoken of by Chairman Knapp in his report to the interstate commerce commission as having been accomplished by violence, fraud and theft.

Congressman Mondell, reactionary member of public lands committee, the most conspicuous enemy of conservation in the house.

Ohio.

Boss Cox of Cincinnati, prizefighter, ex-saloon keeper and boss of a political machine in comparison with which Tammany Hall is a good government club.

Charles P. Taft, who, with his brother, William Howard, backed the Cox machine in the last Ohio state election in its fight against the Ohio progressives.

John R. McLean, newspaper owner and backer of the Cox machine. A Democrat in politics, but a Republican for the purpose of Taft's election.

These are some of the men who are the wheel horses of the Taft progressive movement. These are the men whom he has supported and advised with during his administration and who are now crying for his renomination. They have placed their O. K. on Mr. Taft and pronounced him a "progressive," but a "safe and sane" progressive. Four years ago when they thought with Roosevelt and others that he was genuinely progressive they all opposed him. But now they know him better and are all anxious to re-elect him.

If a plain citizen should have the impudence to inquire of these gentlemen how a president can be "safe and sane" both to the plain people and to the bosses, ringmasters and special interest representatives who prey upon the plain people, these gentlemen would no doubt reply in the words of the old song: "Hail, hail, the gang's all here! What the h—l do we care!" But there is another question that the gang does care about, and that is interesting it more and more as the Republican national convention draws near. That question is whether, after all, it is worth while to nominate a man who cannot be elected even if his progressiveness is everything that the gang requires and nothing that it does not require.

Leadership is as dear to the bosses as the government payroll is to the southern officeholders. To the bosses and officeholders the nomination of Taft means defeat, and defeat means loss of power and loss of jobs.

ROOSEVELT VERSUS TAFT.

A Comparison Between a Progressive and a Reactionary.

In his Louisville speech Mr. Roosevelt suggested these standards for distinguishing between the progressive and the reactionary:

Every man who fights fearlessly and effectively against special privilege in any form is to that extent a progressive. Every man who directly or indirectly upholds privilege and favors the special interests, whether he acts from evil motives or merely because he is puzzle headed or dull of mental vision or lacking in social sympathy or whether he simply lacks interest in the subject, is a reactionary. Every man is to that extent a progressive if he stands for any form of social justice, whether it is securing proper protection for factory girls against dangerous machinery or securing a proper limitation of hours of labor for women and children in industry, for securing proper living conditions for those who dwell in the thickly crowded regions of our great cities, for helping, so far as legislators can help, all the conditions of work and life for wageworkers in great centers of industry or for helping by the action both of the national and state governments, so far as conditions will permit, the men and women who dwell in the open country to increase their efficiency both in production on their farms and in business arrangements for the marketing of their produce and also to increase the opportunities to give the best possible expression to their social life. The man is a reactionary, whatever may be his profession and no matter how excellent his intentions, who opposes these movements or who if in high place takes no interest in them and does not earnestly help them forward.

The present incumbent of the office is a man of comfortable habits. He enjoys good food and fast motorcars. His recreation is golf over the links of two of the most exclusive country clubs in America. If he were John D. Rockefeller or the Duke of Westminster he could not be further removed from the atmosphere of manual labor. One cannot conceive Mr. Taft spending days among the miners of Pennsylvania or the steel workers of Pittsburgh. Nor can one picture him taking any passionate interest in the toiling masses. If they get what the law allows them he is well content to dismiss them from his well balanced mind.

The other candidates are like Mr. Taft—with the exception of Roosevelt. He is different, not because he does not like the good things of this world; he probably likes them just as much as Taft. Who doesn't? But he is not dependent on them. And he has a burning sympathy with the poor wretches who never can enjoy them. He is a rich man, compared with the vast majority of his fellow countrymen, but the comforts of life are not enough for him. He was born with the divine discontent. He cannot be easy in wealth so long as the wealth of the few is built upon the misery of the many. Roosevelt has been for days among the miners of Pennsylvania. Probably he would much rather be shooting lions or leading a regiment in battle. But the injustice of life so impresses itself upon him that he cannot rest until he has at least done his share to improve things.

This comparison is a keen analysis of the reasons underlying the events of the last four years which must inevitably culminate in making Mr. Roosevelt the people's candidate for the presidency in November.—Kansas City Star.

MR. REPUBLICAN VOTER.

Are You Willing to Have the Democratic Party Name the Republican Candidate For President?

This is just what the Democrats are attempting to do all over the country. The Democratic newspapers are breaking their necks to nominate Taft and are hysterical in their denunciation of Roosevelt.

Why? Because the Democrats know they can beat Taft in the election if he is nominated and know they cannot beat Roosevelt. Every Democrat everywhere knows Roosevelt would be elected. This is why the Democratic newspapers and the Democratic politicians are breaking their necks to keep Roosevelt from getting the nomination—good business on their part.

Suppose Roosevelt would prove a weak candidate if nominated. Would the Democrats oppose his nomination as they are now doing? Most certainly not. To beat Roosevelt in the nomination means to every Democrat that the Democratic party will win at the polls in November. These are plain facts that you cannot get away from. Think it out for yourself.

JESUS NOW A SPIRIT NO LONGER FLESH

It Was His Soul That Died, His Soul That Was Resurrected.

Pastor Russell, in Baltimore, Exploded a Theory Which Has Been Held Tenaciously by Many Theologians—Second of a Remarkable Series of Sermons on the Resurrection.

Baltimore, Md., April 14.—Pastor Russell addressed large audiences here to-day. We report one of his discourses from the text, "With what body do they come?"—1 Corinthians xv, 35.

On last Lord's day we discussed the fact of the resurrection, and showed from St. Paul's words that without God's purpose of a resurrection those who have fallen asleep in death would have perished as brutes.

You will recall also that we demonstrated that it is not the body, but the soul, that is promised a resurrection—that it was our Lord's soul that went to sheol, to hades, to the death state, and that God raised Him from death on the third day. We noted a difficulty into which all Christendom was plunged by the theory that it is the body that is to be resurrected.

What Went to Heaven?

The ordinary thought in Christian minds in respect to Jesus' death and resurrection is that when He seemed to die He did not die; that he, the being, the soul, could not die; that, instead, He went to heaven, and then on the third day came back to get the body which had been crucified; that He took it to heaven forty days later marred with the print of the nails in His hands and feet, the thorns upon His brow and the spear mark in His side. What a ghastly thought!

Our Methodist friends have not yet changed their statement of the matter, namely, "He ascended up on high, taking His fleshly body with Him, and all that appertained thereto, and sat down on the right hand of God." This mediæval statement correctly admits that the fleshly body was not the Lord's, but that He, the soul, took it with Him as luggage. The statement, "And all that appertained thereto," presumably refers to sandals, walking stick, etc.

All this is of a piece with the theory that the saints when they die go to heaven, and then, later, come back and get their bodies "and all things appertaining thereto"—the inconveniences, presumably, that they have been rid of for centuries! How many trunk loads of "things appertaining thereto" may be taken by some is not stated.

What Say the Scriptures?

The Bible presentation of this subject is every way reasonable, consistent and harmonious. St. Paul points out that "There is a natural body and there is a spirit body." He does not mean, and he does not say, that the spirit body is a human body glorified. Quite to the contrary. He declares that "flesh and blood cannot inherit the Kingdom of God"—no matter how glorified it might be. A human being would be so totally different from a spirit being that, as St. Paul says, "It doth not yet appear what we shall be"—in our change—and the Scriptures do not even attempt to give an explanation.

The Bible merely declares that as we now bear the image of the earthy (Adam), we shall, by the glorious resurrection change, be given a share in the nature and likeness of the Second Adam, our glorious Lord: "We shall be like Him, and see Him as He is"—and, be it noted, we must change from flesh and blood conditions to spirit conditions by resurrection power, in order that we may see Him as He is.

He Appeared and Disappeared.

Two lines of difficulties now present themselves, one of which can be answered, and the other cannot. The unanswerable difficulty is where a natural minded man undertakes to reason the subject out. St. Paul explains this, saying, "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned."

The Apostle proceeds (verses 36-50) to tell us that all men are natural men, except such as have been begotten by the Holy Spirit. All natural men will, in their resurrection, receive earthly or human bodies, while all spiritual ones, New Creatures in Christ, will receive spirit bodies.

Coming to the point of what is to be resurrected, we note that our Lord appeared in a body of flesh, and showed the disciples the print of the nails and the hole made by the spear. But we, perhaps, failed to note that only twice did He thus appear, and but for a few moments each time. His other six or seven appearances during that forty days were also very brief, and in various bodies—once as a gardener, another time as a traveler. His third time as a stranger on the shore, and to Saul of Tarsus as a spirit being of more than angelic brightness—"shining above the brightness of the sun at noonday."

Now we see more distinctly why our Lord did as He did. His disciples were natural men and therefore could not appreciate spiritual things. The Lord adopted the only reasonable way of helping them to understand that He was no longer dead—that He had risen from the dead.

A PAROCHIAL EXPLANATION.

The Rev. Ichabod Duren thoughtfully stroked his quill pen and adjusted his glasses more evenly on his nose and proceeded to write his sermon, in which he was pointing out the error of allowing merely temporal things to interfere with those of eternal significance. Ichabod was a plain, earnest man who worked faithfully at the problems of a parish in colonial Virginia, which were much like those of every parish everywhere, only that he had come into closer touch with his people than have many ministers before and since his day.

Ichabod bit his pen in hope of inspiration, but his thoughts would turn from his theme to one of the younger men in whom he was deeply interested and of whom lately he had seen but little.

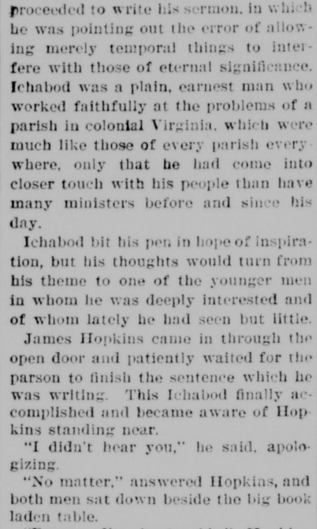
James Hopkins came in through the open door and patiently waited for the parson to finish the sentence which he was writing. This Ichabod finally accomplished and became aware of Hopkins standing near.

"I didn't hear you," he said, apologizing.

"No matter," answered Hopkins, and both men sat down beside the big book laden table.

"Parson, I'm in trouble," Hopkins began, "and I want your help."

"Anything I can do," said Ichabod, "you know I will."



Hopkins hesitated. Then he took the plunge. "It's about Sally Daves. I suppose you'll laugh at me for coming," and he fumbled the hat in his hand, "but I can't make her listen to me, and I don't know what to do. She promised to marry me, and now she says that she never will."

"And you want me to speak to her?" Ichabod inquired, looking at his embarrassed caller with some amusement.

"Yes," said Hopkins, "and I want you to make her marry me. You could do it. You know I'd be a good husband, and you could talk about it—and explain things."

Ichabod was silent. He considered a moment.

"Well, James," he answered, "I'll speak to Sally Daves for you, but she has many men to choose from—you know that—and I'm but a poor pleader. Still, I'll try."

"NO, JAMES HOPKINS; I WILL NOT TELL YOU MY REASON!"

Hopkins looked appreciative and offered the parson a pinch of snuff. Then he rose, and the two men shook hands, and Hopkins went out into the summer world.

Ichabod looked after him as he went away with some complacency. So it was this that had been keeping him away! He would straighten out matters with Sally Daves. The girl was a fool not to keep a man like Hopkins if once she had the luck to get him. Meantime there was his sermon, so he went back to the table and again gently rubbed his nose with his feathered pen and tried once more to get the drift of his argument.

The next afternoon Ichabod rode over to the Daves plantation, where he found two of his younger brethren enjoying themselves in Miss Sally's company. With patience and long suffering he waited until they reluctantly had gone, and then he proceeded at once to deliver his message.

"And he's a worthy man, and you should be ashamed to treat him to whom you're betrothed in such a fashion," he ended.

Sally listened attentively and arranged her neckerchief.

"It's no different from the way I have treated the others," she answered at last, with no attempt to seem impressed with her own faults. "If James Hopkins would come a-wooing, let him bespeak himself and not go bothering the parson."

"It's no such great bother," replied Ichabod candidly, with the air of one who waives the point merely of quantity, "only you don't seem to understand what your actions mean to James Hopkins. He's no man to be forever chasing after a woman. There are many girls in the county who'd be glad of him."

"They're welcome to him, and you may tell James Hopkins the same and give him my best good wishes," replied Sally, with all sweetness.

So the interview ended. It seemed to Ichabod useless to discuss the subject further. He had done his duty, and it was nearing supper time, so he took his leave and rode away, amused and rather sorry and wondering which of the other young men was to marry the prettiest girl in the parish.

During the Sunday nooning Hopkins came to see the parson, and when he learned the result of the interview he was much disappointed.

"Didn't she tell you why?" he asked, looking dubiously at Ichabod.

"I don't believe she has any reason," Ichabod answered. "Perhaps she needs to be coaxed. Go to see her yourself, man, and don't come bothering me about it."

So the next day Hopkins rode over to the Daves plantation and again presented himself, with some doubt, it is true, as to the wisdom of it. Sally was not to be coaxed, and the interview was short and much to the point.

"And have I a reason?" Sally asked sharply. "And haven't I told you these twenty times that I don't love you? As if that weren't reason enough!"

"You like somebody else," retorted Hopkins. "Probably you've been making promises to Ed Clark, now."

"And belike I may have, though I don't remember them," answered Sally, with no sign of resentment.

"Won't you tell me why?" again demanded Hopkins.

"No," said Sally, standing very straight and looking as severe as so fair a girl could. "No, James Hopkins; I will not tell you my reason."

Hopkins rode away in gathering wrath, and he decided once more to seek the interference of the church.

Ichabod listened patiently to his tale and then told him kindly, but firmly, that, in view of his many duties, he simply could not undertake the care of parochial lovemaking.

"But she won't tell me why," Hopkins persisted. "I'd feel better about it if I only knew her reason. I've asked her time and again, and she only makes fun of me. Won't you ask her that much? Please, now, just as a friend of us both."

Ichabod hesitated. It was such a bother. "Yes, I'll ask her," he said, at the same time feeling angry with himself for saying that he would.

The next morning found Ichabod riding slowly along the shady summer lanes toward the Daves plantation and wondering the while why a woman couldn't be frank and outspoken in such matters and save her kindly disposed friends so much needless labor.

As he came near the house he saw Sally sitting on the low piazza, her workbasket beside her, bending over some bit of sewing in her hand, a picture framed in the green vines which grew over the porch, and Ichabod could not find it in his heart to blame Hopkins.

Sally saw him and stood up, dropping her work about her in pretty confusion.

"Thank you, father's not so sick that we should be bothering you," she said, coming down the first step to greet him.

"I didn't know he was sick at all," answered Ichabod, in honest surprise.

"He's a little sick," said Sally. "He's gone over to the river meadow now, but I couldn't think what else would bring you again so soon. Not but you're always welcome," she added, seeing Ichabod's evident embarrassment.

He dismounted and sat down on the broad piazza bench. He might as well get through with his fool's errand and be done with it, so he said:

"I've come on behalf of Hopkins."

Sally smiled in enjoyment of the situation, but she kept silent.

Evidently she wouldn't help him, so Ichabod continued, "He wants me to ask you why you won't marry him."

Sally hesitated and stroked her work with her needle.

"Do you think I ought to tell him, parson?" she asked.

"Yes, I do," said Ichabod, with parochial firmness.

"Will you promise to tell him if I explain my reason to you?" Sally asked, looking squarely at Ichabod.

"Yes," he answered, feeling much relieved and smiling back encouragement at the fair girl before him.

"Well," said Sally thoughtfully, "I think I'd be willing to tell you my reason; but, you see, it's not wholly my own. Suppose we leave it this way. I will think about it, and I will send you word what I decide, and we won't talk about it any more, please," she ended, rising.

Ichabod judged that he was expected to go, and so he took his leave. His visit was most unsatisfactory, but he had done what he could, and he was glad the business was ended, so far as he was concerned. He was sorry for Hopkins, poor chap, but perhaps he would be satisfied with Sally's reason. No doubt it was a good one, for the girl seemed very sensible, and so Ichabod rode back contentedly to the parsonage.

The next morning, as Ichabod was writing at his big table, Sally's little black boy brought him this note:

Reverend Sir—I would be frank in this business. I purpose to marry somebody else. See II Samuel, twelfth chapter, verse 7. With respect I am yours obediently.

SALLY DAVES.

Ichabod opened his Bible at the second book of Samuel, the twelfth chapter, and ran his finger down to the seventh verse and read, "And Nathan said unto David, thou art the man," and then Ichabod sat vacantly looking at the table for a long time.

"Miss Sally told me to fetch an answer," said the little black boy at his elbow.

"Tell your mistress that I will bring it over myself," said Ichabod.

GRANTSVILLE

Mrs. Elizabeth Hunter, accompanied by Miss Virginia and Master Greene, Mr. and Mrs. Roberdeau Annan's children, were visitors last week in quest of some of Garrett caunty's delicious maple sugar.

Dr. I. L. Ritter. of Frostburgh, who spends a week of each month in Grantsville, will soon become as proficient in farming as in dentistry, as the farmers, whom he is proud to claim many staunch friends, are giving him lessons in plowing and raising stock, while the ladies are teaching him the science of formulating butter. The docter takes a spin into the country almost every evening while in Grantsville:

James E. Winter, cashier of the First National Bank, spent the Easter holidays in Barton and Frostburg.

Mrs. Lewis Gingerich and son Harry, were recent visitors in Frostburg to the home of Mrs. Gingerich's parents—Mr. and Mrs. Michael Harden, and participated in the enjoyment of a surprise party given in honor of Mr. Harden on his 65th birthday. Mrs. Gingerich enjoyed very much meeting so many of Frostburg's pleasant people, the number being about forty.

Miss Bessie Engle is spending a few days with friends in Frostburg. Having been invited to attend a dance given Tuesday evening.

Miss Anna Gibson, trained nurse, of Gilmore, has been attending Miss Marie Jordan, of Hotel Victoria, seriously ill of peritonitis.—Frostburgh Journel.

McHENRY.

The weather is very changeable; first it rains and then it snows; then the sun shines and then it blows.

Miss Martha Ferguson was married to Mr. Nelson Sloan Sunday at noon by Rev. Henry Friend. The bride was dressed in a gown of white embroidery while the groom wore the conventional black. They were the recipients of many useful presents. The guests present were Mr. and Mrs. Mahlon Glotfelty, Mr. and Mrs. Jonas Glotfelty, Mr. and Mrs. Brison Glotfelty and family, Mr. and Mrs. Charlie Glover, Mr. and Mrs. George Sloan and the groom's father and sister. We wish them much happiness and prosperity on their way through this vale of tears.

The Sunday School which has lately been organized at Bumble Bee was well attended on Sunday.

Messrs. Walter and Earle Alexander were calling on Misses Lucinda and Ethel Glotfelty Sunday night.

Mr. Asa Glotfelty was calling on Miss Ester Heinbaugh.

Harry McLean and Miss Mary Heinbaugh made a trip to Thayerville Sunday afternoon.

Miss Ester Heinbaugh and Mr. Murry Stark were the guests of Mr. Mahlon Glotfelty Sunday evening.

ROOSEVELT AND CLARK WIN IN THE STATE

Colonel and Speaker Make Clean Sweep of Maryland Including Baltimore.

Theodore Roosevelt carried Maryland in the Republican primaries Monday, and will control the State convention, which will meet on May 16 and which will elect 16 delegates to the national convention at Chicago.

Speaker Champ Clark has captured a large majority of the delegates to the Democratic State convention, which will meet on May 16, and which will elect 16 delegates to the national convention.

Roosevelt's popular majority over Taft is more than 3800, according to practically complete returns.

Champ Clark's victory over Wilson and Harmon was strengthened by late retusns.

It is estimated that Clark has a majority of 11,500 votes out of the 30,000 cast.

Roosevelt made a complete sweep in Baltimore, carrying every district and ward and in all 12,695 votes against Taft's 7,283.

Clark's preferential vote in Baltimore was greater than Wilson's and Harmon's combined. The Democratic machine swept him to victory in the counties.

Governor Judson Harmon, of Ohio, was third in the race. He captured only one county, Worcester, which is the home of United States Senator John Walter Smith.

According to returns from all the counties in the State, Roosevelt will have 66 and President Taft 63 votes. Sixty-five votes constitute a majority in the convention.

Colonel Roosevelt has a popular majority in the State. His success was due to the large and unexpected vote which he received in Baltimore city.

President Taft swept the Eastern Shore and Southern Maryland.

Only 50 per cent. of the Republican vote in the city was cast, the business men apparently taking less interest in the election than was expected. The entire vote cast was only 20,229.

O. H. S. Notes.

Dr. Buchner, of Baltimore, spent a part of one day in the school, and gave a very interesting talk about the proposed Technical school of John's Hopkins.

The end of our school is drawing very near. Every person is busy, or should be.

Work on the physical laboratory is being rushed.

The O. H. S. base ball team went to Terra Alta Friday morning, accompanied by Mr. Loraditch and some of the H. S. boys. The game was called at 3:30. Both teams played a nice square game. Dawson's base stealing and DeBerry's pitching featured the game. The final score: O. H. S., 32; Terra Alta, 17. Batteries: Terra Alta—Messenger, Elliott and Black. O. H. S.—White, DeBerry and Kildow. Umpires—Collins and Liston.

Harper Speicher and Frank Smouse have left school for the rest of the term and are missed by most of the scholars.

Names of pupils neither absent nor tardy during April: Ruth Arnold, Edward Chance, Harold Dawson, Preston DeBerry, Harold Harned, Rachel Johnson, Glenn Martin, Paul Musgrave, Playford Naylor, George Queer, Lena Ravenscroft, Elliott Shircliff, Leah Sincell, Robert White.

Present every day, but tardy: Rose Browning, Eleanor Hinebaugh, Proctor Kildow, Grace Laffey, Viola Lathrum, Ralph Sanders, Frank Smouse.

O. H. S. Wins from Terra Alta.

The base ball team of the Oakland High School went to Terra Alta last Friday where the local nine met and defeated the Terra Alta High School nine by a score of 17 to 32. The Oakland boys returned to Oakland highly elated over their victory. A return game will be played by the same teams on the Oakland grounds on May 20th, which mark the close of the school term.

WASHINGTON COUNTY MAN NOMINEE FOR CONGRESS

Mr. Wagaman Carried Three of the Five Counties in the Primary Election.

Full and complete returns from the five counties comprising the Sixth Congressional District of Maryland, give Mr. Charles D. Wagaman, of Washington county, a majority of 420 over his opponent, Mr. Gist Blair, of Montgomery county.

Mr. Blair carried two counties, Frederick, by 875, and Montgomery by 899. Mr. Wagaman had a majority of 1230 in his home county of Washington; 600 in Allegany, and 265 in Garrett.

THE PEOPLE'S FORUM.

Educational.

To the Editor of The Republican:

Now as we approach a new school year, and are to have a new Board of Education, a new county superintendent, a larger appropriation of money for the schools, it is but natural to expect a general uplift of our schools. More money for the coming year than the county has ever had at one time. No longer handicapped for money the people will naturally expect and demand not only better teaching but improvement along all educational lines. The out going school officials are entitled to our sympathy for they were hindered at every point for lack of funds. School cannot be successfully run without adequate funds. It is reasonable to presume that the new county superintendent will do as his predecessors, viz: Renew no certificates; requiring applicants to teach to pass a rigid examination, except those exempted by the school laws of the State. He must do this in order to acquaint himself with their scholastic attainments. Hence it might be well for the teachers to do a little brushing up. There is a demand, not only in Maryland, but throughout country for better teaching. The demand is better preparation or quit the profession. The motto "The inspiration of the school is the presence of the living teachers." The vital element in teaching is the teacher. Above all, the teacher must be a scholar, and if he is to be a teacher of real power, he must be a man of wide and accurate scholarship.

"A true teacher never thinks his education complete, but is always seeking to add to his own knowledge. The moment any one ceases to be a systematic student, he ceases to be an effective teacher." X. Y. Y.

TAFT ANSWERS COL. ROOSEVELT

President Exposes Duplicity of His Old Friend.

REPLIES TO EVERY CHARGE.

Produces Proof That Roosevelt Deliberately Misrepresented Him In This Campaign—Declares Him Menace to Republic and to Prosperity.

President Taft in three speeches in Massachusetts on April 25 personally answered the misrepresentations of Theodore Roosevelt of the position of the president with respect to the issues of this campaign, with respect to his administration and of himself personally. The president said he regretted the necessity of speaking plainly about his "old friend," to whom he frankly admitted a personal obligation. The president said, however, that the situation created by Mr. Roosevelt's personal attacks on him and his administration made further silence intolerable.

The basis of the president's reply to Mr. Roosevelt was the well known "square deal" maxim of Mr. Roosevelt. As he answered each Roosevelt charge the president inquired, "Have I had a square deal?" In order these subjects were treated by the president.

Misrepresentation of the President's Speeches.

First.—Under this heading President Taft declared that Mr. Roosevelt had deliberately misrepresented him when he said, "Mr. Taft defines the issue when he says that our government is and should be a government of all the people by a representative part of the people."

"The excerpt which Mr. Roosevelt uses is taken from my speech at Toledo," said the president. "It is garbled. I did not say this 'should be' a government of all the people by a representative part of the people. I said it 'is a government of all the people by a representative part of the people,' and it is. I pointed out that this government of ours is a government by the adult voting males in order to show the necessity for constitutional restrictions to protect the nonvoters among the people against the possible injustice and aggression of a majority of the voters. Was it honest, was it fair in Theodore Roosevelt to seize one sentence from a speech to garble it and then give it a meaning which he knew from the context it could not bear? Do the people of Massachusetts think that this is a square deal?"

Unfair Charge as to Bosses.

Second.—In reply to the charge that "bosses" were supporting his candidacy President Taft pointed out that William Flinn of Pittsburgh, "one of the worst municipal bosses that the history of that state knows;" Walter Brown of Ohio, "the only boss in full commission in the state," and William Ward of New York were supporting Mr. Roosevelt. Senator Crane of Massachusetts, whom Mr. Roosevelt has mentioned, President Taft said, had "three times been invited by Mr. Roosevelt into his cabinet" and that Mr. Roosevelt had invited him to manage his presidential campaign in 1904.

"When I consider the eagerness with which Mr. Roosevelt has accepted in his various campaigns the assistance of Mr. Aldrich, Mr. Cannon, Mr. Penrose, Mr. Quay, Mr. Platt, Mr. Forraker and many other men," said the president, "I do not hesitate to say that it involves the most audacious effrontery on his part to attack me because men he characterizes as bosses are now supporting me. This is peculiarly unfair on his part in view of his well known political history and is another instance of his departing from the rule of a square deal."

False Statements In Lorimer Case to People of Illinois.

Third.—In this connection President Taft said Mr. Roosevelt had made it appear that a vote cast for Taft in Illinois would be a vote for Lorimer. "I have not seen Mr. Lorimer for two years and have had no communication with or from him," he said. "I did not ask his support. He did not tender it to me. Any influence he may have given in my favor was not because he liked me, but because he felt more bitter toward Mr. Roosevelt." The president then quoted in full a letter he had himself written to Mr. Roosevelt on Jan. 6, 1911, in which he outlined the steps he was taking to have Lorimer unseated in the senate and stating that Senators Root, Burton, Nelson and others had become interested at his suggestion. He pointed out to Mr. Roosevelt how they could best work together on the case.

"I make this letter public only to show that of all the people in the world Theodore Roosevelt ought to have known and did know that I was not a partisan of Lorimer, did not sympathize with him and never gave Mr. Roosevelt or any one else the slightest reason to suppose I had changed my mind. I submit to the people of Massachusetts that, with his intimate knowledge of the facts, Mr. Roosevelt's linking of my name with Lorimer's for the purpose of inducing the people of Illinois to vote against me on account of their feeling against Senator Lorimer was not giving me a square deal.

Change of Front on Reciprocity.

"Fourth.—Mr. Roosevelt," said the president, "now seeks to take advantage of the supposed feeling among the farmers of the country against the reciprocity agreement with Canada which I made and induced congress to adopt, but which Canada finally rejected. I would not object to this as a legitimate argument in a political controversy against me and in his favor if the fact were not that I consulted him ten days before I made the agreement, stated the arguments pro and con, especially the effect of it on agricultural products, and asked him to confer with his colleagues on the Outlook as to its wisdom and public benefit and let me know his and their judgment. He replied approving the agreement in the most enthusiastic terms and complimenting me for having brought it forward."

The president then made public a letter of his own to Mr. Roosevelt, dated Jan. 11, 1911, and a reply from Mr. Roosevelt the following day. In his letter the president declared he signed the Payne tariff bill not only because it was a better law than the Dingley law, but because it was a concession by the Republican party that downward revision was necessary and because the old doctrine that what was needed was a Chinese wall had been departed from.

Admitting that while it might temporarily have a tendency to reduce the cost of food products, the president said he believed it would in the end tend to a stability of food prices. The president said also, "We shall get a revision, not as heavy a one as I would like, but a substantial one and equivalent certainly to the French reciprocity treaty (between Canada and France) and probably more—on manufactures." He also pointed out that Canada's entire business after the adoption of the treaty would then be conducted through the United States. To this letter Mr. Roosevelt replied:

It seems to me that what you propose to do with Canada is admirable from every standpoint. I firmly believe in free trade with Canada for both economic and political reasons. As you say, labor cost is substantially the same in the two countries, so that you are amply justified by the platform. (Republican, 1908.) Whether Canada will accept such reciprocity I do not know, but it is greatly to your credit to make the effort. It may damage the Republican party for awhile, but it will surely benefit the party in the end, especially if you tackle wool, cotton, etc., as you propose. Ever yours,

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

"I submit that Mr. Roosevelt's course on reciprocity is not in accord with the square deal," said the president.

Charges of Fraud.

Fifth.—Concerning the charge that he had "received stolen goods," the president characterized the charge of Mr. Roosevelt and Senator Dixon as "insulting" and "hysterical." He pointed out that the charge with reference to Kentucky had been shown to be untrue in the Kentucky convention itself, where the charges were withdrawn; that in New York the Roosevelt committee had a recourse to the courts, but did not take it, and that in Indianapolis the charge of fraud was made "before the polls were opened."

"The truth is," said the president, "that it has been perfectly evident from the first that the deliberate plan of Senator Dixon has been to claim everything exultingly and with the utmost confidence and to meet the reports of the election of adverse delegates by directing in advance the bringing of trumped up contests. It is hardly necessary to say that this is not in accordance with the square deal.

The Unfounded Charge as to the Use of Patronage.

"Sixth.—I do not deny," said the president, "that under the present system of appointments federal officeholders will be interested in politics and take part therein and will support those to whose appointment they attribute their preferment. Under present conditions, however, and under the policy which has been pursued in this administration there are in office today at least 70 per cent of those who were in office by appointment under Theodore Roosevelt. In view of his candidacy it is natural that a great number of these officeholders should favor him rather than me, and such is the fact, and Mr. Roosevelt cannot be ignorant of it. In spite of the very great activity of a number of such officers against me, not a man of them has been removed."

The president then cited the fact that federal referees in control of patronage in Alabama, Louisiana and Texas besides even governors of states supporting Mr. Roosevelt, all had their officeholders opposing the president. In view of his extreme fairness in the matter the president said: "The influence of federal officeholders in the Chicago convention will be less effective for any one candidate than ever before in the history of the party." The president then inquired if his treatment on this issue by Mr. Roosevelt was a sample of the square deal.

Roosevelt and Cannon.

Seventh.—President Taft said Mr. Roosevelt had charged that "I deserted the progressives and became a reactionary."

He told how, with the approval of Mr. Roosevelt, he had had a meeting with Joseph G. Cannon, the then speaker of the house, with a view to bringing about a revision of the tariff. This occurred before his own inauguration and after he had ascertained that Mr. Cannon could not be defeated for speaker in the house. At that meeting Mr. Cannon promised to help Mr. Taft "redeem the promises of the Republican platform." Subsequently Mr. Taft interviewed the Republican members of the house committee on ways and means to the same end. Mr. Roosevelt also approved of this step. Reviewing the passage of the Payne law, the president then said:

"Has Mr. Roosevelt ever condemned the Payne bill? Does he say he would not have signed it if it had been presented to him under the conditions that I had to meet? He has never said that as far as I know, and the New York platform of 1910, adopted by the convention of which he was a part, indorsed the Payne bill and approved its passage."

The president inquired if this was a square deal. He then reviewed some of the progressive achievements of his administration and went over the amendments to the interstate commerce law in detail, pointing out in each instance that practically every single objection Mr. Roosevelt now made to that law he has himself recommended, including the commerce court.

Repudiates His Own Trust Record.

Ninth.—Stating that he had taken frequent pleasure in upholding President Roosevelt's prosecution of illegal trusts, the president said: "Now I find Mr. Roosevelt coming the other way, denouncing the anti-trust law and denouncing prosecutions under it. He says that the decree in the Standard Oil case is ineffective, that the price of stock has gone up and that my administration is to be condemned because the decree was confirmed by the supreme court. The truth is that the decree as finally entered and enforced was drawn exactly as Mr. Roosevelt's attorney general in the bill, which by direction of Mr. Roosevelt he filed against the Standard Oil company, had asked that it be drawn."

The president then declared that both the decision against the Standard Oil company and the tobacco trust had been more effective than Mr. Roosevelt would admit and that competitive conditions had been restored and better prices were now being paid than ever before to the tobacco growers and the producers of crude oil.

Concerning Mr. Roosevelt's proposed plan to abolish the anti-trust law and regulate the trusts, he said he had offered no constructive plan whatever except for the president to separate the "good" from the "bad" trusts, a process which offered no stability to business and "amounted to nothing in the end but the establishment of a benevolent despotism."

Who Represents the Interests In This Contest?

Tenth.—In reply to the charge that he represents the interests in this contest, the president said the record of his administration afforded the best answer. His long record of prosecutions, without fear or favor, he said, "must show to a fair minded public that this administration has no favorites among lawbreakers or those seeking special privileges."

A Menace to the Whole Business Community.

"Eleventh.—One of the real reasons why Mr. Roosevelt ought not to be selected as a candidate of any party is the natural distrust the whole business community will have in respect to the measures which Mr. Roosevelt will propose in order to effect a revolution in the interest of social justice which he advocates so strongly and defines so vaguely," declared the president. Stating that Mr. Roosevelt's pronouncement with respect to the control of business at first met with favor among certain business interests, the president said the program outlined by his Columbus speech had so greatly alarmed business that it could only contemplate the danger to the security of all business by his threatened undermining of our constitutional government and his attack upon the independence of the judiciary.

"I affirm that the nomination of Mr. Roosevelt would extend through the business community a feeling of such distrust as to the future as to interfere with the good times which, if business is let alone and present conditions continue, will expand into the most encouraging prosperity, and this will bring happiness to wage earners who are more injuriously affected by disturbance of business than any other members of the community."

President on Third Term.

In conclusion the president took up the "third term" issue. Quoting Mr. Roosevelt's announcement that he would "under no circumstances" be a candidate again, the president said:

"If he had frankly announced that he had changed his mind no one would be disposed to hold him to a promise of that sort merely because he had made it. The promise and his treatment of it only throw an informing light on the value that ought now to be attached to any promise of this kind he may make for the future. The important fact is that his declaration was the statement of a principle essential to the welfare of the republic."

The president then reviewed Mr. Roosevelt's various claims for support on the ground of merit and concluded that he had offered no substantial, constructive remedy for any evil of which he complained. "We are left to infer, therefore, that 'the job' which Mr. Roosevelt is to perform is one that may take a long time," said the president, "perhaps the rest of his natural life. There is not the slightest reason why, if he secures a third term and the limitation of the Washington, Jefferson and Jackson tradition is broken down, he should not have as many more terms as his natural life will permit. If he is necessary now to the government, why not later?"

Then the president concluded by saying: "One who, so lightly regards the constitutional principles and especially the independence of the judiciary, one who is so naturally impatient of legal restraints and of due legal procedure and who has so misunderstood what liberty regulated by law is could not safely be intrusted with successive presidential terms. I say this sorrowfully, but I say it with the full conviction of its truth."

KEY OF KNOWLEDGE LOST BY PHARISEES

Modern Application of Jesus' Words by Pastor Russell.

"Woe Unto You, Doctors of Divinity; Ye Have Taken Away the Key of Knowledge; Ye Entered Not in Yourselves, and Them That Were Entering Ye Hindered."

PASTOR RUSSELL

Brooklyn, N. Y., May 5.—The Academy of Music was crowded today to hear Pastor Russell's discourse on "The Lost Key of Knowledge." Taking his text from Luke xi, 52, he said:—

In the New Testament the word lawyer has a very different meaning from our general usage. It applied to those religious teachers of the Jews who made special professions of sanctity of heart and earnest desire to know God's will, as expressed in the Mosaic Law, and to teach the same to the people. The corresponding class of today are designated Doctors of Divinity. Our text, therefore, with this correction, reads, "Woe unto you, Doctors of Divinity, for ye have taken away the Key of Knowledge; ye entered not in yourselves, and them that were entering ye hindered." When the common people heard Jesus gladly they inquired, "Have any of the Scribes and Pharisees believed on Him? Have the Doctors of the Law endorsed Him?"

The Key of Knowledge Buried.

In our text Jesus charged the Jewish Doctors of Divinity with the responsibility of having taken away the Key of Knowledge, refusing to use it themselves to enter into the great appreciation of the blessings then due, and hiding it from the common people, who trusted them so implicitly. We charge that the same thing is true today. Not only were the Jewish people typical of spiritual Israel, and their Age typical of this Age, and their Harvest typical of the Harvest or closing time of this Age, but additionally, now as then, "God's people perish for lack of knowledge."—Hosea iv, 6.

It is this matter of misleading the people, deceiving them, that constituted the basis of Jesus' charge against the Doctors of Divinity of old, and we believe that His judgment is very similar today respecting the Doctors of Divinity of Christendom—"Ye have taken away (ye have hidden) the Key of Knowledge; ye have not entered in yourselves, and them that were entering ye hindered."

Necessity For Knowledge.

Knowledge of God, the Bible declares, is indispensable for the attainment of the great prize of the High Calling. Thus Jesus said, "This is life eternal, that they may know Thee, the only True God, and Jesus Christ, whom Thou hast sent." (John xvii, 3.) We are not to understand this to signify that anyone who has merely been made acquainted with the fact that there is one Creator, and that Jesus is His Son, is on account of this knowledge to be granted everlasting life.

Our Lord's words do not refer to a knowledge about God, but to a knowledge or personal acquaintance with God and His Son. And such an intimate acquaintance is not obtained merely by an introduction, but by companionship; it signifies an intimacy of acquaintanceship, a familiarity.

Thus Jesus prayed for us, His followers, "Sanctify them through Thy Truth, Thy Word is Truth." Any who neglect the Divine Word will fail of the sanctifying power and thus fail of the acquaintanceship with God which alone guarantees everlasting life.

To those who have come under the sanctifying influence of His Word our Lord says today, as He said to His Jewish followers eighteen centuries ago, "To you it is given to know the Mystery of the Kingdom of God, but to all outside these things are spoken in parables and dark sayings, that hearing they might not understand, and seeing they might not perceive." The outsiders—the Doctors of Divinity—are not permitted the Key of Knowledge. "Even so, Father, for so it seemeth good in Thy sight."—Matthew xi, 25, 26.

What Constitutes the Key?

The Key of Knowledge consists of the faithful study of God's Word, with an honest purpose to know the things that are freely given unto us of God. This implies a consecration of heart, for none others would really desire that they might do the Divine will. And this implies also a faith in our Lord's promise that "he that doeth the will of My Father shall know of the doctrine." (John vii, 17.) It is this consecrated, conscientious Bible study that is lacking today—that is being discouraged today by the great teachers and Doctors of Divinity.

Everything calculated to help Bible study, to get rid of the darkness of the creeds and superstitions of the past, is opposed—but not openly. But, oh, what weeping of disappointment, and what a chagrin and gnashing of teeth will come shortly to the "false shepherds," to the Key-hiding Doctors of Divinity, when they find that with all their endeavors to bolster up shams and superstitions in which they themselves do not believe, the entire fabric of Churchianity will collapse, as the Scriptures predict!

The Second Count in The Republican's Piano Contest will be Held Wednesday, May 15th, at 7.30 O'clock. Special Prizes have no Bearing on Who Will be the Winner at the Final Count.

Interest in the Oakland Republican's popular voting contest is now at fever heat, and the contestants and their friends are hustling for new subscribers and renewals in a manner that is very interesting. They realize that the one who wins the beautiful piano will get a prize worthy of their efforts and they are doing all they can to see that their favorite candidate comes home ahead.

That capital prize is certainly worth a lot of hustling goes without saying.

You will have to hurry to get your votes in as the second count in this great contest comes off May 15th, the bonus votes hold good only until then.

Don't wait. Keep right on hustling because, while you are laying off, some one else may be working, and getting the new subscribers that you might have had if you had kept going. Fifteen dollars in gold to the contestant making the greatest gain since the first count. The ballot box closes at 6:00 o'clock and the count will take place at 7:30.

At the same time don't forget the merchants' coupons. Every time you get forty of them you can get an extra bonus of 500. It does not make any difference whether the coupons all come from one merchant or not as long as you bring them in, in bunches of forty.

If never pays to stop even to your get breath.

Just keep on going. Your friends will see that you are doing your best to win and will all turn in and help you.

Nothing comes to him who waits and they who do the hustling are reward in the end.

The second count will be made on Wednesday evening, May 15, by the judges.

Do not forget the prizes the merchants are giving. If not fortunate enough to secure the piano you may receive one of the merchants' prizes and they are well worth working for.

Bear in mind that the ballot box is closed for the second count at 6:00 p. m. on Wednesday, May 15. Be sure and have your votes all in by that time so that you will have a fair chance to show what your standing is.

Here are the bonuses:

For every seven new subscribers we will give 10,000 extra votes, making a total of 14,200.

For every seven renewal subscriptions we will give 8,000 extra votes, making a total of 11,500.

For every seven back subscriptions we will give 6,000 extra votes, making a total of 8,800.

Subscriptions turned in for the first count will not count for these bonuses. They will count just the same for the piano at the final count, but these bonuses are good only on subscriptions brought in from now until the offer is withdrawn.

For every 40 merchants' coupons brought to this office and counted by the publisher or his assistant, a bonus of 500 extra votes will be given, a total of 1,500 in all.

These coupons may be collected from any and all merchants who are in the contest.

Remember and have your friends trade with the merchants who are giving the coupons. They are reliable tradespeople.

THE REPUBLICAN,

THURSDAY, MAY 9, 1912.

TAFT AND ROOSEVELT.

The Republican primaries held so for show that the rank and file of the party is alive. Never in the history of the party has such a large vote been polled and in many instances the organization has gone down with a mighty crash. Many persons have voted for Mr. Roosevelt, because they were against the organization of Federal office holders that was supporting the President.

An organization is absolutely necessary to a well regulated party, but when it assumes, through hope of personal gain, to the rank and file of a party it becomes an evil and is sooner or later put out of business.

In the case of the organization support of Mr. Taft, many of the members of the party are apparently convinced that selfishness is at the bottom of it, and that if allowed to continue would work an injury to the Republican party. This is unfortunate for Mr. Taft because we are thoroughly convinced that he has made an excellent president and has been misunderstood by the people generally and deceived by those from whom he had a right to expect support.

The advent of Mr. Roosevelt has precipitated a lively discussion of questions of goverment and party policies to which many of the rank and file are glad to turn, and which gives them an excuse for supporting Mr. Roosevelt in order to administer a rebuke to the organizations in the several states. That Col. Roosevelt is a fighter and a politican of the first class, even his bitterest enemies admit. It is this characteristic which draws many of the rank and file to him, because the world loves a fighter who fights for something worth while.

Many members of the Republican party view with alarm any disturbance of the political waters but we have never felt that any harm will come to the party by a lively discussion of the issue or the candidates, because it is a very good way to arouse the voters and thereby check the plans of a selfish and greedy organization. Discussion always sheds light and enriches the store of knowledge. In the present primary many questions are being discussed in the press, in the centers of business, on the streets and beside the family fireside. Never in the history of the country has a party occupied so much of the stage of public discussion as the Republican party is at present. Great good to the party will follow and when the National Convention has named the candidates, be he Taft, Roosevelt, LaFollete, or some one yet unheard of, the rank and file will close up and be ready to march on to victory.

Auto Upset.

While returning home from Oakland last Saturday the automobile driven by Mr. Louis Deifenbach containing Mayor Henry Boning, of Grantsville, and Messrs. Gideon Gnagey and Jacob J. Bender, of the same place, who had spent the day here on business, was upset in the road at a point a mile or two out of Grantsville. The accident occurred at a point on the road where there is a very sharp turn and in rounding it Mr. Deifenbach came upon a carrage in which was Mr. and Mrs. Ch. Bender and several children. The driver gave his machine a sudden turn to avoid a collision and it turned turtle, throwing the occupants out as it was going over, all of whom escaped uninjured.

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

One of the most charming club meetings of the year took place yesterday afternoon, when Miss Elsie Rand was hostess for the Tuesday card club. The lovely Rand home on Quintard avenue was thrown open to the guests, and each apartment was most artistically decorated in gorgeous Richmond roses and bridesmaid roses. The score cards were dainty hand painted hearts, with Miss Rand's engagement to Mr. Wesley H. Rudisill announced. This was quite a surprise to her friends and immediately congratulations were showered on the popular bride-to-be. After the game a most delicious menu was served, consisting of a salad course and a rainbow ice, the tall glasses being tied with the rainbow tulle with a lovely little favor of candy in paper boxes, some with glass slippers, others with wishbones placed on top. Miss Rand received her guests in a becoming gown of white lace, trimmed lingerie over blue.—Anniston, Ala., Daily Hot Blast, May 2.

Mr. Rudisill is a son of Rev. and Mrs. L. A. Rudisill, of the Park, and the wedding will take place at the home of the bride June 5th. Wesley's many friends in this county send congratulations.

Friend; 4th, Miss Abbie Chance; secretary, Miss Stella Hamill; treasurer, Mrs. Belle Nine; organist, Miss Beatrice Heyward. At the same time delegates were elected to attend the Oakland District Epworth League convention to be held at Terra Alta, W. Elopement Stirs Fairmont Society.

A romantic elopement occured in Fairmont yesterday a Mr. Oris succeeding in inducing Miss Maria Hood, to go to Oakland, Maryland, with him and there become his wife. Miss Hood is only sixteen years old and her husband is but a few years older. Mrs. Emma Hood, the mother of the girl, is a widow, and is much wrought up over her daughter's marriage. She had no suspicion of the marriage. Miss Hood, now Mrs. Oris, is very well know in Fairmont and moves in a good circle of society.—Morgantown New Dominion.

ATTENTION, MR. FARMER!

In your efforts to improve your soil, to grow better crops, and make farming "worth while," have you been getting the worth of your money spent for fertilizer? Do you realize that when you buy a ton of our NATURAL FINE GROUND PHOSPHATE that you are getting more than four times as much Phosphoric acid for your money as when buying the expensive acid phosphate? Do you realize that

When buying one ton of our NATURAL FINE GROUND PHOSPHATE you get fully as much Phosphoric Acid, for one-half the money, as when buying one ton of Ground Bone, which repeated tests show produces no better results than the Ground Phosphate? Do you know that we guarantee that

One ton of our NATURAL FINE GROUND PHOSPHATE of a 28 per cent grade cantains 1,223 pounds of B. P. L. (Bone Phosphate of Lime)? That

One ton of our NATURAL FINE GROUND PHOPHATE of a 28 per cent grade contains 560 pounds of Phosphoric Acid? That

One ton of our NATURAL FINE GROUND PHOSPHATE of a 28 per cent grade contains 750 Pounds of Lime? That

One ton of our NATURAL FINE GROUND PHOSPHATE of a 28 per cent grade contains 244.6 pounds of Phosphoric? That

One ton of our NATURAL FINE GROUND PHOSPHATE of a 28 per cent grade contains [according to a recent test made by the Massachusetts Agricultural Experiment Station] 5.37 per cent available [2 per cent citric acid test] when applied to the soil direct? That

One ton of our NATURAL FINE GROUND PHOSPHATE of a 28 per cent grade contains, according to the analysis, 107.4 lbs. of available phosphoric acid for the first crop's use, if applied under proper conditions, and leaves 452 pounds of phosphoric acid to become available for the use of future crops? That

One ton of our NATURAL FINE GROUND PHOSPHATE of a 28 per cent grade contains sufficient Phosphoric Acid supply the needs of one acre of land for from five to six years after it is applied, and will become available as it is needed from year to year by the growing plant? That

One ton af our NATURAL FINE GROUND PHOSPHATE of a 28 per cent grade will cost, delivered at most any point in the Southern, Central, Northern or New England States, from $8.00 to $10.00 per ton of 2,000 pounds, if bought in carloads in bulk.

Are you aware that one ton of acid phosphate of a 14 per cent grade, which is being sold and used so extensively throughout the country, contains only one-half as much Phosphoric Acid, only half as much Phosphorus, and less than one-half as much lime, as one ton of our NATURAL FINE GROUND PHOSPHATE?

Are you aware that nearly one-half of this acid phosphate consists of sulphuric acid, a product which is not only valueless as a fertilizer, but which is actually harmful to the soils, as it renders them more acid?

Are you aware that one ton of acid phosphate of a 14 per cent grade containing only 280 pounds of Phosphoric Acid, will cost you just about twice as much as a ton of our NATURAL FINE GROUND PHOSPHATE containing 560 pounds of Phosphoric acid?

We vouch for the truth of these statements, and if you have not figured these things out for yourself it is high time you were beginning to "sit up and take notice." We will be pleased to give you any further information you may desire if you will address

TAFT'S RECORD ON RECALL OF COURT DECISIONS

Favored the Principle to Oblige "Poison Makers."

NOTORIOUS WHISKY RULING.

Reconciled His Conscience to the Promulgation of a Presidential Order Legalizing Every Demand of the Makers of Imitation Whisky—He "Recalled" Seven Federal Court Decisions to Accommodate the Opponents of Roosevelt and Dr. Wiley.

Now that Mr. Taft is so violent in his opposition to any proposal to permit the people of a state to assert their understanding of the meaning of the constitution made by them when that meaning has been perverted by a judicial ruling, it is well to examine his past record in this particular. Recorded facts prove that President Taft is not opposed to the "recall of decisions" of the federal courts when the recall is made by "a representative part of the people," even though that part consists of one of 100,000,000 Americans.

Here is an "expose" especially interesting at this time. It appears in the editorial columns of the Philadelphia North American:

"Long before Theodore Roosevelt upheld the hands of Harvey Wiley and forced the passage of the pure food law there had been notorious frauds in the making, marking and branding of distilled liquors. But the question seemed pretty well settled by the upholding of the explicit provisions of the national pure food law in the rulings of Dr. Wiley, sustained by repeated messages of President Roosevelt, opinions of Attorney General Bonaparte and decisions of different federal courts.

Merely Common Sense.

"The question was simply one of common sense. There was to be no prevention of or penalty for the sale of any sort of liquor. The rulings meant only that the purchaser was entitled to the privilege of learning from the label whether he was buying what he was paying for.

"Undoctored whisky was to be labeled 'whisky.' A mixture of two real whiskies was to be labeled 'blend.' A mixture of a whisky with something that is not whisky was to be labeled 'compound.' A concoction that smelled and tasted like whisky, but contained no whisky, was to be labeled 'imitation.'

"That was all there was to the provisions of the pure food law governing interstate commerce in whisky. It was such a simple, incontrovertible regulation for square dealing that every American who thought he knew along what lines the administration of William H. Taft would be conducted scoffed at the idea that the question was not a closed chapter.

"When the rectifiers of Cincinnati and Peoria hinted at the influence they could bring to bear upon a Cincinnati newspaper and Speaker Cannon and prophesied the discrediting and the downfall of Wiley we thought them overconfident in proclaiming that they could reopen a contest which had been won and won over and over by the people, by the state food commissioners and friends of pure food before President Roosevelt and the federal courts.

"So there was wonder when there followed President Taft's executive order reopening the whisky branding question settled by Attorney General Bonaparte's successive opinions and President Roosevelt's orders giving executive effect thereto.

Taft's Conscience Reconciled.

"At the time of the ruling in favor of the swindlers by Solicitor General Bowers, in June, 1909, the North American said:

> "The real meaning of this reopened controversy, of course, is that the conspiracy to weaken, break down and nullify the pure food laws is widespread, powerful and persistent. * * * With President Taft rests the responsibility of spreading credence or giving the lie to the general boasting of the druggers of food and drink that the entire toil of Roosevelt and Wiley to safeguard the health of the people is to be obliterated before 1912 for the benefit of certain strong but not altruistic interests.

"Six months' consideration resulted in President Taft's reconciling his conscience to the promulgation of a presidential decision legalizing every demand of the cheating poison makers of the Taft-Cox and Joe Cannon bailiwicks. But this notorious annulment of a portion of the work of Wiley and Roosevelt is not the point of present comment. The focus of present interest is President Taft's aversion toward any questioning of the sanctity of judicial decisions.

"But when the food committee of the National Consumers' league addressed to President Taft an appeal for the 'recall' of Dr. Wiley's resignation and cited certain facts decidedly pertinent to President Taft's horrified denunciations of 'nostrum makers' and 'subverters of the constitution,' who 'lay the ax to the root of the tree of liberty,' who dare question the infallibility of any judicial construction of any law?

"For the Consumers' league makes clear in taking up the Taft decision in favor of the makers of imitation whisky that in this ruling the president recalled the decisions of President Roosevelt, Attorney General Bonaparte, Solicitor General Bowers and seven federal courts.

Seven Times Sustained.

"Finding themselves unable to sway the Roosevelt administration in spite of the efforts in their behalf of Secretary Wilson, the whisky poisoners went into the courts. Seven times the Roosevelt ruling was sustained, as follows:

"Aug. 24, 1908, in federal court at Cincinnati.

"Aug. 27, 1908, in same court, strong supplemental opinion refusing a rehearing.

"United States circuit court for southern Illinois, later in the same year, completely sustained the Roosevelt ruling.

"Feb. 4, 1909, United States Circuit Judge Cochran, at Richmond, specifically ruled that the stuff which Roosevelt had ordered to be labeled as imitation whisky was exactly that.

"Aug. 11, 1908, the court of appeals for the District of Columbia broadly sustained the Roosevelt ruling.

"July 7, 1908, the United States district court for western New York completely sustained the Roosevelt rulings.

"The supreme court of the District of Columbia, by decree in a case, 'United States versus four barrels of liquid purporting to be whisky,' held that the contents was an imitation of whisky.

"Oct. 28, 1908, federal court at Baltimore broadly sustained the Roosevelt ruling that imitation whisky was imitation whisky, and must be so labeled.

Alphonso Taft's Opinion.

"What the Consumers' league failed to cite, however, was that President Taft in that one ruling not only recalled seven federal court decisions, but also another which, while it did not emanate from a court, was certainly judicial. For it was handed down by a great and honored jurist who sat in the cabinet of President Grant. This was the eighth decision recalled:

> "Alcohol and whisky are, unquestionably, different articles in contemplation of law, as they are in fact, having different qualities and different values. (Opinion of Alphonso Taft, attorney general, construing section 3449 of internal revenue laws, see Internal Revenue Record, Aug. 21, 1875, volume 22.)

"Just what process of reasoning the president employs to determine positively that he has the right to recall seven court decisions with a single signature, while the recall of one by the sober judgment of millions of citizens in a state would destroy our fundamental national liberties, we are unable to understand, except by remembering that striking portrait drawn by the lamented Dolliver of the amiable person in the White House 'entirely surrounded by men who know exactly what they want.'"

"GRATITUDE" MEANS MALIGNANT ATTACK UPON ROOSEVELT

Taft's Tirade Not New to Men Who Know Him.

When Seeking the Presidency In 1908 He Strove to Appear as a Stanch Progressive—Wore a Mask For Two Years—Has Now Openly Stamped Himself as a Reactionary.

Washington, April.—Stung to the quick by his belated recognition of the long patent fact that the voters of the Republican party had repudiated his candidacy for renomination and are overwhelmingly in favor of the nomination of Colonel Roosevelt as their candidate for the presidency this year, Mr. Taft has at last thrown aside all restraint and carried out the threat which he has been muttering to his intimates for some weeks to speak out in public his real thoughts about the man who made him president.

In Mr. Taft's tirade against Mr. Roosevelt at Springfield, Mass., there is nothing essentially new to those who have been on anything more than relations of casual intimacy with the president for some time. It is a fact known to not a few of those closely connected with the campaign of 1908 that even at that time the Taft family was displaying that peculiarly malignant temper toward Mr. Roosevelt which so often takes the place of gratitude in the hearts of those who have benefited by a great service rendered by a friend. It is a fact known to not a few persons that at times during the campaign of 1908 the talk about Mr. Roosevelt among members of the Taft family was such as to cause the greatest uneasiness to the managers of Mr. Taft's campaign for the presidency, lest it should become public and work serious damage to the campaign. Those familiar with the true feeling toward Mr. Roosevelt in the Taft family have been surprised that Mr. Taft has concealed for so long his real attitude toward his benefactor.

From the time last fall when the strong sentiment of the country in favor of Colonel Roosevelt began to manifest itself unmistakably, there has been much talk from Taft sources about Colonel Roosevelt's ingratitude to Mr. Taft. It has been assumed by Mr. Taft's partisans that, because Colonel Roosevelt was instrumental in bringing about Mr. Taft's nomination and election to the presidency, he was therefore bound at all times, under all circumstances and at all costs, to support Mr. Taft's administration and Mr. Taft's renomination and election. That assumption is entirely unwarranted and has no logical justification. The fact is that Taft, the president, is not and never for one moment has been the Taft Mr. Roosevelt and his intimate associates knew as secretary of war and whom they supported as a candidate for the presidency.

While Mr. Taft was seeking the presidency he constantly sought to appear as a stanch and true progressive. But on that November night in 1908 when the count of the votes showed that he had been elected to the presidency, he ceased to make any effort actually to be a progressive. For some time he continued to wear a mask as a progressive, but in the last two years of his presidency he has not kept up even that feeble effort to deceive the people of the country. By his constant association with the Aldriches, the Cannons and the Lorimers, by his ready submission to their influence and advice, by his active support of the measures they devised and favored; by his co-operation with them in matters of patronage, and by his unblushing attempt to coerce the real progressives through the brazen use of federal patronage, he has stamped himself openly as the reactionary which he has always been at heart.

A single illustration will suffice for the demonstration of this proposition. In his speech at Cincinnati, in July, 1908, accepting the nomination for the presidency, Mr. Taft took occasion to reiterate his indorsement of Mr. Roosevelt and to enumerate some of the acts which he regarded as the distinctly beneficial achievements of his predecessor. In that speech he said:

"He (Mr. Roosevelt) recommended the passage of a law, which the Republican convention has since specifically approved, restricting the future issue of stocks and bonds by interstate railways to such as may be authorized by feredal authority. He demonstrated to the people by what he said, by what he recommended to congress, and by what he did, the sincerity of his efforts to command respect for the law, and to save the country from the dangers of a plutocratic government, toward which we were fast tending."

In numerous speeches during the campaign of 1908 Mr. Taft declared his cordial support of Mr. Roosevelt's proposition to secure the enactment of a law controlling the issue of securities by interstate carriers. When he became president, he pretended to make such a law one of the paramount measures of his legislative program. He caused to be prepared, with much advertisement and publicity, a bill purporting to contain provisions aimed at such control of the issue of securities. This bill was drafted by the eminently successful corporation lawyer whom Mr. Taft had placed at the head of the department of justice. The moment that bill was read by the genuine progressives of the senate and house, they denounced its provisions to control the issue of securities as intended really to further the designs of the railroad reactionaries and the special interests whom Mr. Taft has steadily sought to please from the day he was inaugurated.

After a hard fight in the house, the Taft-Wickersham provisions were stricken from the bill and a substitute provision was adopted which at least embodied a recognition of the principle of federal control over the issue of such securties, and was, therefore, a distinct step in advance. When that measure reached the senate, Mr. Taft's allies and cronies there were vastly distributed by this provision. Aldrich, Crane, Penrose, Gallinger and all the other representatives of the special interests in the senate at once protested against it. These were the men with whom Mr. Taft was associating intimately, with whom he was working constantly, and upon whom he was relying for support in the senate.

They were the same men who had most vigorously opposed his nomination when they, like Mr. Roosevelt, believed him to be a real progressive, but already they had learn that his progressiveness was merely a mask worn for the purpose of securing the presidency. They knew now that he was as good a reactionary as any of them and they counted upon his support in defeating this provision for the control of the issue of securities by interstate carriers. They did not count in vain.

With Mr. Taft's knowledge and connivance, they arranged a deal with the Democratic opposition in the senate whereby they not only struck from the bill this provision which was in accordance with the Republican platform and the many speeches of Mr. Taft's campaign, but they stopped the further efforts of the real progressives in the senate to make the railroad bill, of which this provision was a part, a genuinely effective and valuable measure. Then they inserted in the bill as a sop to the public clamor for real legislation a provision for the appointment of a commission which was to determine not the method by which the government was to exerise its right to control the issue of securities by interstate carriers, but whether or not the government had such power. The appointment of this commission was a stultification of the Republican platform and of every speech Mr. Taft had made in support of that platform. It was fair notice to the whole country that from that day forward no faith or credence could be given by the country to any declaration of any Republican platform upon which Mr. Taft might be running for office.

But now, in the face of this incontrovertible fact, and of scores more of exactly similar purport and effect, Mr. Taft has the effrontery to stand before a public audience and denounce Theodore Roosevelt and present himself in the attitude of the one who has the right to feel aggrieved. It is an astounding exhibiton of willingness to deceive the people of the country in the effort to secure office.

THE END OF A PERILOUS RIDE.

Courtship In the Saddle to the Music of Flying Bullets.

By MARTHA M'C. WILLIAMS.

(Copyright, 1912, by Martha McCulloch-Williams.)

If only Esther had not sung "My Maryland, My Maryland," which she loved best of all the war songs. Her untrained voice was so rich and true it carried half across the bush pasture. She had stolen there with salt for the young horses grazing for safety amid the intricate thickets. They had had none for a month. In the third year of the civil war, to man and beast alike, salt was almost a luxury throughout middle Tennessee. The whole region was debatable land. The bluecoats held the railway towns and turned them into fortresses more or less secure. Over the wide green country road about gray horsemen rode and raided almost at pleasure. Thus salt was among the things reckoned "contraband of war" and to be bought only in such niggard quantities as were marked upon the permits from headquarters.

Between bluecoats and gray, horses had come to be the most uncertain of all possessions. Esther sang because she dared not whistle the regular horse call. She knew Princess, her own mare, would come at sound of her voice and most likely bring the herd pellmell at her heels, since she was easily its queen. She was also thoroughbred, jet black, the last foal of a dam never beaten at four miles. Princess was five years old, Esther seventeen. They had grown up playmates and comrades, each full of tricks and delight in the other.

Esther need not have sung. Her foot was scarcely off the rail fence when Princess came charging, mouth slightly open, ears batted. Five yards off her mistress she stopped short, drooped her head, half wheeled and sidled gently until her withers lay under Esther's hand.

Incautiously she thrust her hand within her huddled apron and brought up some salt grains upon her open palm. Princess licked them savagely, thrust her head fiercely against Esther's breast and made as if to paw her with an angry hoof.

Princess truly loved her mistress, but she was mad with salt hunger, almost the strongest known to the beasts of the field. She caught the apron folds and Esther's left hand between her teeth and backed, rearing slightly and pawing, not viciously, but with light flicking hoofs. To save herself Esther flung her free arm about the mare's neck and swung clear of the ground, saying sternly: "Ho, Princess! Stand! Let go!"

Princess kept backing and pawing. The herd caught the sound and came rushing. She wheeled to meet the rush, with Esther still swinging, and let fly at her mates with both heels. In the shock of impact her teeth shut cruelly upon Esther's hand, but still the girl did not cry out.

She hung facing the mare, so saw nothing else until muscular fingers locked themselves in Princess' foretop and gripped her nostrils hard. Instantly her mouth flew open. Esther snatched away her hand and dropped to earth. For a breath she stood silent, then said, with a stamp of her foot, "Princess, I never thought you could be so mean!"

"Aren't you yourself to blame?" Princess' captor said. He was a tall, well made fellow, with a soldierly air for all his citizen's coat, a pair of keen gray eyes set in a brown face and the dust of hard riding all over him. "Give the salt—at once." Esther obeyed in silence. Neither spoke again until the last grain had been licked up and the beasts were biting the earth where it had lain. Then it was Esther who asked a question. "How does it happen you are here?"

"I came for a horse and crept out of hiding to listen to a song," the man said, smiling. "The song assures me I may tell you I am John Sandford, a scout for Forrest—in plain words, a spy. At daylight this morning I found out something my general ought to know at once. Since then I have ridden my horse down. The poor beast is lying by the thicket yonder. I must have something in his stead—something that can go like the wind."

"You shall not have Princess, though she was so bad," Esther said quickly, locking her arms around the black mare's neck. "Marquise, the brown over there, is almost as fast. Father would give her to you gladly, only he has taken the oath, so you must not ask him. He will not mind you taking her."

"I see. I will come and thank him after the war," Sandford said, laughing. "Now tell me the nearest ford and how I can get to it quickest."

"The bend is nearest—only ten miles off—but you cannot cross there. The Yankees keep pickets in a stockade just by the ford. You will have to strike for the Riffle. That is five miles lower down."

"The Riffle! How shall I get there?"

"Go out that way," Esther said, sweeping her arms southerly. "Strike through the woods to the big road. It is only a mile. Follow it to the crossroads, and there take the left"—

She stopped short. Straight from the south came the grumble of drums, undervoiced by the blurred beat of hoofs.

Sandford's head went up. "Mounted infantry," he said.

"If they know would they be after you?" Esther asked. Sandford nodded.

For a minute he stood silent, then cautiously approached the brown mare, sprang lightly upon her back and said: "Those drums sound my boots and saddle, but it is clear I cannot go down the big road. Is there no other way? Think hard! I must be across the river before tomorrow morning."

"Will they hang you if they catch you?" Esther asked.

Sandford laughed. "That does not so much matter," he said, "though I would rather keep on living. What does matter is telling Mr. Forrest the news. If that can be done"—

He stopped, looking down. Esther shivered slightly. "You mean it will help—help us to fight and win?" she asked. She was a vivid patriot, tensely loyal to her south. If she had been a man she would long ago have been away at the fighting. Something of all this shone in her eyes. Sandford looked straight into them as he answered: "It will help us to win a battle. As to the end, God knows. Now tell me the way."

"There is none I can tell you, but I can show you one—a blind trail, woods, roads and cattle tracks," Esther said, scrambling upon her mare's back and wheeling her half about. "Meet me outside the back bars. I shall be there in a little while."

"No, no! You must not think of it. I cannot allow you"— Sandford began. The strengthening drums silenced him. Esther smiled and dashed away.

Twenty minutes after she was at the bars to meet him, sitting straight and light in saddle, as he had known she would ride. Without a word she gave him a parcel. Then he knew she had read the hunger in his face.

"We must follow the old trace. Father showed it to me last year," Esther explained after another mile. The woods were thinning. The trace had led to a ridge top, whence they could see in places the big road running white and straight through the country lowland. Presently they came into a cattle track. Esther frowned to see that it was not freshly trodden, but followed it, unquestioning, until it ran square into a wide new clearing.

"Oh, I forgot! How could I let myself forget?" Esther said, wheeling her

"WILL THEY HANG YOU?" ESTHER ASKED.

horses and motioning Sandford back. "Bill Risley has settled here. He's the only Lincolnite in our end of the county. He and his boys are forever spying. If they saw us they would run right straight to the soldiers"—

"They would not have far to go. Look!" Sandford said, waving his hand downward. Through the low road a winding column swept, a column brave in blue and brass, with drums still beating, colors flying. It was the advance guard—only two platoons.

As Sandford and Esther watched them the same thought shaped itself in both minds. They faced each other smiling. Sandford spoke first, with somehow a curious tightness in his throat. "They can never catch us, and the chances are they cannot shoot to hit us."

"No, they cannot catch us—not under five miles. They could not do it at all, only our horses are full of grass," Esther said, smiling in turn, though her face was white. "You can swim?" she said interrogatively. Sandford nodded. Then suddenly he caught himself sharply, lifted his hat and said: "Young lady, you must go home. Only a madman would let you stay longer. Never mind about me. It's only life or death."

"And maybe a battle lost," Esther said, her color coming in a rush. "I will not go back. Follow me! We must beat them to the crossroads."

Wheeling, she went arrow-wise through the clearing. Down, down they swept into the big road a hundred yards in front of the blue column. Sandford flung his weight forward, shouting to Esther, "Low—stoop low!" at the same time trailing in behind her so as to shield her as much as he might.

Trot! Gallop! Charge! he heard the bugle blow behind. He heard, too, the thunder of quickening hoofs. But the beat was not in rhythm with their own horses—it was slower, more ponderous. If only their beasts held speed in five minutes they would be safe from bullets. Overhead bullets whined fretfully, then struck, cutting roadside bows or kicking up spurts of dry, white dust.

"We are leaving them! Keep straight on!" Sandford panted as they came to the second milepost. Esther answered only by a little shake of the head. "We must turn!" she said as Sandford made to touch her hand. "The road goes uphill beyond the crossroads. We could not keep ahead. We have come too fast."

"Tell me the way and let me go alone," Sandford entreated. Again Esther shook her head.

"I cannot tell you," she said. "No; we must not follow the crossroads—the woods again. Two miles through them we shall strike the river."

The road began to rise. Esther leaned forward half the length of Princess' neck. The horses were dripping sweat, their pace slackening sensibly. She knew that even without the mounting roar of pursuit. Dropping shots still punctuated the roar. Sandford turned to look. The foremost file was just half a mile from them.

"This way!" Esther cried, urging Princess into tangled growth. The mare balked the least bit and even made to rear. A touch of the whip sent her forward, but fifty yards in Esther drew her to a walk, saying to Sandford very low: "Ride slow. If they cannot see or hear us they will not know which road to take."

One horse trod in the other's tracks, quite as though they felt the need of caution. It was slow work, but in an hour they stood still, breathing heavily, in the river bottom meadows that stretched quite to the waterside. The river itself showed shrunken and fitful between high banks. Another big road ran along the margin of it. Over the stream there were frowning bluffs, sheerly precipitous. The roadway was worn down yards below the meadow level. Thus the two who rode across the grass were unaware of what passed along it.

They came swiftly, yet soberly. Sandford raised Esther's hand to his lips.

"You have saved my life—and more," he said slowly, then burst out impetuously: "But please, please, never do it again! No man's life is worth it. All along I have been asking myself, 'What if she were your sister?' You are a heroine, but please go straight home. If I was risking only life I would take you there at all hazards. Even as it is"—

"I am going!" Esther broke in, white to the lips.

They had come to the river road. Glancing along it, they saw squads of bluecoated horsemen dotting its whole stretch. The scout was caught fairly in a trap from which there was but one way out—the river.

"In there!" Esther cried, waving toward the stream. Sandford caught her reins. "With you—not otherwise!" he said. Instantly he urged the animals forward. The nearest bluecoats, fifty yards off, sent a hail of lead after them. Before they could reload the horses were in deep water, breasting it gallantly. Sandford slipped from his horse, dragged Esther out of the saddle and held her in the hollow of his arm, the while with his other hand he guided the horses quartering downstream. Hanging thus, shielded from the bullets, he had a fair hope of escape. But less than midstream a ball ripped through poor Marquise's backbone and sent her screaming to the bottom.

"Hold to the saddle! You must, else I shall go straight back and give myself up," Sandford said imperatively. Soldiers were plunging in after them—stronger swimmers it might be, with fresher horses. He took the checkrein in his teeth and swam beside Princess, giving her her head, but keeping her to the course. Esther clung obediently just where he had set her hands.

And then he knew. Here was the one woman in all the world for him, although he had never heard her name. Across the blinding consciousness he heard a shout, hoarse, happy, many keyed "Sur-r-render, Johnny Reb! Game's up! Thar blows the gunboat!"

He faced about and drew Esther to his breast, whispering, "Darling, forgive!" Princess snatched her freed head high, turned half about and struck bottom. They had been swimming for yards along the margin of a submerged ledge. In a twinkling Sandford had crowded Esther into the saddle and was wading waist deep beside Princess. Half a mile downstream he heard the puffing gunboat.

The ledge ran down to the bluff's end. A shell struck the woods before the swimmers gained them. Oh, joy! Another shot echoed the shell, a shout from out the wooded south bank. And over it there rose the familiar yell, not faint and quavering, but in lusty strength from 500 throats. Mr. Forrest had a knack of being on the spot when wanted. Solid shot soon persuaded the gunboat that it might be better occupied elsewhere.

It panted off between banks of cheering blue and yelling gray. If the graycoats yelled in greeting to their comrade, what shall one say of what they did when the whole story was told? But when, three hours later, in face of the whole brigade, there was a wedding, at which Mr. Forrest himself gave away the bride, nobody made a sound. Every head was bared, and more than half of those looking on saw bride and bridegroom through dim eyes. The bride went straight home, under flag of truce, by way of Bellsboro, where the Federal commander, a lover of true romances, turned out the guard in her honor and gave her a silver cup, her only wedding present.

Mrs. John Sandford has silver a-plenty, but none so treasured as that plain, thin bit. A proud and happy grandmother, she loves to tell the story of it to some little lads whose greatest ambition is to grow up soldiers like grandpapa and grandmamma.

Warning to Natural Gas Customesr.

Owing to the severe cold weather this winter and the ground being frozen deeper than usual and as the service lines from the street to the houses are not more than twelve or eighteen hicnes in depth, we find in several cases where the frost is deeper than the service lines there is more or less danger of the lines pulling part and causing leaks.

The Gas Company is doing everything possible to prevent any leaks of this kind and will take this opportunity to notify all customers of Natural Gas, to use every precaution against accidents and should they detect the odor of gas at any time, to immediately shut off the gas at the meter and notify the Gas Company at once. We particularly caution you not to look for a leak with a light.

Opportunity for Investment.

All persons who are interested in improving their stock of horses or making an investment by buying stock in a stallion, will surely profit by coming to Oakland and seeing the best three year old imported Percheron colt that has ever been shown in this community. His color is very dark gray; weight, 1935 pounds. For bone and muscle he is unsurpassed.

In taking a share in this horse you are not helping to pay a bonus; share for someone else or $50 for someone helping to sell him. Eight shares at $200 each on three equal annual payments, will buy this magnificent colt. The horse is guaranteed to be a sure foal getter and in case of death we furnish another stallion for breeding free for three years.

The horse is at the stable of L. J Brown for sale of shares or for service.

MORERI II,

20279.

Having lost my Percheron Stallion Herve, I have purchased MORERI II 20279, a Registered Percheron Stallion, bred by R. D. McGonigle & Sons, of Ashley, Ohio.

Moreri II was foaled May 9, 1908. He is a brilliant black with star, weight 1850 pounds.

Moreri is of kind and gentle disposition, good style, good action, well ribbed, heavy boned and the very best of feet and legs. He is pronounced by experienced horsemen to be one of the best, if not the best Stallion that was ever brought to this locality, and when mare owners once see him he will not have to be peddled to get patronage. Positively there is no better bred horse in the State.

Will Stand at my Barn on the Farm for the Entire Season 1912.

TERMS: To insure a colt on foot $12.00. A lien will be retained on both mare and colt until insurance fee is paid. The best of care will be taken by experienced horsemen, but will not be responsible for accidents.

COMMITTEE.

FRANK RATHBUN ELECTED COUNTY SUPERINTENDENT

Mr. Browning will Retire from the Position August 1st.

The new school board for Garrett county met for its first session last Saturday morning. The members are Mr. C. E. Ellithrop, of Bittinger; Mr. P. H. Yost, of near Grantsville; and Joseph T. Glotfelty, of near Oakland.

Mr. Glotfelty was placed in nomination for the presidency of the board and his election immediately followed. He is the new member of the board, receiving his appointment from Governor Goldsborough, having qualified on Saturday morning before the Clerk of the Circuit Court, Mr. E. Z. Tower, from whom he received his commission.

The next official to be elected to complete the organization was one to serve as secretary and treasurer of the board, as well as to serve as superintendent of the schools of the county. Mr. Franklin E. Rathbun, of Mountain Lake Park, was placed in nomination and unanimously elected. President Glotfelty suggested that the salary of that official be $1,600 per annum, with a clerk-hire allowance of $200 per year. This was put into the form of a motion by Mr. Ellithorp, the minority member, seconed by Mr. Yost and carried. This $1,800 is the same amount spent for administrative services as has prevailed for several years in the county. Mr. Rathbun enters upon his duties at the expiration of the term of Supt. E. A. Browning, which according to the law is August 1st.

The date for the examination of those teachers whose certificates expire this year as well as for those who hold no certificates at all, was set for Friday and Saturday, July 18th and 19th. It was ordered to be held at three places in the county: Oakland, Grantsville and Accident, the same examination for all three places, all subjects thereof being held simultaneously. This date was selected because it is the close of the final normal school of the county. It will be conducted by Supt. Browning, Supt.-elect Rathbun and an assistant.

The annual institute date to be suggested to the State Board of Education was ordered for the week immediately preceding the opening of all the schools of the county—September 9th to the 13th inclusive. This is to be conducted by the superintendent-elect. The date, therefore, for the opening of school next fall is set for Monday, September 16th.

The trustees of the various schools of the county had been appointed the day immediately preceding this meeting by the old board. This list was ordered printed at the office of The Mountain Democrat and will soon be ready for distribution.
